St. Margaret's (2), ha., pa. of and 6½ S.E. from Ivinghoe (q.v.), E. Bucks., on the borders of Herts. Here was anciently a convent of Benedictine nuns (founded 1160).

St. Margaret's (3), pa., South Ballaghkeen and Shelmaliere bars., S. co. Wex., Ir., 5½ N.E. of Wexford; ac. 2,424. It contains five islands in Wexford Harbour, the land extending to Raven Point, the north boundary of the harbour. There is a Catholic church.

St. Margaret's (4), pa., Forth bar., S.E. co. Wex., Ir., 10 S.E. of Wexford; ac. 467. It contains the Tuskar Rocks, with the lighthouse.

St. Margaret's (5), pa., Coolock bar., E. co. Dub., Ir., about 6 N. of Dublin; ac. 2,417.

St. Margaret's Bay, inlet, E. Kent, bounded by the cliffs of the South Foreland, which here rise to about 400 ft., with two lighthouses. The submarine telegraph and London and Paris telephone enter the sea at St. M.'s Bay, and a road leads up to St. Margaret at Cliffe.

St. Margaret's Hope (1), small vil. and harbour, pa. of South Ronaldshay (q.v.), Ork., Sc., about 12 S. of Kirkwall. The population is chiefly engaged in the fisheries.

St. Margaret's Hope (2). [QUEENSFERRY, NORTH.]

St. Mark's (1), vil., pa. of Malew (q.v.), S.W. I. of M., 4 N.N.E. of Castletown. St. Mark's church is a chapel-of-ease to the church of St. Lupus. Near it is the site of the "Black Fort" mentioned in "Peveril of the Peak;" also Goddard-Crovan's Stone, said to have been hurled from the summit of Barrule by a giant who was enraged with his wife.

St. Mark's (2), pa., E. co. Dub., Ir., 1 E.N.E. of St. Patrick's Cathedral; ac. 350. The greater part of the pa. is in Dublin mun. bor. The Protestant church of St. Mark is a spacious edifice, erected in 1729.

St. Martha Chilworth, or St. Martha on the Hill, pa., S.W. Surrey, 2 S.E. of Guildford; ac. 1,070; soil light, with gravel beds in the valley. At the time of the Domesday survey this place was the property of the Bishop of Bayeux, and was one of the many appendages of Bramley which the bishop annexed thereto to ease himself of taxes, that manor being exempted in the valuation. The church—or chapel of St. Martha, as it is called—occupies the summit of one of the highest eminences in the co., being 720 ft. above the sea-level, and is E. Eng.; it is supposed to have been erected on a spot once the scene of some early Christian martyrdom, and was used as a chantry by pilgrims journeying to Canterbury in the reign of Edward IV. The Canterbury road, near here, is still called the "Pilgrims' Way," and in the immediate neighbourhood are "Chantry

St. Martin (1), or St. Martin by Looe, pa. and tp., S.E. Cornw., 8 s. of Liskeard; ac. of pa. 3,139, of tp. 70; soil generally free. The church of St. Martin (restored 1882) is E. Eng.; there is a fine Norm. arch within the north porch, and the font is of the same period. On the south side of the chancel is a marble monument to Walter Langdon of Keveral (d. 1676), surrounded by a finely-carved screen; there are also mural tablets to the family of Nicolas. The interest of £62 15s. is expended for the benefit of such poor as do not receive parochial relief.

St. Martin (2), pa. and small vil., N.W. Salop, 5 N.E. of Oswestry; ac. 3,361; soil chiefly loam, overlying marl. St. Martin's Church is of various periods; there is a memorial to Sir John Trevor, Speaker of the House of Commons (d. 1717). There are Primitive Methodist and Wesleyan Association Methodist chapels. Near the church are six almshouses, founded in 1810; and there are several small charities. Coal-mining is carried on.

St. Martin (3), or St. Martin near Richmond, pa., N.R. Yorks., adjoining Richmond; ac. 270. About 1100 Wymer, chief steward of Alan, Earl of Richmond, gave the chapel of St. Martin, with some land near it, to the abbey of St. Mary at York, whereupon a cell of nine or ten Benedictine monks from that monastery was founded here.

St. Martin (4), pa., S.E. Guernsey, Channel Islands, 1½ S.S.W. of St. Peter Port; ac. 1,799. The pa. occupies the south-east corner of the island. The church of St. Martin is E. Eng., with a rich Dec. south porch. The coast here is extremely picturesque, the principal features being Icart Point, Jerbourg Point, and St. Martin's Point, Saint's Bay, Fermain Bay, and Moulin Huet. Saumarez Manor is a seat; the mansion is in the style of a French château.

St. Martin (5), pa., E. Jersey, 3½ N.E. of St. Helier; ac. 2,455. The pa. contains some fine coast scenery—St. Catherine's Bay, Verclût Point, and the Coupe (q.v.) being some of the principal features. The church of St. Martin (restored) is an edifice of plain character, erected in 1116. A picturesque valley descends from the church to St. Catherine's Bay. Near the headland called the Couperon (q.v.) are some ancient stone remains. Rozel Manor House, which has been rebuilt, is a picturesque edifice in Gothic style.

St. Martin by Looe. [ST. MARTIN (1).]

St. Martin in Meneage, pa., S. Cornw., 7 S.E. of Helston; ac. of pa. 3,139, of tp. 3,069; soil light and fertile, overlying marl and gravel. In this pa. was formerly a convent, called "Helnowith," dedicated to St. Martin of Tours, and from this the pa. took its name. The church of St. Martin (rebuilt, with the exception of the tower, 1830) is in the Perp. style. There is a Methodist chapel and a Bible Christian chapel. On an estate called "Gear," or "Caer," is a strong circumvallation, enclosing three fields; it is perfectly circular, and has an area of about 14 ac. The greater part of the fosse is very deep. Another camp, called "Caer-Vallack," similar in shape, but only 1 ac. in extent, stands about a quarter of a mile off, towards the church; here also the fosse is remarkably deep.

St. Martin in the Fields, pa. in Westminster bor., Central London, E. Middx., 1¼ W. by S. of St. Paul's; ac. 286. The church of St. Martin (1726), an imposing building in Classical style, occupies the site of an ancient Gothic edifice; the west front, with its portico of lofty Corinthian columns, is very striking, and the elegant steeple rises to a height of 185 ft. from the ground. Here are interred the famous goldsmith George Heriot (d. 1624), the philosopher Robert Boyle (d. 1691), the painter Laguerre (d. 1721), John Hunter (d. 1793), and James Smith (d. 1839), joint author of "Rejected Addresses."

St. Martin near Richmond. [ST. MARTIN (3).]

St. Martin's (1), the fourth largest of the Scilly Islands (q.v.), containing about 500 ac. It lies a little to the north-east of Tresco, and on its south and west coasts rare shells are often found. The church of St. Martin, served from St. Mary's, is a small granite building. It was struck by lightning in 1867, and rebuilt in the following year. There is a small but beautiful stained window, representing St. Martin dividing his cloak with a beggar. The Bible Christians have a chapel.

St. Martin's (2), pa. and vil. on the Tay, E. Perths., Sc., 5½ N.E. of Perth; ac. 6,565; soil black moorland. The church is a modern building. Dunsinane and St. Martin's Abbey are seats.

St. Martin's (3), pa. on the Nore, Gowran bar., Mid co. Kilk., Ir., 2 S.E. of Kilkenny; ac. 782.

St. Martin's Head, promontory on St. Martin's, Scilly Islands. It lies at the north-east extremity of the island, and on it is erected the "day mark," a 17th-cent. tower 40 ft. in height.

St. Martin's Point, headland, pa. of St. Martin (q.v.), Guernsey, Channel Islands, 2¾ S. by E. of St. Peter Port, forming the south-east extremity of the island.

St. Mary (1), formerly a tp., pa. of Long Sutton (q.v.), S. Lincs., about 7 N.E. of Wisbech.

St. Mary (2), pa. in N.W. Jersey, Channel Islands, 4½ N.W. of St. Helier; ac. 1,602. The scenery here on the north coast of the island is very fine. The church of St. Mary (restored) is a Gothic edifice, erected in 1320.

St. Mary (3), q.s. pa., pa. and isl. of South Ronaldshay (q.v.), S.E. Ork., Sc. The church is situated in the south-west of the island.

earliest piece of church architecture now existing in York. The lower portion, which exhibits herring-bone masonry, is assumed to be Saxon; but on careful examination there appears reason to think it was rebuilt of old materials subsequent to the 12th cent. The work incorporates bricks or tiles of Roman form, and sculptured stones of Norm. date are built in on the inside, while the exterior contains bricks of a Flemish shape not used before the 13th cent.; the corbels in the tower appear to be of the 15th cent. The belfry windows are rude openings of two arches; the north arcade is Norm., but the south arcade has Dec. arches carried on a Norm. pillar. The church retains some richly-incised monumental slabs and fragments of ancient stained glass; there were formerly some brasses, but only the matrices now remain.

St. Mary Bishophill Senior, pa. (extending into the W.R.) and tp., in the bor. of York; ac. of pa. 945, of tp. 212. The church of St. Mary is E. Eng. and Dec.; the south doorway is good Trans. Norm. and the walls chiefly E. Eng. In the south wall is an ancient gravestone, carved with reticulated ornament in the Runic style. The ancient altar-slab has been converted into a gravestone and bears the date 1699, but the consecration crosses remain. The windows retain some fragments of ancient glass, and there are numerous monuments.

St. Mary Bourne, pa. and vil. on the Bourne, N.W. Hants, 5 N.E. of Andover; ac. 7,742; soil chiefly loam, overlying chalk. The church of St. Peter (restored 1855) is Norm.; it contains a 12th-cent. effigy of a knight and a curious font. There are Wesleyan, Baptist, and Primitive Methodist chapels. The charities amount to £41 yearly. Many flint implements have been found here.

St. Mary Castle Gate, pa. within the bor. of York; ac. 34. The church of St. Mary (restored 1870) is Trans. Norm., E. Eng., and later periods. At the north-west angle of the tower is an octagonal staircase, and in the north-west wall of the church are several arches, probably indicating places of sepulture. The church contains a wood carving of the Assumption of the Virgin. Some of the seats retain misereres and portions of oak carving, probably once belonging to the rood-screen; there are also pews of Elizabethan date. The windows retain fragments of ancient glass, including heads of Our Lord and the Blessed Virgin, and several monograms. The font dates from the reign of Charles II., and has a cover of wood and iron work

St. Mary Church (1), pa. and to., S. Dev., 1½ N. of Torquay; ac. 2,656. The church of St. Mary is believed to have been a Saxon foundation, but the present church was (with the exception of the tower) rebuilt 1861, in Dec. style; the organ was presented by Isambard Brunel, the engineer; the font is very early Norm. (possibly Saxon) work. The Free church was built in 1853, and the Roman Catholic church was erected in 1869–70; attached to it is a Dominican convent. The town hall (built in 1883) contains a free library and an art school; here is a sanitary hospital, a hospital for children, and an industrial and orphan home. The scenery in the neighbourhood is very fine. Marble rock is extensively quarried.

St. Mary Church (2), pa., E. Glamorgs., 2½ S.S.E. of Cowbridge; ac. 786; soil generally fertile, overlying limestone. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. In the pa. are the remains of an ancient castle, to which is attached an old chapel.

St. Mary Cray. [CRAY, ST. MARY.]

St. Mary de Castro, or Catel, pa., W. Guernsey, Channel Islands, 1½ W. by N. of St. Peter Port; ac. 2,659. The church of Notre Dame de Deliverance is an edifice of Gothic character, erected in 1203, which has undergone frequent alterations and was restored about 1880. An interesting wall-painting has been discovered in the building, the subjects represented being, it is supposed, the Last Supper, the Last Judgment, and a hawking scene. The church is said to occupy the site of an ancient fortress called the "Castel du Grand Sarrazin," and part of this building, it is said, is incorporated in the sacred edifice.

St. Mary Extra, pa., S. Hants, adjoining the co. bor. of Southampton; ac. 1,480.

St. Mary Hill, pa. on the Ewenny, S. Glamorgs., 3 E. of Bridgend; ac. 1,449; soil dry and mostly fertile. The church of St. Mary is Norm. The annual horse fair, which takes place in August, is frequented by dealers from all parts of the country.

St. Mary, Hoo. [HOO ST. MARY.]

St. Marylebone, pa. in N.W. London, E. Middx., 2 W.N.W. of St. Paul's; ac. 1,506. The pa. is identical in area with the parl. bor. of Marylebone (q.v.). The ancient church depicted in Hogarth's "Rake's Progress" was pulled down in 1741. The small plain structure erected in its place, wherein the two Wesleys are buried, is a chapel-of-ease to the new church of St. Mary (1817), an imposing edifice in Classical style.

St. Mary-le-Strand, pa. in Central London, E. Middx., ¼ W. of St. Paul's; ac. 14. The church of St. Mary the Virgin (1714–17) stands in the middle of the Strand, on the site of a maypole pulled down during the Protectorate. It is a handsome edifice of the Ionic and Corinthian orders.

St. Mary-le-Wigford with Holmes Common, pa. within the co. bor. of Lincoln (q.v.), W. Lincs.; ac. 612. The church of St. Mary is Norm. and later, but retains part of a Saxon tower. There are two 15th-cent. brasses.

St. Mary's (1), the largest of the Scilly Islands (q.v.), S. Cornw., being 9 miles in circumference. Hugh Town (q.v.) is the capital. Star Castle, 110 ft. above the level of the sea, is a structure of granite, erected in the reign of Elizabeth, and probably derived its name from the shape of the fortifications, which project in eight salient angles; the letters E. R. and the date 1593 are placed immediately over the front entrance. Charles II., when Prince of Wales, took refuge here in 1646; and in 1637 Dr. Bastwick, for writing scurrilous works reflecting on the bishops, was transported here by order of the Star Chamber. Adjoining the castle is The Garrison (now dismantled) and a park. From the higher part of this spot may be seen four lighthouses—the Wolf, about S.E.; Round Island, N.; and St. Agnes and the Bishop towards the west. The Seven Stones lightship can also be seen about 12 N.E. The lighthouse on the Bishop Rock is the principal guide to vessels entering the English and Bristol Channels. There is a delightful promenade round The Garrison of about a mile in circumference, and the views from all points are exceedingly pleasing. The most interesting scenery in this island is found among the rocks at Penninis, about ½ mile from the town; the Pulpit Rock and the Tooth Rock are especially remarkable. There is a fine pier (built in 1835–38, and extended in 1889), and a good harbour, called The Pool, for small vessels; and further out, between the islands, a good roadstead for large vessels. On the eastern shore of The Pool is a tower, 42 ft. high and 182 ft. above the sea-level; it is used by the coastguard as a watch-tower, and is known as "The Telegraph."

St. Mary's (2), pa. in Kilkenny city, N. co. Kilk., Ir.; ac. 66. The church of St. Mary (formerly a handsome cruciform edifice) in its present condition dates mainly from the early part of the 19th cent. It contains fine monuments to Richard Rothe (1637) and John Rothe (1612), and behind the building is one to Sir Richard Shee of the same period.

St. Mary's (3), pa. in north of Dublin city, about 1 N. by E. of St. Patrick's; ac. 154. The church of St. Mary (1697) is in Classical style, with a front of the Ionic order. There is a handsome Roman Catholic church, called "the Church of the Conception."

St. Mary's (4), pa. on the Barrow, Bantry bar., S.W. co. Wex., Ir.; ac. 4,922. It contains part of the town of New Ross (q.v.). There are churches and places of worship for Wesleyan Methodists and Christian Brethren, and five public schools.

St. Mary's (5), pa. in north of the city of Limerick (q.v.), N.E. co. Lim., Ir.; ac. 50. St. Mary's Cathedral is also the pa. church.

St. Mary's Isle, seat, pa. of and about 1½ s. from Kirkcudbright (q.v.), S. Kirkcuds., Sc. It stands on a peninsula (once an island), and occupies the site of an old priory. There is a fine heronry, with many hundred birds.

St. Mary's Loch, lake, pa. of Yarrow (q.v.), N.W. Selks., Sc., about 16 S.W. of Selkirk. It is 3 miles long by about ½ mile broad, lies 814 ft. above the sea-level, and has a depth of 80 to 90 ft. It is the "lone St. Mary's silent lake" mentioned in Scott's "Marmion"; Wordsworth and Hogg have also sung its beauties.

St. Mary's Rock. [CONISTER.]

St. Mary's Shandon, pa. in north of city of Cork, E. co. Cork, Ir.; ac. 2,369. The church of St. Mary dates from 1696.

St. Mary Tavy, pa. and vil. on the Tavy, S. Devon, 3½ N. of Tavistock, on the road to Okehampton; ac. 2,029; soil loam, overlying rock and gravel. The church of St. Mary (restored 1879) is Perp. At the eastern end of the south aisle there appears to have been a chantry chapel, which retains a piscina; and in the jamb of the adjoining window is an image bracket. Another, with canopy, remains on one of the chancel piers; and on the south side of the chancel is also a piscina. On the north side is an external turret for the staircase, once leading to the rood-loft. The open timber roof is relieved with foliaged bosses; and in the porch remain the ancient stocks. In the churchyard is a fine Perp. cross, on a base of four steps. Here is a Wesleyan chapel.

St. Mary the Virgin, coast pa., S. Kent, 3 S. of New Romney; ac. 1,829; soil dark mould, overlying sand. The church of St. Mary the Virgin is Norm. and E. Eng., and contains a large gravestone with a brass effigy and an inscription to Matilda Gamys, mother of William Gregorie (d. 1499); on another

St. Matthew, Cobo, eccl. pa., pa. of St. Mary de Castro (q.v.), W. Guernsey, Channel Islands, 2½ W.N.W. of St. Peter Port. The church of St. Matthew, a small modern building in Norm. style, is picturesquely situated on a wooded hill.

St. Maughans, pa. and vil. on the Monnow, N.E. Mon., 5 N.W. of Monmouth; ac. 1,328; soil clayey, subsoil marly clay. The church of St. Maughan (restored 1866) is E. Eng. Hilston Park, a mansion in the Italian style, is a seat.

St. Maul's, pa., Gowran bar., Mid co. Kilk., Ir.; ac. 312. It is within the city of Kilkenny (q.v.).

St. Mawes, seaport to., pa. of St. Just in Roseland (q.v.), S.E. Cornw., 2 E. of Falmouth by water. The name is derived from St. Mawe (or Machutus), a Welsh youth who in the 6th cent. became a monk and established himself here, and carved for himself a chair of stone. He afterwards fled to France, and from him the town of St. Malo is named. St. Mawes was made a bor. in 1562, and returned two members till 1832. The ancient chapel of St. Mawes was in existence early in the 15th cent., but the present building (in E. Eng. style) dates only from 1884. The Congregationalists, Wesleyans, and Bible Christians have chapels. There is an annual charity of £2 for poor widows and orphans. The harbour varies in breadth from 800 to 1,000 yds., extending in an easterly direction for about 1,200 yds.; at the lowest spring tides the water is from 1½ to 2½ fathoms deep. The pier was rebuilt in 1873, and there is a sea-wall with a parapet along the centre front of the town. The well of St. Mawe is still in use, and incorporated with some stonework at the foot of a house near it is one side of his reputed chair. The castle, originally built by Henry VIII. in 1542, stands on the solid rock, 117 ft. above high-water mark. It was intended to protect the harbours of Falmouth and St. Mawes. In 1646 it was bombarded by Sir Thomas Fairfax, and surrendered after a stout defence—thirteen cannon, two brass guns, and a large quantity of stores being taken.

St. Mellion, pa. and vil., E. Cornw., 6 N.W. of Saltash; ac. 2,985; soil free and light clay, overlying slate and stone. The church of St. Melanus (restored 1862) is Dec. and Perp., retaining a piscina in the chancel and another in the transept; the latter also contains an elaborate monument to William Coryton (d. 1651) and Elizabeth his wife (d. 1656). Against the wall of the north aisle is an original slab with brasses to Peter Coryton (d. 1551) and Jane his wife (d. 1558), with effigies of both; there is also a monument to Sir William Coryton (d. 1711) and Susannah his wife (d. 1695), and a number of modern memorials to the same family. There is a Wesleyan chapel. Crocadon, anciently a seat, is now occupied by farm labourers.

St. Mellons, pa. and vil., S.W. Mon., 4½ N.E. of Cardiff; ac. 2,574; soil loam, overlying clay. The church of St. Melans (repaired 1868) is chiefly Dec.; the old wagon roof, several old benches, and the font are in good preservation. There are Congregational, Baptist, and Calvinistic Methodist chapels. The charities are small. Among the seats are Llan-Rumney Hall, Ty-to-Maen, and Vaindre Hall.

St. Merryn, coast pa. and vil., N. Cornw., 8 E. of Wadebridge; ac. 3,944; soil mostly clayey, subsoil clayey. The church of St. Merryn is Gothic, and contains a font removed from the ruined church of St. Constantine in this pa. There are Wesleyan and Bible Christian chapels. An annual fair for cattle and sheep is held in May. The charities amount to £12 yearly. A lighthouse stands on Trevose Head, in this pa.; and the remains of the old tower and church of St. Constantine still exist. Harlyn House is a seat.

St. Mewan, pa. and vil., Mid Cornw., about 1 W. of St. Austell; ac. 2,265; soil callous, overlying granite. The church of St. Mewan (restored 1854, enlarged 1890) is supposed to date from the 13th cent. Here is a Free Methodist chapel. St. Mewan Beacon is a large tor of schorl and crystalline quartz.

St. Michael, pa., S. Herts., partly within the city of St. Albans (q.v.); ac. 6,540.

St. Michael Carhayes, pa. near the shore of Veryan Bay, Mid Cornw., 8 S.E. of Grampound Road; ac. 862; soil loam, overlying slate. The church of St. Michael (restored 1883) is a building of stone with granite facings; at the end of the aisle is a statue (life size) of a British naval officer, wielding an actual sword, and said to represent one of the Bettesford family; in the arcade a number of helmets are suspended, and here hangs also the sword said to have been worn by Sir Hugh Trevanion at Bosworth Field (1485); in the transept is a sepulchral arch, and here also remain the rood-loft stairs; the south porch has a stoup and aumbry, and on the north side is a pre-Norm. doorway in a good state of preservation. Caerhayes Castle, a seat, was erected shortly after the demolition of the ancient mansion in 1808; the wall of the entrance hall bears the arms of Henry VIII. There is a splendid collection of minerals here, formerly at Scorrier House.

St. Michael Church (in Domesday "Michaeliscerce"), small pa., Mid Somerset, 5 S. of Bridgwater; ac. 43; soil red loam, overlying clay and sandstone rock. The church of St. Michael is Perp., and contains several monuments to the Slade family.

St. Michael-le-Belfry, pa. and tp. in the city of York, N.R. Yorks.; ac. of pa. 411, of tp. 7. The church of St. Michael (restored 1884 and 1892) is in Late Perp. style, and is said to have been founded 1066 and rebuilt 1535–45; the windows contain good stained glass of the 14th, 15th, and 16th cents.

St. Michael on Wyre, pa. and vil., N. Lancs., about 4 S.W. of Garstang; ac. 18,888; soil mostly light, overlying clay. The church of St. Michael was rebuilt during the reign of Henry VIII., on the site of an earlier structure. On the north side, and opening to the nave by two arches, is a small chapel or oratory, dedicated to St. Catherine, formerly the burial-place of the Butler family, of Rawcliffe Hall; at the entrance there is an elaborately-carved oak screen with armorial bearings above it, and in one corner is a lofty canopied seat with the armorial bearings of the Ffrance and Roe families. The baptistery was restored in 1857 by the surviving children of John and Susannah Swainson, of Preston, in memory of their parents, and contains five marble tablets to members of the Swainson family. There are several modern brasses in the chancel, which also retains an ancient piscina; at the north-west angle of the tower is a shield of arms of the Butlers, with the date 1611 and the initials H. B. In the churchyard is a sun-dial, erected 1796. The charities amount to about £45 yearly.

St. Michael Penkivel, pa. and vil. situated between two tributaries of the Fal, S. Cornw., 3½ S.E. of Truro; ac. 1,189. The original church of St. Michael was consecrated by Walter Bronescombe, Bishop of Exeter, in 1261. The present edifice, in Dec. style, was rebuilt (1862-66) on the site of the former church, the materials of the old building being utilised. The church contains two early coffin-shaped slabs of Purbeck marble with floriated crosses, a brass with effigy in hauberk and plate armour to John Trenowyth (d. 1497) and on the north side of the chancel is another, with effigy in academical dress, to a former rector (d. 1515). There are also many monuments to the Boscawens, Viscounts Falmouth. During the rebuilding many fragments of wrought stone were discovered; these are now in the tower chantry, where are also an ancient stone altar and a piscina. The original altar-slab covers a grave in the south transept. By the side of the road to Malpas Ferry is an ancient Latin cross, on a square base. Tregothnan, overlooking the Fal and Falmouth Harbour, is a seat in Tudor style. A wide terrace with a parapet surrounds the building; the gardens, shrubberies, lawns, and pleasure grounds are well laid out, and the large deer-park contains a variety of timber and coppice wood, through which a pleasant drive has been made to the banks of the river. The Right Hon. E. Boscawen, Admiral of the Blue, was born here in 1711.

St. Michael's Cwmdû, or Llanfihangel Cwmdû, pa., S.E. Brecons., 4 N.N.W. of Crickhowel; ac. 9,930; soil mostly dry, overlying Old Red Sandstone. The pa. takes its name (= "Black Vale") from a beautiful vale skirted by the Black Mountains and watered by a tributary of the Usk, which bounds the pa. on the south. The church of St. Michael (partly rebuilt 1830) is a Gothic edifice; it contains a good carved rood-screen, and two ancient stones have been built into the walls, one of which bears a cross fleury and two escutcheons, and beside the other is a brass plate, on which is recorded the original Latin inscription. At Gaer, where a Roman station was situated, coins and other relics have been found; and on Pentir Hill is an encampment, partly formed by the Britons and partly by the Romans.

St. Michael's Isle, islet on south side of entrance to Derby Haven, off the south-east coast of I. of M., 6½ S.W. of Douglas. A narrow causeway joins it to the main island. There are some remains of a small chapel, which is said to have been erected in the 11th cent. The adjacent graveyard is occasionally used as a burial-place for Roman Catholics. The large fortress, round in form, at the north end of the isle, was erected by the seventh Earl of Derby (d. 1651). Beside it stands a turret, which serves as a lighthouse during the fishing season.

St. Michael's Mount, pa., S.W. Cornw., 3 E. of Penzance. It is connected with Marazion by a natural causeway of rocks and pebbles, formed by the tidal currents meeting in opposite directions, and passable for about four hours during low water. The northern part of the island is on the slate; the junction of the granite and slate (to be seen at low water) is said to be geologically the most interesting spot in Cornwall. The rock is in the form of a pyramid, and extremely steep and craggy; its circumference at the base is about 1 mile, and it diminishes gradually upwards to the height of 250 ft. above the level of the sea. On the summit is the castle, and a beautiful chapel of the 15th cent. The former contains much ancient armour and antique furniture from 300 to 500 years old. The whole pile of buildings was considerably altered in 1760, and the chapel renovated in 1804; near the chapel are several crosses elaborately sculptured. The priory (founded in 1135 as a cell to the abbey of Mont St. Michel, in Normandy, for the Benedictines) was converted into a house of Gilbertine canons. The chapel of St. Michael (originally built in 1044 by Edward the Confessor) consists of chancel and nave, divided by a screen bearing the shields of St. Aubyn, and a central battlemented tower, in one of the angles of which is a small turret projecting from and rising above the battlements, and commonly called "St. Michael's Chair," but probably the remains of a stone lantern of ancient date. A fragment of the inscribed tombstone of one of the priors has been found, and another stone, conjectured to have covered the remains of Sir John Arundell, of Trerice, slain in a skirmish with the Lancastrians on the neighbouring sands, and buried in this church in 1471; beneath the east end is a stone vault, approached by a flight of ten steps in the south wall, in which were found the remains of a man of great size, afterwards re-interred in the body of the church. On this island, on the side towards Marazion, are about 20 houses and a harbour for shipping, capable of receiving vessels of 500 tons. A pier was built as early as 1425, which in 1727 was enlarged and rebuilt; in 1823 the entrance to the harbour was widened to admit vessels of 500 tons. At the east pier-head is fixed a brass plate, commemorating the visit of Queen Victoria and the Prince Consort in 1846. The views from the summit of the Mount will fully repay the arduous ascent. The surface generally is diversified with small clusters of trees. A spring on one side supplies the inhabitants with water, and there is another above the second gate, and a well of 37 ft. in depth, yielding a good supply. The ground at the base of the Mount has been used as a cemetery, and a fragment of a tomb was lately discovered with the date 1618. On the sands near Marazion is Chapel Rock, where a chapel, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is said to have once stood, and where pilgrims offered their orisons before ascending to the shrine of St. Michael.

St. Michael's Pillar. [SKELLIGS, THE.]

St. Michan's, pa. on north bank of the Liffey, in Dublin city, ½ N. of St. Patrick's; ac. 126. The church of St. Michan is said to have been originally built in 1095 by a saintly Ostman of that name; part of the present structure dates from 1676, but other portions are considerably later. The vaults are celebrated for their remarkable property of preserving dead bodies, owing to the dry state of the air. The celebrated Irish patriot, Charles Lucas (d. 1771), and Oliver Bond (d. 1798), who took part in the rising of 1798, are buried in the churchyard. The Roman Catholic church of St. Michan is a spacious edifice in Gothic style.

St. Minver, pa. and vil., W. Cornw., 3 N.E. of Padstow; ac. 7,620, 580 tidal water, and 1,000 foreshore; soil sandy, overlying rock. The church of St. Minefreda (restored 1872) is Trans. Norm. and E. Eng. In the chancel is a Dec. piscina, and modern screens separate it from the south aisle; the rood-loft staircase exists, but is now imperfect; in the south aisle is a priest's doorway; the font, octagonal in form, is Perp. There is an elaborate monument with kneeling effigy in marble to John Roe, of Trewornan (d. 1657), and others to Thomas Darell (d. 1697) and Thomas Hamet (d. 1614). In the north chapel are portions of an altar-tomb of slate; on the upper slab is an inscription to Thomas Stone (d. 1604) and Elizabeth, his wife (d. 1636); there is also a brass with effigy to Roger Opy (d. 1517) and Elizabeth (Carminow), his wife. A small cross about 3 ft. high, formerly on the farm of Treglines, was removed and set up in the churchyard in 1879. There are two ancient chapels in this pa., both near the estuary of the Camel and opposite Padstow—St. Enodock and St. Michael; the former, surrounded with drifts of sand, which have been known to rise as high as the roof, is E. Eng. and Perp. The drifting sands are now becoming permanently fixed by the rapid growth of Arundo arenaria, or sand rush. St. Michael's Chapel is Perp., and has two Dec. piscinæ and a font of Trans. Norm. date. There are Wesleyan, Bible Christian, and Free Methodist chapels. The charities amount to £16 9s. 2d. yearly; of this sum, about £10 is distributed to poor persons not in receipt of parochial relief, £5 in coals, £1 to poor widows and orphans, and 10s. to the vicar for a sermon. Jesus' Well is a rectangular structure with a truncated gable roof and an arched entrance; at the back of the well is a niche, in which a crucifix may have been placed. The fine spring has now disappeared; it was surrounded by a burial-ground, the remains found in which have been removed to the churchyard. Trevelver, a place mentioned as early as 1302, is now a farm and mill; portions of the old house, with some mullioned windows, still exist, and in one of the rooms, which is panelled, is a painting of the original mansion, and round the cornice of the apartment a kind of panoramic representation of the neighbourhood.

St. Neot, pa. and vil. on the Fowey stream, S.E. Cornw., 6 N.W. of Liskeard; ac. 13,997; soil various, overlying slate and granite. The church of St. Neot, or St. Guerir (restored 1885 and 1889), is Perp. The south porch is groined, and has a parvise above; the church possesses an interesting series of stained windows, seventeen in number, assigned by Whitaker to the 12th cent., but by others to c. 1480; these were restored in 1830. In the church is a monument, with a history of St. Neot in thirty-two rhyming couplets, and memorials to William Bere (d. 1610); Rev. S. Thomas, thirty-seven years vicar (d. 1702), and Millicent his wife (d. 1705); Thomas Pomery, gent (d. 1759); and to the family of Dangar (1820–68). There are three ancient crosses in the vicarage grounds; and in the pa., near the Launceston road, is the famous "Four-Hole Cross," a shaft about 8 ft. in height, ornamented with scrolls and interlaced work, with a mutilated head, two holes only now remaining. There are Wesleyan and Bible Christian chapels. The charities amount to about £108 yearly. An annual fair for cattle is held in April and November. St. Neot's Well is about ¼ W. of the church. Dozmare Pool (q.v.) is in the pa. Lewarne House is a seat.

St. Neots, pa., mkt. to. (TH.), head of a U. and Co. Co. dis., S. Hunts., 9 S.W. of Huntingdon; ac. 3,324; soil clay, gravel, and loam. The town is situated on the east bank of the Ouse, here crossed by a stone bridge of three arches, built in 1589 from the ruins of the priory and connecting this county with Bedfordshire. The town consists chiefly of two wide streets, crossing each other at right angles, and a spacious market-place. The church of the Blessed Virgin Mary (restored) is Perp. The body of the church was completed about 1486; the porches were added and the tower of Weldon stone begun about 1489; the work had advanced as far as the belfry in 1493, and the pinnacles were built between 1526 and 1535. The roof, of the same age as the church, is bordered by a cornice of oak, upon which, between mouldings of vine-leaves, are various grotesque figures carved in fine relief; the whole fabric, save the chancel, is embattled, and at the north-east angle of the nave is an octagonal stair-turret. The tower is of four stages, surrounded at intervals by belts of quatrefoils; at the angles are square panelled turrets, buttressed up to the belfry storey, which is lighted by two tall windows on each face, and the space over is enriched with quatrefoiled work, and finished with a counter-embattled parapet 100 ft. from the ground; the turrets, rising above this, are crowned with crocketed spires, surrounded by pinnacles which reach a height of 128 ft. All the twenty-nine windows were originally filled with stained glass, of which a very few mutilated fragments now remain. In the chancel is a fine modern canopied altar-tomb with recumbent effigy of a lady in white alabaster, and at the head and feet are figures of angels; the whole rests on a slab of black Derbyshire marble. Here are Baptist, Congregational, and Wesleyan Methodist chapels. The public buildings include the Corn Exchange (1863), in the Jacobean Renaissance style; the police station, in New Street; the Public Rooms, situated on the east side of the Ouse, forming an oblong building of spacious character; the Victoria Museum (1887), in High Street, containing a fine collection of minerals, shells, animals, and geological specimens; the Library and Literary Institute (1863), in High Street, with library containing upwards of 2,000 volumes, and a separate room for chess, draughts, and billiards. The Working Men's Club (1881), in High Street, contains smoking, recreation, and reading rooms; attached is also a quoit ground. There are weekly sales of fat and store cattle. Fairs are held on Ascension Day, on that day three weeks, on the first Thursday after October 11, and on the Thursday previous to December 17. A statute fair, the date of which is fixed annually, is held on a Thursday in the latter part of September. On the Ouse, about a mile from the town and partly in the pa. of Little Paxton, are the paper mills of the St. Neots Paper Mill Co., Limited, in which a large number of females are employed. There are also large breweries, steam flour-mills, two engineering works, and some maltings. There are several charities and an endowed school, founded in 1760 and rebuilt in 1860. The Benedictine priory of St. Neots stood in the pa. of Eynesbury (q.v.). A mile from the town is Priory Park, a seat; the mansion is situated on a gentle eminence in a park of 100 ac. well studded with trees, and is approached through a fine avenue of elms.

St. Nicholas (1), or Shaldon St. Nicholas, pa. at the mouth of the Teign, S. Dev., about 5½ E. of Newton Abbot; ac. 580 and 210 water; soil limestone, overlying clay. The Teign is here crossed by a ferry and by a bridge of 34 arches to West Teignmouth. The pa. contains some modern villas, a number of lodging-houses, and has a good beach; it is much frequented by invalids during the summer months. The old church of St. Nicholas is a small edifice of rough stone. The font (restored) is rude E. Norm., and was found embedded in the churchyard. The chancel retains St. Ninians, pa. and to., N.E. Stirls., Sc.; ac. of pa., which is bounded on the north by the Forth, 38,047; soil generally fertile, and in many places rich. The town (now incorporated with Stirling burgh) is about 2 S. of Stirling, on the road from that place to Falkirk and Glasgow, and consists of one long and rather narrow street. The houses are curious and old-fashioned, and upon many are dates of considerable antiquity; and some have stones upon which various characters and implements are rudely and grotesquely carved. Well-cultivated grounds and thriving plantations abound in the vicinity. The pa. derives its name from the patron saint of the ancient church, the steeple of which still remains. The church to which this fabric was formerly attached, being used as a powder magazine by the Highlanders in 1746, was blown up immediately before their retreat to the North. Though scarcely one stone of the body of the church was left upon another, the steeple was uninjured. The manufacture of nails has for a long time been carried on at St. N.; other staples are the tanning of leather and the manufacture of screw-bolts, and there are woollen mills in the pa. Close by the town is the battlefield of Bannockburn. Craigforth House, Polmaise Castle, Sauchieburn House, and Touch House are seats.

St. Oran's Chapel. [IONA.]

St. Osyth, pa. and vil. on a creek of the Colne, N.E. Essex, opposite Brightlingsea, 4 W. of Clacton-on-Sea; ac. 8,522 land and 1,611 water; soil good mixed, overlying gravel and sand. Some parts of this pa. are high, including Beacon Hill; but a great portion is marsh-land. The church of SS. Peter and Paul is E. Perp. On each side of the chancel are the monumental recumbent effigies in alabaster of a knight and his lady, with armorial bearings; all four belong to the Darcy family, but the inscriptions are undated. In the chapel of the south aisle is a mural tablet to Briant Darcie (d. 1587) and Bridget, his wife, with other members of his family; in the same chapel is the recumbent effigy of John Darcy (d. 1638). There is a Wesleyan chapel. The poor have £12 yearly in fuel and clothing. Here are oyster beds. St. O. is one of the oldest places in the co., and was originally part of the royal demesne of King Canute; it was formerly called "Chich," but takes its present name from St. Osyth, daughter of Frithwald, a Mercian prince, who built a convent here, of which she was first abbess, and where, in 653, she was martyred by the Danes. On the site of the convent, probably destroyed by these invaders, Richard de Belmeis of London founded a priory for canons of St. Augustine, within the precincts of which he was himself buried in 1127; he bequeathed the church and tithes to the canons, who elected as their first abbot or prior William de Corbeuil, afterwards Archbishop of Canterbury, who died in 1136, bequeathing large benefactions to this house, to which valuable charters were granted by Henry II. In Abbot Vyntoner's time it was largely rebuilt—the gateway, abbot's tower, and other portions now remaining being erected in that period. It is now, in its modernised form, a family residence, and is entered through a gatehouse of Late Perp. date, elaborately covered with panelled work in flint and stone, and consisting of an arched entrance with flanking towers. The whole is embattled, and is supposed to have been erected about the reign of Henry VII. The abbot's tower (of the same period), over a vaulted substructure, and the abbot's private chapel (of the 13th cent.) constitute its most ancient features; in the quadrangle is a range of old buildings in Tudor style, with an octagonal observatory; in the front of the mansion is a fine 16th-cent. oriel window, on which the initials of Abbot Vyntoner are frequently repeated, along with many other devices and monograms, and the date 1527; the park is well studded with trees. St. Cleres (now a farmhouse), 1 S.E. of the vil., presents a very ancient appearance; it was once wholly (and is still on three sides) surrounded by a moat. On the coast are a battery and three martello towers.

St. Ouen, pa., N.W. Jersey, Channel Islands, 5½ W.N.W. of St. Helier; ac. 3,707. Great part of the pa. is covered by sand, which has been driven eastwards from St. Ouen's Bay. The church of St. Ouen is an edifice of plain character, erected in 1130; the steeple serves as a landmark. On Grosnez Point, at the north-west extremity of the island, is a ruined arch, the remnant of an ancient fortress of unknown origin. St. O.'s Manor House the ancient seat of the De Carterets, is an interesting example of a feudal dwelling, the oldest part being probably a small square massive tower. The central portion dates from the reign of Charles II., and the wings are modern. The house is approached through a narrow-arched gateway erected in the reign of Henry VII.; it bears the arms of the De Carterets between those of the Powlets and the Barentins. Within is a fine oak staircase and some interesting pictures. The whole of the exterior has recently been restored.

St. Ouen's Bay, inlet of the sea on west coast of Jersey, Channel Islands, 5½ W. by N. of St. Helier. The coast here forms a grand curve of upwards of 5 miles, the distance across the bay at its mouth being about 4 miles. The shore consists of a wide expanse of sand, ½ mile across when the tide is out, beyond which the ground rises to a height of 100 or 150 ft., and is covered with blown sand interspersed with cultivated tracts and farmhouses. The coast towards the south extremity of the bay becomes much bolder, terminating in the Corbière (q.v.). A fresh-water lake, called St. O.'s Pond, between the hills and the sea, is stocked with several varieties of fish. The only safe anchorage is near a rock called La Rocco, in the south part of the bay.

St. Pancras, parl. bor. and pa. in N.W. London, E. Middx., 1¼ N.W. of St. Paul's; ac. 2,672. St. P. was constituted a parl. bor. in 1885; it comprises four divisions (East, North, South, and West), each of which is represented by a single member. The pa. embraces a very large area, including Gray's Inn Road, Tottenham Court Road, Hampstead and Euston Roads, Somers Town, Camden Town, Kentish Town, and parts of Highgate and Regent's Park. Somers Town takes its name from Lord Somers, to whom the manor was granted at the Dissolution, having been previously held by the Carthusian house of the Holy Salutation. St. Pancras, to whom the church is dedicated, was a Phrygian youth of high birth, martyred under Diocletian in 304. St. P. old church, previously Norm. and E. Eng., was almost wholly rebuilt in 1848, and is now in Norm. style. Among the monuments is a tablet for the miniature painter Samuel Cooper (d. 1672). The graveyard was very largely used by Roman Catholics of high rank, and here also were interred many of the émigrés driven from France during the great Revolution; among others buried in it are Jeremy Collier (d. 1726) and General Paoli (d. 1807). St. Pancras new church (1822) is a curious medley of Athenian architecture, the building as a whole being modelled on the Erectheium, whilst the projections with caryatides on the north and south sides were suggested by the Pandroseion, the tower by the Temple of the Winds, and the marble columns at the east end are a detail from the Temple of Athene. The pulpit and reading-desk are constructed from the famous Fairlop Oak in Hainault Forest. The pa. is intersected by the Regent's Canal, and by the Great Northern, London and North Western, and Midland Railways, the construction of which caused the removal of many old houses. Their respective termini—King's Cross, Euston, and St. Pancras—are situated in close proximity in or

St. Paul, Covent Garden, pa. in Central London, E. Middx., 1 W. of St. Paul's; ac. 26. The church of St. Paul (originally erected 1631–38, and rebuilt after a fire in 1795) is in Palladian style; it is supposed to have been designed by Inigo Jones. Here are buried many famous persons, including Robert Carr, Earl of Somerset (d. 1645); Samuel Butler, author of "Hudibras" (d. 1680); Sir Peter Lely (d. 1680), William Wycherley (d. 1715), Grinling Gibbons (d. 1721), Thomas Girtin (d. 1802), Charles Macklin (d. 1797), and John Wolcot (d. 1819), better known as "Peter Pindar."

The church of All Saints (restored) is of mixed periods; in the side chapel is a monument to Henry Stapleford (d. 1631), servant to Queen Elizabeth, James I., and Charles I. There are a few small charities. St. Paul's Walden Bury (otherwise Walden Abbot's) and Stagenhoe Park are seats.

The pa. is bounded on the north by St. Ouen's, on the west by St. Ouen's Bay, on the south by St. Brelade's, and on the east by St. Mary's and St. Lawrence's. The church of St. Peter is a plain structure of the 12th cent. and later, mainly Gothic in character, with a lofty quadrangular tower and spire. The rich and picturesque valley of St. P., one of the most delightful tracts in the island, descends from the church to St. Aubin's Bay; it produces abundant crops of grain and fruit, and is studded with picturesque farmhouses. The vineries in this pa. have long been celebrated.

is in Classic style. In the vestry is a brass, dated 1617 (formerly in the church of St. Benedict), to John Becke, twice Mayor of Lincoln, and Marie his wife.

St. Peter at Gowts, pa. in the bor. of Lincoln (q.v.), W. Lincs.; ac. 149. The distinctive name is derived from the gowts or watercourses which run in its immediate neighbourhood. The church is of various periods; a monumental arch, opening into the south transept or chantry, bears a curious rhyming inscription, in barbarous Latin and in Lombardic characters, to the memory of Ralph Joluf and his wife Amicia, the founder of the chapel. There are some excellent mural decorations, a finely-carved stone reredos, and a Norm. font.

St. Peter in the Wood, or St. Pierre du Bois, pa., S.W. Guernsey, Channel Islands, 4½ W.S.W. of St. Peter Port; ac. 1,662. The church of St. Peter is Norm. and Dec., with a tall square tower. In this pa. are several interesting old farmhouses with round-headed Norm. doorways. The valley sloping down to Rocquaine Bay is very picturesque.

St. Peter Port, pa., seaport, and mkt. to. (s.), E. Guernsey, Channel Islands, 26 N.E. of St. Helier; ac. 1,499. The appearance of the town as one enters the harbour is very picturesque, owing rather to natural features and the quaint old houses near the quay than to any architectural merit in the more recent buildings. High Street, Smith Street, and the Grange Road form a continuous thoroughfare, ascending from the harbour through the central and most important part of the town towards the open country. Smith Street has been much changed of late, but the narrow irregular High Street, with the venerable church of St. Peter at its bottom, retains much of its picturesque character. This edifice, erected in 1312 and well restored, is a very fine example of early Flamboyant architecture. The north porch and west doorway, with their crocketed canopies, are specially noteworthy. The handsome square embattled tower is surmounted by a low octagonal spire, added in 1721. The church of St. James (1818), in debased Classic style, is a very conspicuous object in all views of the town. The other churches in the town parish—St. John, St. Stephen, St. Barnabas, and Trinity—are modern buildings. The Roman Catholic church is an edifice of some merit, in Gothic style. There is a large number of chapels of various denominations. The court-house (1799) is a plain granite structure; it contains several portraits. The Commercial Arcade, a quadrangle of short streets containing some good shops, is on the south side of the High Street, and leads from it to the old market-square.

THE HARBOUR, ST. PETER PORT.

Within an arcade underneath the old assembly rooms, on the west side of the square, the fruit and vegetable market is still held. At the north-east angle of the square are the new meat and fish markets, which form a very imposing edifice with stepped gables. The old assembly rooms are now occupied by the Guille-Allès Library and Museum, established through the enterprise of two natives of the island; the library, which includes both lending and reference departments, is a very valuable one, containing a large number of books. There is also a good library at Candie House, formerly the residence of the bailiff, and now rebuilt to suit its present purpose; the adjoining gardens have been converted into a public pleasure ground. From Candie a pleasant walk, called St. Julian's Avenue, planted with trees and lined by gardens, leads down to the north part of the Esplanade; in this road is St. Julian's Hall, used for balls and public entertainments. To the north of Candie is Cambridge Park (formerly the New Ground), a square open space lined by trees, which is used for militia reviews, cricket matches, and similar purposes. Close to Cambridge Park, embosomed in trees on the ridge of the hill, are Les Côtils and Castle Carey, two of the principal seats in the pa. On the south side of the town the ground rises somewhat abruptly towards the line of cliff on which stands Fort George (q.v.). The principal street in this quarter is Hauteville, which contains many substantial old houses. Hauteville House was the residence of Victor Hugo, and contains many relics associated with him. Many of the best residences are now in the Grange Road, so called because it led to La Grange, the ancient seat of the De Beauvoirs, now a picturesque farmhouse. Elizabeth College was founded by Queen Elizabeth in 1563; the old college is now a master's house, its place having been taken by a spacious structure erected in 1824, in the Gothic style of the period. The College is a well-known Classical school, with several scholarships at Oxford. The Hospital, founded in 1742, is at once an infirmary, a lunatic asylum, and a workhouse. A convalescent home, called the Victoria Cottage Hospital, was established in 1888. The existing prison has been in use since 1811, when Castle Cornet (q.v.) ceased to be employed for the purpose. The old harbour (begun 1580 and completed 1780) occupies only 4½ ac. It forms but a small part of the existing harbour, the formation of which was begun in 1836. It is 73 ac. in extent, and lies between two breakwaters, that on the south side connecting Castle Cornet with the mainland and extending some distance beyond it, while the north breakwater terminates in landing-stages available at every state of the tide. On the sea-front, near the old harbour, is a bronze statue of the Prince Consort, erected in 1862. The Victoria Tower, a lofty tower of somewhat peculiar design, situated near the ridge of the hill, is a memorial of the visit paid to the island by Queen Victoria and Prince Albert in 1846.

St. Peters, or St. Peter, Thanet, pa. and vil., E. Kent, about 2 S.E. of Margate; ac. 2,922 and 379 water; soil loam, overlying chalk. The pa., which is a member of the Cinque Port liberty of Dover, contains Broadstairs (q.v.). The church of St. Peter (restored) was originally erected about 1080 by the monks of St. Augustine's, Canterbury, as a chapel to Minster; it is a flint edifice with large portions of Norm. and E. Eng. date, with later insertions. The tower down to 1887 (when it was restored) retained two fissures caused by the earthquake of 1580. The arrangement of the arches in the nave and chancel is dissimilar on the two sides; in the western part of the nave the divisions are formed by blank walls, which seem original, and beyond these, on the north, are four very plain semicircular arches on cylindrical columns; on the south side are three arches, the features of which vary materially. The north aisle of the chancel has three wide E. Pointed arches with square piers. There are some 15th-cent. brasses, including one in the chancel inscribed with historical particulars relating to the church. The Baptists and Wesleyans have chapels. The St. Peter's Orphan and Convalescent Homes are in E. Dec. style. There are some charities.

Eng. and Perp.; some portions of the rood-screen (now placed at the west end of the church) retain various figures of saints. The tower screen of oak, which has carved grotesques, is probably constructed from old wainscotting. The churchyard contains tombstones of the Drake and Cole families. Here is a Wesleyan chapel.

St. Peter, Thanet. [ST. PETERS.]

St. Petrox, pa., S.W. Pembs., 3 S. of Pembroke; ac. 1,000; soil fertile. The church of St. Pedrock (restored 1856) is partly E. Eng. In this pa. is Stackpole Court, the seat of the Earl of Cawdor, the beautiful grounds of which extend into the pa. of Stackpole Elidor. The mansion is a handsome edifice, erected early in the 18th cent. It contains some good pictures, including some specimens of Albert Dürer and a portrait of the first Earl by Reynolds; also the famous Hirlas Horn, given to Davydd ap Jevan by Henry, Earl of Richmond (afterwards Henry VII.).

St. Pierre, pl. (formerly a separate pa.), pa. of Mathern and St. Pierre (q.v.), S.E. Mon., 3 S.S.W. of Chepstow. The church of St. Peter (restored 1874) is an ancient stone building. In the chancel are two ancient slabs, recovered in 1764 from the churchyard, and bearing an inscription in Norman French to Urian de St. Pierre, who was lord of this place and died in 1239; there are also two incised slabs to members of the Lewis family, dating from the 16th cent. St. Pierre Park is a seat, with a fine old mansion of various periods, chiefly Tudor; the deer-park has some grand old trees, and a lake of about 11 ac. in extent.

St. Pierre au Vrach, or Pierre au Vrach, rock in the Channel Islands, 2 W.S.W. of Alderney. The rock bears a curious resemblance to a boat.

St. Pinnock, pa. and vil., S.E. Cornw., 5 S.W. of Liskeard; ac. 3,436; soil light, on a stony bottom. The Great Western Railway passes through the pa. on several lofty viaducts, one of which is 151 ft. in height. The church of St. Pinnock (restored 1882) is E. Eng.; there are some 17th-cent. monuments. The Bible Christians and United Methodists have chapels. The charities amount to 10s. yearly. On Bradock Down, within the pa., are several large burial mounds. Stone of excellent quality for building purposes is quarried here.

St. Piran's Round. [PERRANZABULOE.]

St. Quivox, ancient pa., N. Ayrs., Sc., 3 N.E. of Ayr, has since 1895 formed part of the enlarged pa. of Ayr (q.v.). The Established church is an ancient Gothic edifice, and was enlarged early in the 19th cent.

St. Radigund's Abbey, ruins, E. Kent, 3 N.W. of Dover. It was founded in 1191. The principal gateway is nearly perfect, and the chapel and some domestic buildings (now used as a farmhouse) also remain. There are also traces of the abbey buildings in the fields adjoining the farm. The abbots of St. Radigund at one time sat in Parliament.

There are some remains of old stained glass in the east window of the south aisle. The font is octagonal and of granite. In the churchyard is an old baptistery well with remarkably clear water; it is covered by very ancient stonework, and was formerly approached through the church porch, but the passage has been bricked up. The Wesleyans have a chapel. Penquite and Torfrey are seats.

St. Sampson (2), pa. and small seaport, N.E. Guernsey, Channel Islands, 2 N. of St. Peter Port; ac. 1,435. The pa. derives its name from Sampson, a half-legendary saint who is said to have introduced Christianity into the island in the 6th cent., under the auspices of the Frankish king Childebert. The church of St. Sampson (erected in 1111) is said to stand on or near the site of the ancient chapel built by the saint. It is a small plain structure, which has been much altered, but retains some Norm. and E. Eng. features. Among the Norm. portions are the west part of the nave, containing small round-headed windows; the wall of the south aisle, which retains a mutilated piscina; and the south doorway. The tower is E. Eng. The harbour, which is dry at low tide, has been improved by the construction of a breakwater extending towards the south pier from the north side of the entrance, and at spring tides embraces a water area of 22 ac. A large trade is carried on in the granite from the neighbouring quarries.

St. Saviour (1), pa., N.R. Yorks., within the city of York; ac. 439. The church, chiefly in Perp. style, contains some ancient stained glass. The living was given by William I. to Whitby Abbey, and it came to the Crown at the Dissolution.

St. Saviour (2), pa., S.W. Guernsey, Channel Islands, 3½ W. by S. of St. Peter Port; ac. 1,754. The church of St. Saviour is a Norm. and Gothic edifice, dating from the 12th cent. The interesting chapel of St. Apolline, of earlier date than any of the pa. churches, after long suffering desecration, is now preserved by the States. It is an Early Norm. edifice, 27 ft. long and 13 ft. wide, with massive walls consisting of unhewn stones and mortar prepared from limpet shells. The doorway is round-headed, and there is a narrow window with a single transom. The valley sloping down from St. S. church to Perelle Bay is very picturesque.

St. Saviour (3), pa., E. Jersey, Channel Islands, ½ N.E. of St. Helier; ac. 2,296. The pa. extends from the east suburbs of St. Helier nearly as far as the north coast. The church of St. Saviour is a Norm. edifice, erected in 1154, standing in a picturesque churchyard, which commands fine views. The small endowed school of St. Magloire was founded in 1498. A rocking-stone which stood near the church has been destroyed.

St. Saviour, Southwark, pa. on the south side of the Thames, in the bor. of Southwark (q.v.), N.E. Surrey, ¾ S.S.E. of St. Paul's; ac. 127. The church of St. Saviour is said to have been the church of the Augustinian priory of St. Mary Overy, which was founded in 1106, but in the 9th cent. Swithin, Bishop of Winchester, had founded a college of priests here, whence its description as a collegiate church is held to be derived. It was surrendered in 1540 by Bartholomew Linstede, the last of the 32 priors, who lies buried in the church. In 1614 the church was purchased for £800 by the parishioners from James I. The church was restored and the nave rebuilt by Sir Arthur Blomfield, the foundation stone of the nave being laid in 1890 by the Prince of Wales, who was also present at the re-opening, Feb. 16, 1897. The newly-erected nave is believed to be an accurate reproduction of the original structure, which dated from the 13th cent. St. Saviour's is the church of the Suffragan, and will probably be made a cathedral for South London.

St. Saviour's Church.

During the various restorations fragments of a church erected during the Early Norm. period have been discovered. Some carved and painted bosses belonging to the wooden roof erected in 1469 are still preserved. The Perp. altar-tomb of the poet John Gower (d. 1402) is now placed in the antechapel. The names of the dramatists John Fletcher (d. 1625) and Philip Massinger (d. 1639), and of Edmund Shakespeare (d. 1607), the poet's youngest brother, inscribed on the floor of the choir, show that they are buried here. In 1425 the marriage of James I. of Scotland to the Lady Joanna Beaufort was solemnised in this church. It was also the place chosen for the examination of the martyrs John Bradford, John Rogers, and Bishop Hooper during the Marian persecution.

Saint's Bay, small bay in Petit Port Bay, S. Guernsey, Channel Islands, between Moulin Huet Bay and Icart Point. It is about ¼ mile wide at its mouth, and runs inland for about the same distance.

St. Selskar's, pa., Forth bar., S.E. co. Wex., Ir.; ac. 21. It forms part of the to. of Wexford (q.v.).

St. Sepulchre, pa. of Central London, E. Middx., ¼ N.N.W. of St. Paul's. The church of St. Sepulchre, to a great extent rebuilt in 1837, underwent much alteration 1863–78, and was thoroughly restored 1878–80; it is now an edifice in modern Gothic style, with a fine Late Perp. tower. The massive three-storeyed porch is an unusual feature. It contains a good organ, originally built in 1670,

St. Stephens (1), or St. Stephens by Launceston, pa., N.E. Cornw., partly in the bor. of Launceston; ac. 3,852. The church of St. Stephen (restored 1883) is E. Perp., and has a parvise over the south porch. In removing a modern granite window at the east end of the chancel a large sculptured stone was found, with a seated figure (life size) representing "Christ in Majesty"; on the exterior of the same wall, at the north end, there is a similar stone much mutilated, apparently representing the Virgin and Child, forming the tympanum of a blocked-up doorway; at the opposite end are the remains of another doorway, and beyond the chancel wall, eastward, are the foundations of what was either a sacristy or (more probably) a Lady chapel, into which the two east doorways opened. It is probable that the sculpture of "Christ in Majesty" occupied a place above the south doorway, corresponding with that of "Christ in Humility" above the north doorway, and the recovered panel has been refixed accordingly; other interesting remains were also brought to light, and are carefully preserved. There are monuments to Marie Pomeroy (d. 1630); Margaret (Escott), wife of Digory Prowt (d. 1631); Margaret Prowte (d. 1674); John Bewes, of Colacott (d. 1675), and Anne his wife (d. 1675), with others of later date. The font is Norm. The chancel retains its ancient piscina, and has a new reredos of Bath and Caen stone and Devonshire marble, with a sculptured group in the centre representing the "Crucifixion;" in the porch is a holy-water stoup. The old collegiate church was consecrated by Bishop Bronescombe, October 23, 1259, and it was once proposed that it should be the seat of the bishop; but Robert Warlewast, Bishop of Exeter (1150–59), suppressed the college, and in its stead founded in 1170 a priory in the pa. of St. Thomas the Apostle, for Augustinian canons, dedicated to St. Stephen, the revenues of which at its dissolution were valued at £354. The Catholic church of the English Martyrs is a wooden structure, built in 1887. The town or church lands produce £73 yearly, and there is also an ancient bequest left to this pa. of 12 penny loaves to be given away every Sunday to as many poor persons. [NEWPORT (7).]

St. Stephens (2), or St. Stephens by Saltash, pa., tp., and vil. at the confluence of the Lynher with the Tamar, S.E. Cornw.; ac. of pa. 6,772, of tp. 6,520. The pa. contains Saltash (q.v.). The church of St. Stephen (restored 1872) is Perp.; among other monuments is one to William Hitchins and Frances (Denham) his wife, with effigies of both and of ten children; near it is another to George Wadham (d. 1606) and his wife, also with effigies. There are two slabs with matrices of brasses; one of these still retains a shield with a merchant's mark, and one of four medallions with the figure of an eagle, symbolising St. John. The chancel contains three curiously-illustrated volumes of Fox's Book of Martyrs. The font is Norm. Near the vicarage grounds is an ancient cross, displaying a carving of the Crucifixion. There are several charities. The ruins of Trematon Castle, standing on the top of a wooded hill, comprise the keep (dating from the 13th cent.), the base court, and the gatehouse, almost perfect, with three arches and a guardroom above. The fortress is believed to have been originally built at the period of the Conquest. The modern residence stands in the Barrack Square. Ince Castle, formerly the seat of the Killigrew family, is now occupied as a farmhouse; it is a 16th-cent. rectangular structure with a tower at each angle. In 1646 it was garrisoned for the king, but ultimately surrendered to the Parliament.

St. Stephens in Brannell, pa. and vil., Mid Cornw., 10 N.E. of Truro; ac. 9,002; soil poor, overlying granite. The church of St. Stephen (restored) is chiefly E. Eng.; the arch of the south doorway is Norm. with nailhead ornament. The chancel retains a piscina, and some ancient carving is worked into the panelling of the pulpit and desk. The font is sculptured with grotesque animals and foliated ornaments. The Bible Christians, Wesleyans, and Free Methodists have chapels. The higher portion of the pa. has large china-clay and china-stone works; the south and middle part is a farming and mining district.

St. Stephen's Within, pa., Middlethird bar., E. co. Waterf., Ir., within the city of Waterford (q.v.); ac. 5.

Perp. The chancel is divided from the nave and lateral chapels by screens, now imperfect, but retaining some good panelling, with the linen pattern; the east window retains a fragment of ancient glass; the piscina is built up, but an aumbry remains on the north side, and in the north chapel is a newel staircase formerly leading to the rood-loft, a bracket, and a small piscina; the east window has two impaled shields of arms and in this chapel are benches, the ends of which are finely carved with shields of arms; below the east window of the south chapel is the recumbent effigy of a man clad in a long garment girt with a cord and over this a cloak or mantle open at the neck, round which is a knotted cord and pendent from it a quatrefoil ornament; the head, not tonsured, is supported by angels, and at the feet are two lions. In this chapel is a mural slab with effigies in relief and an inscription to Frances, wife of Philip Bennet (d. 1636); there is also a memorial here to Florence, wife of Hugh Carew, of Trevia (d. 1656), and some of the pews are enriched with arabesque work; the tracery of the windows in the north aisle includes several shields of arms, and the bench-ends here and under the western gallery exhibit the emblems of the Passion, monograms, and other devices; the font is octagonal, with plain mouldings. In the church are other monuments to John Taverner (d. 1586); Margaret Dagge (d. 1612); Thomas Harris (d. 1670); Hester, wife of Humphry Harris (d. 1670); Humphry Harris (d. 1687); and others. There is a peculiar alms-box, with pictures of the lame, halt, and blind on it, and a recumbent figure of a priest; the fine reredos is painted with Scripture subjects; the pulpit, dated 1630, bears the arms, crest, and supporters of the Carminow family. Nearly the whole of the fractured cross formerly standing in the churchyard, a granite monolith 15 ft. high, which had been removed and used for building purposes, has been recovered and re-erected on its original site. The Bible Christians, Wesleyans, and Free Methodists have chapels. Two fairs are held—one on the last Tuesday in February, and the other on the first Tuesday in July. Delabole (q.v.) is in this pa.

St. Thomas (1), pa. in the parl. bor. of Southwark (q.v.), S.E. London, E. Surrey; ac. 8. The church of St. Thomas, rebuilt early in the 18th cent., is a plain red-brick structure with stone dressings; the square tower is in three storeys, the ground floor forming a porch to the church. The interior is exceedingly plain.

St. Thomas (2). [ST. THOMAS THE APOSTLE (2).]

St. Thomas in Pensford, vil. (formerly a separate pa., but now for civil purposes amalgamated with Stanton Drew), N. Somerset, 6 s. of Bristol, on the road to Wells. Here is a railway viaduct about 100 ft. high, with 16 arches, spanning a valley of considerable depth. The church of St. Thomas à Becket, rebuilt (with the exception of the tower) in 1868, is in E. Dec. style; the building has no chancel-arch, but a screen of stone and iron work divides the nave from that part used as a chancel. The carved oak pulpit bears the date 1617, and there is a curious old font. The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel, and there is a tabernacle of the Independent Society.

St. Thomas in the Cliffe, or Cliffe, pa., E. Sussex, forming an eastern suburb of Lewes; ac. 35. The suburb is connected with Lewes by a bridge over the Ouse. The church of St. Thomas à Becket (restored) is Perp., and contains a Dutch painting of The Ascension dating from about 1770. There is a squint, and in a blind window in the north aisle a panel picture of St. Thomas of Canterbury.

St. Thomas's, pa. in the north-east part of the City of Dublin (q.v.), S.E. co. Dub., Ir.; ac. 775.

St. Thomas Street, tp., pa. of St. Thomas the Apostle (q.v.), N.E. Cornw., within the bor. of Launceston; ac. 67.

St. Thomas, Swansea, eccl. pa. and tp., pa. of Swansea (q.v.), N.W. Glamorgs.; ac. 440, with 609 tidal water and foreshore. St. T. is situated on the left bank of the Tawe, opposite Swansea. It contains the suburb of Port Tennant (q.v.). The church of St. Thomas (1887–90) is in E. Eng. style.

St. Thomas the Apostle (1), pa. and tp., N.E. Cornw., partly within the bor. of Launceston; ac. of pa. 2,158, of tp. 2,091. The church of St. Thomas the Apostle, which occupies part of the site of the priory, is Perp.; there is an ancient and unusually large font of Polyphant stone, carved with figures of an Oriental character; in the aisle are the remains of some ancient fresco paintings, representing the legend of St. Roque. The chancel retains a cinquefoil-headed piscina and a bracket. Here was anciently a priory of Austin canons, founded in 1170 by Robert Warlewast, Bishop of Exeter, and dedicated to St. Stephen; the site is partly occupied by the church of St. Thomas, and portions of the buildings have been incorporated with the fabric of that church and also with adjacent houses; remains of the priory have also frequently been met with in the neighbouring fields, as well as stone coffins and parts of human skeletons. The fine Norm. doorway of the priory now serves as an entrance to the "White Hart" inn. A subterranean communication is supposed to have existed between the priory and the castle. Recent excavations on the site of the priory have afforded valuable information both as to the plan of the church and its architectural features.

St. Thomas the Apostle (2), or St. Thomas, pa. and head of a U., E. Dev., partly within the parl. bor. of Exeter, with which city it is connected by bridge over the Exe; ac. 3,700. The church of St. Thomas the Apostle, in Cowick Street, is Perp.; in the chancel is a canopied tomb with recumbent figure (by Bacon) to Mrs. Medley; there are also monuments to the Northmore, Buller, and Williams families, and to William Augustus Gordon, 11th (Devonshire) Regiment. On the north side is a chapel belonging to Sir Charles Brune Graves Sawle, Bart. St. Thomas's Pleasure Grounds, opened in 1891, consist of about 4 ac., laid out with walks and flower-beds, a portion in the centre being reserved as a playground for children.

Bodmin; ac. 3,274; soil light, overlying stone. The church of St. Tudy (restored 1873) is Perp. At the west end of the south aisle is a monument with effigies in stone, an inscription in Latin, and twenty-six rhyming lines in English, to Humphry Nicoll, of Penvose (d. 1597). At the east end of the south aisle is a sumptuous monument of stone and marble to Anthony Nicholl (d. 1658) and four sons (1649–78); there are kneeling effigies of himself and his wife, and others of the four boys; above is a long Latin inscription and ten rhyming verses in English; on the floor is a slab inscribed to Humphrey Nicoll (d. 1699). At the west end of the north aisle is a slate slab with twenty-two English verses and four female kneeling figures of a mother and three daughters, carved in low relief; over their heads are five shields of arms; no names are given, but the shields clearly show this to be the tomb-stone of Alice (Denzell), wife of William Reskymer (d. 1563–64), and her daughters Anne, Katherine, and Johanna. There is a tablet to Philippa (Nicholl), wife of John Silly, of Trevelver (d. 1669), and a granite floor-stone to Margery, wife of Humphry Lower (d. 1686), and there are other memorials to the Billing family (1579–1624); Hanor, wife of John Barrett (d. 1636); William Lobb (d. 1663) and Margery his wife (d. 1661); Admiral Sir Richard Onslow, Bart., G.C.B. (d. 1817); Sir Henry Onslow, Bart. (d. 1853); Sir Matthew Richard Onslow, Bart. (d. 1876). In the churchyard is a slab inscribed to Sir Henry Onslow, Bart. (d. 1870), and a very ancient coped tomb of pre-Norman date, with traces of carving upon it. There are also memorials to the Rev. George Allanson, M.A., rector (1727–41), and to his wife Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Jonathan Trelawny, Bart., Bishop of Winchester (1707–21), d. January 25, 1744. The Free Methodists have a chapel. On the west side of the road leading from St. Teath to Mount Charles and Bodmin stands a mutilated cross, 1 ft. 8 in. high; the round head, now incomplete, is pierced by four holes and there is a boss in the centre. Tinten Manor House, now occupied as a farmhouse, was built about the end of the 15th cent.; a portion of the original work still remains, but the house was rebuilt in the 18th cent. The manor-house of Penvose, now a farmhouse, comprises many features of interest; it was built by the Nicholl family, who resided here from 1446 (or earlier) to 1721, and at the entrance to the garden by which it is approached is a gateway with the initials "A. N." (Anthony Nicholl) and the date 1646; it originally consisted of three blocks, partly enclosing a court-yard, and of these two sides and part of the third still remain; the windows are mullioned, and those lighting the present parlour contain medallions or shields emblazoned with the arms of Nicholl, Cavell, Giffard, Prideaux, and others; the windows of the hall similarly display the coats of Nicholl, impaling Mohun, Roscarrock, Rouse, and Speccot; some of the ceilings are of moulded plaster work, enriched with various devices.

St. Twinell, pa., S.W. Pembs., 3½ S.W. of Pembroke; ac. 1,418. The church of St. Twinell (restored 1858) is E. Eng., with a lofty embattled tower. The Calvinistic Methodists have a chapel.

St. Veep, or St. Vepe, pa. and vil. on a branch of the Fowey, S.E. Cornw., 5 S.E. of Lostwithiel; ac. 3,108; soil clayey, overlying slate. The church of St. Ciricius is Dec. and Perp. In the south aisle, over the priest's door, is a mural monument to Nicholas Courtenay, dated 1589; there is an ancient granite font. The list of vicars is complete from 1536. In the pa. is the site of a monastic house dedicated to St. Cadoc and sometime a cell to the Cluniac abbey of Montacute in Somerset.

St. Vigeans, coast pa. and vil., E. Forfs., Sc., lying north of the pa. of Arbroath, with which it is incorporated for administrative purposes; ac. 12,731; soil tolerably fertile, overlying chiefly Old Red Sandstone. It has an Established church (dating back to the 12th cent.) and school. The pa. was anciently termed Aberbrothock; the name by which it is now known is that of a famous hermit who had his chapel and hermitage at the Grange of Conan, near to which was a baronial castle named Gory, or Gregory. For a long stretch, and as far north as Auchmithie, the coast is very rugged and precipitous (gradually rising in Dickmontlaw Hill to 250 ft. above sea-level), containing a number of caves and arches, some of which may be passed through in boats and others on foot; they are a great attraction, and much visited. Letham Grange, in Grecian style, is a seat.

St. Vincent's Rocks. [Clifton (1).]

St. Wenn, pa., Mid Cornw., 4 E. of St. Columb; ac. 3,687; soil various, subsoil chiefly loamy. The church of St. Wenna (rebuilt 1823) is chiefly in E. Eng. style. The Wesleyans and Bible Christians have chapels. In the pa. are some remains of an ancient chapel and well, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene; there is another well dedicated to St. Wenna.

St. Weonards, pa. and vil., S. Herefords., 10½ S. of Hereford; soil sandy and loamy, overlying rock; ac. 4,561. The church of St. Weonard (restored 1884) is Norm., and contains a chapel in the north aisle founded in 1521, with a fine east window (restored 1875). There is a Primitive Methodist chapel. The charities amount to £30 yearly. Northgate Park is a seat.

St. Werburgh's, pa. in south of Dublin city, E. co. Dub., Ir., ¼ N.E. of St. Patrick's; ac. 17. The church of St. Werburgh (1759) is in Classical style, with a front of two storeys, of the Ionic and Corinthian orders respectively; here is buried Lord Edward Fitzgerald (d. 1798), and there is an altar-tomb commemorating some members of the same family, which was originally erected in All Hallows' Priory.

There are monuments to William Sawle (1651) and to Vice-Admiral Sir Charles V. Penrose, K.C.B. (1830). St. Nightons (or Nectan's) chapel-of-ease, situated 2½ N.E. of the pa. church, is an ancient building of stone; at the south-west corner is one stage of an old and substantial buttressed tower; the upper stages were destroyed in 1644 during the Civil War, and the bells, six in number, are said to have been melted down to furnish war material; one pinnacle was removed years ago to Boconnoc, and another serves as a gatepost on the steps at the entrance to the churchyard. The Cornwall House of Mercy, first established at Truro in 1861, and erected in July, 1864, is a building in Domestic Gothic style, situated on an eminence, with a beautiful private chapel. The charities amount to £22 yearly, and are distributed at Christmas in small doles. Ethy, situated on an eminence in a park of about 25 ac., and Lanwithan, beautifully situated in pleasure grounds, are seats.

of receiving vessels of large tonnage, is better adapted for ships of average size, owing to its narrowness and the intricacies of navigation which are presented by large rocks that lie about the entrance. The climate of this district is very mild; the American aloe blooms in the open air, and oranges, lemons, and citrons reach a state of ripe perfection, and this circumstance, combined with the beauty of the surrounding scenery, has of late brought S. into favour as a watering-place. The church of the Holy Trinity (1843) is in modern Gothic style. The Catholic Apostolic church consists of a large room over a store; there are Wesleyan and Baptist chapels, and a place of worship for the Brethren. The Institute (1893), in Market Street, has a large assembly room, and reading and recreation rooms. The sea-fishing is excellent, and the sands afford safe and pleasant sea-bathing. A lifeboat is stationed here. S. Castle, erected by Henry VIII. as a defence to the ports on this part of the coast, occupies a strong position on a peninsular rock at the entrance to the harbour. In 1643 it was garrisoned for the king, and in 1646, after being besieged by the Parliamentary forces for four months, surrendered on honourable terms. The Moult is the marine residence of the Earl of Devon.

Salcombe Estuary, Salcombe Haven, an inlet of the English Channel, S. Devon, irregularly indented on both shores, and penetrating as far north as Kingsbridge.

Salcombe Regis, coast pa. and vil. on the Sid, S.E. Dev., 8½ S. of Honiton; ac. 2,605; soil silicious, overlying limestone. The church of St. Peter and St. Mary is Norm. and E. Eng., with a Perp. tower; in the north aisle is a stone to George Drake (d. 1645), Katherine Drake (d. 1651), and Philip Drake (d. 1668). There are some small charities.

Salcott, or Salcot Wigborough, pa. and vil., N.E. Essex, 8½ S.S.W. of Colchester; ac. 274; soil heavy, overlying loam. The church of St. Mary (restored 1893) is E. Eng. A devise of land, the rent of which amounts to £8 yearly, was made many years ago for the expense of the church. A fair for pedlery is held on September 4.

Sale, populous tp. on the Mersey, pa. of Ashton-upon-Mersey (q.v.), Mid Chesh., 5½ S. of Manchester; ac. 2,005; the soil is of a rich sand and peat, very productive, and market-gardening is carried on to a great extent. The Bridgewater Canal (now the property of the Manchester Ship Canal Company) runs through the tp. There are two eccl. pas. with modern churches, a Roman Catholic chapel, and places of worship for the principal Dissenting bodies. The Free Library, in Tatton Road (1891), is a building in the old Cheshire half-timbered style; the police station and petty sessions court (1881) is a structure of brick. The Botanical Gardens, formed in 1860, occupy 10½ ac. of ground, laid out with flower-beds, hot-houses, ferneries, and a lake. The Liberal Club (1890) is a spacious edifice of red brick; the Central Conservative Club (1890) is a neat, well-arranged edifice of brick. There is also a Working Men's Social Club, and a savings bank. The Priory, Dane Road, a portion of which presents an ancient appearance, underwent alterations in 1850, but it does not appear that any monastic house ever stood here. S. Lodge and S. Old Hall are seats. There are also a number of handsome villa residences in the neighbourhood, chiefly occupied by Manchester merchants.

Saleby, pa. and vil., E. Lincs., 11 S.E. of Louth, on the road to Alford; ac. 1,739; soil and subsoil clay. The church of St. Margaret, rebuilt (1850) in Dec. style, contains the recumbent figure of a knight, with the date 1302. There is a Wesleyan chapel. The charities are small.

Salehurst, pa. and vil., N.E. Sussex, 5 N. of Battle; ac. 6,481; soil loam, overlying limestone. The church of St. Mary (restored 1861) is E. Eng. and Dec. Here are Congregational, Wesleyan, and Calvinist chapels. The charities, devoted to bread and the national schools, amount to about £50 yearly. Iridge Place is a seat.

Salen, q.s. pa. and ha., pas. of Torosay and Kilninian and Kelmore (q.v.), Isle of Mull, Args., Sc. The vil. is in the south-east angle of the Bay of Aros, about 8 S.E. of Tobermory. There is also a pier. A religious establishment appears to have been founded here at a very early period, which became a cell to the monastery of Iona. St. Columba is said to have preached occasionally at this place, from which circumstance a rivulet near the ruins of the convent, not far from the vil., still retains the name of the Preacher's Burn.

Salesbury, eccl. pa., tp., and vil., pa. of Blackburn (q.v.), N.E. Lancs., 3 S. of Ribchester; ac. 1,215. The church of St. Peter, occupying the site of an old church, is in E. Eng. style. There is a charity of about £17 yearly.

Salford (1), parl., mun., and co. bor. (extending into the pa. of Eccles), and tp., pa. of Manchester (q.v.), S.E. Lancs.; ac. of bor. 5,175, of tp. 1,329. S. is situated immediately west of the city of Manchester, from which it is separated only by the Irwell, over which are numerous bridges and railway viaducts. S. obtained its first charter in 1231; its municipal charter is dated 1844; it was constituted a parl. bor. by the Reform Act in 1832, and returned one member till 1868, and two from that date till 1885, since when, under the provisions of the Redistribution of Seats Act, the bor. sends three representatives: one for each of the three divisions, viz.—North, West, and South. It owns tramways, gas and electric lighting supplies, a large cemetery, markets, slaughter-houses, and four public baths. The corporation has carried out a bold dwelling-house improvement scheme, erected artisans dwellings and a model lodging house, and was the first corporation to establish a labour bureau. There are several eccl. pas., chiefly with modern churches. S. is a Roman Catholic diocese. St. John's Catholic cathedral is in Dec. style; the internal roof of the sanctuary is groined in wood with carved bosses, and is copied from the old church at Sawley Abbey; immediately beneath, standing on corbels and surmounted by richly-crocketed canopies, are the figures of several saints. At the back of the high altar is a magnificently-canopied screen in Caen stone; to the right of the high altar are sedilia and piscinæ, all surmounted by elaborate canopies; to the left is the bishop's throne. The chapel of the Blessed Sacrament forms a south transept; the roof is panelled and decorated with figures of seraphim; the altar and tabernacle are of alabaster. On either side of the canopy are relic-cases of carved oak. The chapel has an elaborately-wrought rosary altar with figures of the Blessed Virgin and several saints, above which rises a panelled reredos similarly adorned, and including in the wings figures of various Popes. Adjoining the cathedral is the bishop's house, which is likewise the diocesan seminary. There are numerous Nonconformist chapels. The public buildings include the town hall, a brick structure with stone front, in Doric style; the Free Library and Museum; the Corporation Baths, in New Blackfriars Street; the Infantry Barracks, in Regent Road; and the Salford and Pendleton Royal Hospital and Dispensary, in Chapel Street, a building of red brick with stone dressings. S. is allied with Manchester in many of its movements, the city and the bor. being to a large extent identical in their interests, pursuits, and trade. The Booth charities have an annual income of about £15,000, arising from lands in Manchester and Government stock, left by Humphrey Booth the elder, and founded as a charity in 1630; and a further income of £984, similarly derived, and left by his grandson of the same name in 1695. These charities are distributed in money to weekly recipients, and at Christmas in blankets, sheets, and clothing for the poor. There are several other charities. A market was established here by the Borough Reeve and Constables in 1838, and in 1866 the rights of the Duchy of Lancaster of holding markets and fairs were purchased for £4,481. The Cattle Market, situated in Cross Lane, Salford, and built about 1866 at a cost of £65,652, belongs to the corporation of that bor., and is the principal market for Manchester and the various towns within a circuit of 20 miles; it includes banking offices, lairs, slaughterhouses, pens, and other conveniences; the market is held every Tuesday. There are four parks, including Peel Park, formed in 1846, and named in honour of the late Sir Robert Peel, Bart., M.P.; the grounds are laid out in flower-beds, lawns, and grass-plots, diversified with evergreens, shrubberies, and trees. There are in the various parks bowling greens, gymnasia for men, women, and young children, with 5 ac. laid out as a cricket ground. In the upper grounds of Peel Park is a memorial statue of Sir Robert Peel, Bart. Among other statues is a fine marble one of Queen Victoria. There are also recreation grounds, with a total area of 40 ac.

Salford (2), pa. and vil., W. Beds., on the Bucks. border, 2¼ N.W. of Ridgmont; ac. 900; soil gravel and loam, overlying gravel. The church of St. Mary (restored 1867) is an interesting edifice of the Dec. period, with traces of 11th-cent. work. The nave is divided from the aisle by an arcade of four curious piers of early character. In the south aisle is a piscina, and a flat recessed arch, within which, on a low altar-tomb, is the recumbent effigy, cross-legged, of a warrior; there is also a large coped altar-tomb, the top of which is incised with a cross; a third and very similar tomb, with a flat top, bears thereon also a cross with pendent shield. There is a brass (with effigies) to John Peddar (1505), his wife Alice, and twelve Salford (3), pa. and vil., N. Oxon, 2 W.N.W. of Chipping Norton, on the road to Moreton-in-the-Marsh; ac. 1,506; soil stone-brash, clay, and peat, overlying marl and stone. The church of St. Mary (restored and partly rebuilt 1855) is chiefly E. Eng. The north and south doorways are Norm., and the font belongs to the same period. The nave and aisle are separated by an arcade of three arches. In the tympanum of the north door is a cross in a circle, with a lion and centaur on either side. In the north aisle are two 17th-cent. tablets to members of the Bolter family. The churchyard contains the base and part of the shaft of an ancient cross. The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel. There is a small charity.

Salford, North. [SALFORD (1).]

Salford Priors, or Salford Major (in Domesday "Salford"), pa. and vil., S.W. Warws., 6 N.E. of Evesham; ac. 4,730; soil principally gravel and marl. The pa. is generally level, with rising ground on the north, sloping gradually towards the Avon. Some of the low grounds were formerly marshy, but have for the most part been drained. The rivers Arrow and navigable Avon bound the pa., which is watered by three small brooks, taking their rise on the north and running south, in nearly parallel directions, into the Avon and Arrow, over which latter river is a stone bridge to Bidford. The church of St. Matthew (restored 1874)—confirmed to the canons of Kenilworth, together with the attached chapelries of Exhall and Wixford, by Simon, Bishop of Worcester, in Henry I.'s time—is situated at the extremity of the pa., near the Arrow, and is Norm., E. Eng., Dec., and Perp. The chancel contains several ancient monuments of the Clarke (alias Woodchurch) family, of Woodchurch, in Kent, with records concerning them from the time of William Rufus down to 1699; these include a large mural monument on the north side to Margaret (Alderford), first wife of Sir Simon Clarke, Kt. and Bart. (1617), and their second son Walter (1607) and third son Thomas (1616); over the inscriptions is a small recess, enclosing a recumbent effigy of Lady Clarke, with two shields of arms, and around the inscription are sixteen other shields, with numerous quarterings. On the north side of the communion-table is a stone inscribed to Sir Simon Clarke (1651); on the south side is a monument (with life-sized effigy) to Dame Dorothy Clarke, widow of Sir Simon Clarke (1669). Over the chancel door is a memorial to Margaret, granddaughter of Sir Simon Clarke (1640). The church contains also 17th- and 18th-cent. memorials. There is a small charity, and an endowed school founded in 1656. In a field called "The Vineyard," near the church, are traces of extensive ruins, where the mansion of Sir Simon Clarke, of Woodchurch, lord of the manor in the time of Elizabeth, is said to have stood. Numerous animal remains and Roman relics have been found here. Salford Hall, locally known as The Nunnery, is an Elizabethan house; from 1808 to 1838 it was the residence of Benedictine nuns, who sought an asylum here during the period of the French Revolution; part of it is still a Catholic chapel, the remainder being occupied as a farmhouse; over the porch is a motto and the date 1602. Park Hall is a red-brick mansion with Bath stone dressings.

Salhouse, pa. and vil., E. Norf., near the Bure, 6 N.E. of Norwich; ac. 2,060; soil of a light, mixed character, overlying marl. The church of All Saints (restored 1881) is E. Eng., with a detached embattled western tower erected in the 15th cent. There are several mural tablets to the family of Ward, formerly of Wolcot. The church retains an hourglass-stand, sanctus-bell, and two ancient stone coffins; it was restored and a south porch built in 1881, and has 170 sittings. There are two Baptist chapels and one for Wesleyans. The charities amount to about £30 a year. At a distance of 2 miles from the railway station are two broads 20 ac. in extent. S. Hall, a castellated mansion of brick of the Elizabethan period, pleasantly situated in a large and well-wooded lawn, contains a fine collection of paintings and works of art.

Saline, pa., q.s. pa. (extending into the pa. of Torryburn), and vil., S.W. Fifes., Sc.; ac. 8,189. The land in the north is moderately fertile; in other parts the soil is thin, resting on a tilly bottom, and there are large tracts of moors affording an abundant supply of peat. The vil. is about 6 N.W. of Dunfermline. The inhabitants are entirely occupied in agriculture. There are traces of ancient towers and Roman camps.

Saline Hill (1,178 ft.), in the north-east of the pa. of Saline (q.v.), S.W. Fifes., Sc., a little north of the vil. of Saline.

Saling, Great, pa. and ancient vil., E. Essex, 7 N.E. of Dunmow; ac. 1,651; soil loam, overlying gravel and clay. The church of St. James is of various periods, and contains some monuments. In the north wall of the nave is a doorway, now blocked up; and in the south wall, near the entrance, is a stoup for holy water. The church possesses an ancient chalice of hammered silver, without date or inscription. The charities are small. The Grove, a fine modern mansion standing in a well-timbered park, and The Old Hall, a well-preserved Elizabethan brick mansion, are seats.

clear streams through most of the streets; but these "canals," as they were locally termed, are now filled up and stopped. The streets intersect each other at right angles, forming a series of quadrangles, called The Chequers, the houses in each quadrangle facing outwards, and the interior laid out in courts and gardens. The market-place, in the centre of the city, is a spacious and handsome square of 2½ ac., surrounded by good shops. S. was incorporated by Henry III., but its charter was confirmed and extended by Queen Anne. The mun. bor. comprises the pas. of S. St. Edmund, S. St. Martin, and S. St. Thomas, with areas of 61 ac., 41 ac., and 36 ac. respectively. Edward III. assembled a Parliament at S. In the reign of Richard III. the Duke of Buckingham was beheaded here, and his headless remains were discovered beneath the floor of the kitchen of the "Saracen's Head" inn. The original cathedral was founded at Old Sarum in 1092 by Bishop Osmund, but the see was translated to New Sarum in 1220. The existing cathedral of St. Mary, situated in a spacious grassy Close fringed with magnificent trees, is a structure of Chilmark stone, quarried about 15 miles from the city, in the purest form of E. Eng., and is the only English cathedral completed in the style and period. The ground plan is perfect, and consists of a nave of ten bays, with aisles and a north porch, a main transept of four bays in each wing, central tower with spire, choir of six bays with aisles, choir transept of three bays in each wing, and an eastern Lady chapel of four bays with aisles; south of the choir transept is an octagonal muniment room, and south of the nave, but detached from it, are the cloisters and chapter-house. The most striking features of the exterior, an uninterrupted view of which can be obtained on every side, are "the western front with its lateral turrets, the superb spire, the large and deep north porch, with a chamber above it, and the two transepts, one at the crossing and the other at the junction of the choir and presbytery." The cathedral was begun in 1220, the foundations having been laid by Bishop Poore on April 28 in that year, and the building was consecrated by Bishop Bridport in the presence of Henry III., and finally dedicated on Lady Day, 1260. During the prelacy of Bishop Shute Barrington (1782–91) the cathedral was repaired and altered and much mutilated by the notorious Wyatt, who demolished the Hungerford and Beauchamp chapels and used up the ornamental portions in the construction of the reredos. At the same time a detached E. Eng. bell-tower was destroyed. The piers of the nave consist of four clustered columns, with as many shafts of Purbeck marble, supporting elegant pointed arches; the triforium has two couplets of trefoiled arches in each bay, with a quatrefoil in the head; the clerestory displays triplets of lancets and the vaulting is plain. The main transept has two peculiar adjuncts in the beautifully-designed arches erected between the arches of the crossing soon after the building of the tower, which had already shown signs of weakness in the north-east transept. Against the western wall of the north-east transept is placed the ancient rood-screen. The north wing retains also a Perp. lavatory, removed from the sacristy, and a double aumbry; in the south wing is a double aumbry and a piscina, combined with parts of ancient doors. The choir retains some E. Eng. stall works, and some stalls and misericordes of the time of Henry VII., and the bishop's throne. Adjoining the south end of the choir transept is an octagonal sacristy and muniment room, where are preserved a paten and chalice, an episcopal ring, a 15th-cent. cope, and a 13th-cent. pastoral staff. The Lady chapel is uniquely divided into three alleys by slender columns of Purbeck marble. In the first bay of this chapel was the shrine of St. Osmund; and in the presbytery are two chapels, and above the altar was the watching-loft. The cloisters form a beautiful quadrangle south of (but detached from) the nave. The cathedral contains but little ancient stained glass, owing largely to the destructiveness of the architect Wyatt, who "threw it by the cart-load into the city ditch." The monuments in the cathedral include those of the following bishops:—Osmund (1099); Roger (1139) and Joscelyne (1184), both with effigies in bas-relief; Richard Poore (1237), altar-tomb and effigy; Robert Bingham (1246), canopied arch with cadaver; William of York (1256), with canopied arch; Giles de Bridport (1263), tomb with effigy and small chantry, enriched with biographical sculptures; Walter De la Wyle (1274); Roger de Mortival (1329), slab with floriated cross; Robert Wyville (1375), with incised brass of the bishop's champion before Sherborne Castle; Richard Metford (1407), effigy under canopy; Richard Beauchamp (1482), altar-tomb; Lionel Woodville (1484) and John Blythe (1500), both altar-tombs; Edmund Audley (1524), chantry; John Salcot or Capon (1555), altar-tomb; John Jewell (1571); John Davenant (1641), mural monument; Seth Ward (1689), tomb with bust; and Walter Kerr Hamilton (1869), tomb with effigy. The slab of the tomb of St. Osmund de Seez, founder of the cathedral of Old Sarum and compiler of the "Sarum Use," was in 1885 fixed in the south aisle of the Lady chapel. The other principal monuments are:—William Longespée, first Earl of Salisbury and son of Fair Rosamond (1226), altar-tomb with effigy; William Longespée, second earl, killed near Cairo (1250) and buried at Acre, effigy; Sir John de Montacute (1389), altar-tomb with effigy; Robert, Lord Hungerford (1459), altar-tomb with effigy; William Wilton, Chancellor of Sarum (1506), altar-tomb; Sir John Cheney, standard-bearer of Henry of Richmond at Bosworth (1509), effigy; Sir T. Gorges (1635), effigy; Lord Stourton (1556), altar-tomb; Edward Seymour, Earl of Hertford (1621), and Lady Katherine his wife (1563), effigies; Sir Robert Hyde, Chief Justice of the King's Bench (1665), mural tablet, with bust; Sir Richard Mompesson (1627) and wife, effigies; Edward Thomas, Lord Wyndham of Finglass, Chancellor and Lord Justice of Ireland (1745), tomb with marble statue of "Hibernia;" James Harris, author of "Hermes" (1780); James Harris, first Earl of Malmesbury (1820); and Sir Richard Colt Hoare, Bart., the antiquary (1838). The monument of Bishop Moberly consists of an arched recess, with gabled and traceried panels. The episcopal effigies include a diminutive one in bas-relief of the 13th cent., found in 1680 near the pulpit; it has no inscription, but has been conjectured to represent a "Boy-Bishop" of the choristers, whose office lasted from the festival of St. Nicholas (the patron saint of boys), Dec. 6, until that of the Holy Innocents, Dec. 28, or till Epiphany. The churchyard, or lawn of the Close, was a place of burial till Bishop Barrington removed to the cloisters all the remains interred here. A broad gravelled and shaded mall, which forms the approach to the great western entrance of the cathedral, and crosses the Close from north to south, is a favourite summer evening promenade. The Close has three gates; that on the south side communicates with Harnham and the contiguous country; that on the north with High Street and the body of the city; and that on the east with St. Ann Street and the road to Southampton; adjoining the north gate is the Matrons' College, founded by Bishop Ward for ten ladies, widows of clergymen of the diocese. The south quarter of the Close is occupied by the Bishop's Palace and gardens, dividing the city from the more ancient vil. of Harnham. The palace is an embattled structure of E. Perp. date, with a chapel and tower of that period, and a hall dating from 1460; in the palace is a series of portraits of bishops, from Brian Duppa (1641–65) to Thomas Burgess (1825–37). The undercroft, built by Bishop Poore, was restored by Bishop Wordsworth (1889). The Church House for the diocese, formerly known as Crane House, was built in the 16th cent. by a wealthy wool-stapler named Crane, whose merchant's mark exists on various parts of the building. The church of St. Martin (restored 1886) is Perp. with an E. Eng. chancel, on the north side of which is a monument to the Swayne family, and a brass (1632). St. Edmund's Church stands in the north-east of the city, and is a handsome edifice of stone of the 15th cent.; it was restored from designs by the late Sir G. Gilbert Scott, R.A. The church of St. Thomas of Canterbury, erected as a chapel-of-ease to the cathedral (1240), is a large Perp. structure; the roof is of oak, handsomely carved and panelled. In the south aisle are two singular monuments, each representing two kneeling figures, erected to the memory of Charles Eyre, Esq., founder of an hospital in this city; under the tower entrance is a rough carving of oak, representing a series of subjects in the lives of the Patriarchs. There is a handsome Catholic church dedicated to St. Osmund, with schools under the care of the Sisters of Charity, and the chief Nonconformist bodies have places of worship. The Theological College, founded by Bishop Hamilton, has accommodation for twenty students, and near it is the Choristers' School. Adjoining the palace ground is the higher-grade school built by Bishop Wordsworth (1889). Other noteworthy educational establishments are the Training College for National Schoolmistresses, the Godolphin High School for Girls, and the School of Science and Art. The Council House (1795) stands in the market-place, and in front of it is a bronze statue of Lord Herbert of Lea (d. 1861). The County Hall (1889) is in Queen Anne style; the interior of the hall is fitted up for theatrical performances, public meetings, etc. There is a commodious Corn Exchange (1859) at the north-west corner of the market-place. The great corn market is on Tuesday, the cattle market every other Tuesday, and a cheese market is held on the second Thursday in each month. Fairs are held on the Monday before April 5, and on the third Tuesday and Wednesday in October. The trade is limited to the necessary supply of the city and of the numerous villages around, whose inhabitants frequent the markets every Tuesday and Saturday. The manufacture of carpets and rugs was established here in 1889; there are also tanneries, breweries, flour-mills, and a boot manufactory. At the junction of Silver Street, the Butcher Row, and Minster Street stands the Poultry Cross, formerly called the Yarn Market, which strongly resembles in its general design the cross at Malmesbury; the whole is surmounted by an open canopied tabernacle, finished with a cross. This building is said to have been erected in the reign of Richard II. (1377–99) as an act of penance for heterodoxy, some accounts describing it as the work of Lawrence de St. Martin, of Wardour Castle, and others attributing it to one of the Earls of Salisbury. Races are held here on two days in May, on the race plain beyond Harnham Hill. The free library dates from 1890. The S. and South Wilts Museum contains local objects of art and antiquity, and geological and other collections; among the local contents is the Giant with his attendant Hob-nob or Hobby horse, which were important features in guild processions in this city, and are the only specimens remaining in the country. The Blackmore Museum (1864) contains objects illustrative of the different phases of the "Stone Age" in various countries, with examples of the primitive use of copper, bronze, and iron. The Halle of John Halle, an old banqueting-hall, is a fine specimen of late 15th-cent. work; the new front harmonises with the style of the old hall, which illustrates in wood and stone all the principal events connected with the Halle, and the life of the original owner. Close under the bridge over the Avon, in a pretty but low situation, stands the Hospital of St. Nicholas, said to have been built in 1220 by Countess Ela, wife of the sixth Earl of Salisbury, for six aged men and as many women, with a small chapel attached. About £500 from various charities is distributed in money and kind. The Victoria Park, distant about ½ mile from the market-place, is the permanent local memorial of the Jubilee of the reign of Queen Victoria (1887). It consists of 16 ac., and has been laid out, part as gardens and the remainder as cricket field, tennis courts, football ground, and a cycling track; an ornamental band-stand, cricket pavilion, shelter, and other buildings have been erected. In Queen Street is a statue to Henry Fawcett, Esq., M.P. (1833–84), Postmaster-General. He was the second son of Alderman William Fawcett, mayor in 1832, who presided over a great dinner of the citizens held in the market-place to celebrate the passing of the Reform Bill.

Salisbury Bank, shoal in the estuary of the Dee, N. Chesh. It extends for a distance of 7 miles, and lies opposite to Thurstaston and West Kirby, a little north-east of Parkgate.

Salisbury Hill. [BATHEASTON.]

Salisbury Plain, undulating tract, S. Wilts., lying chiefly N. and N.W. of Salisbury. It extends about 20 miles by 10, and rises on Westbury Down to 775 ft. The Plain is the southern of the two great chalk divisions in Wilts., the northern being known as Marlborough Downs (q.v.). The southern chalk district extends from Salisbury, in a line bearing north-east, by Amesbury and Sidbury to Easton Hill; thence the chalk ranges westward, with a little inclination to the south as far as Westbury and Warminster; and so returns, in a line bearing south-east, by Heytesbury to Salisbury. All along this border the bolder heights are marked by entrenchments, which overlook the richer country, and served as watch-towers for the ancient people of the Plain. It is traversed by the Avon, Bourne, Wiley, and the southern Avon. No part of this country contains more striking relics of a prehistoric age, or is more distinctly associated with the dawn of English history. Memorial and sepulchral mounds are scattered over it in every direction, and it includes Stonehenge (q.v.). Roman roads and British trackways pass over it; and one great British stronghold, which guarded the southern entrance of the Plain, was adopted by successive conquerors, and became the Roman Sorbiodunum and the Saxon Searo-byrig, and the Old Sarum of later times.

Salisbury, St. Edmund. [SALISBURY.]

Salisbury, St. Martin. [SALISBURY.]

Salisbury, St. Thomas. [SALISBURY.]

Salkeld, Great, pa. and vil. near the Eden, E. Cumb., 5½ N.E. of Penrith; ac. 3,665; soil light gravel, overlying sandy gravel and freestone. The church of St. Cuthbert is an ancient building of stone, originally Norm. It contains an uninscribed Roman altar, dug up in the churchyard about 1890, now used as a piscina and credence-table. There is also a grave-slab, with inscription to Stephen Close (d. 1470), and a monument to Thomas of Coldbeck (d. 1345). In the churchyard is a broken tomb-slab of stone, with male and female effigies. The south entrance to the nave is through an elaborately-ornamented doorway of Norm. date. The tower, built for defence, has five floors, in one of which is a fireplace with incised sepulchral slab on the lintel; several other slabs of various dates are built into the walls of the tower. The pa. contains Wesleyan and Presbyterian chapels. There are traces of a Roman encampment. Nunwick Hall, Nunwick Old Hall, and Wolfa (said to be the place where the last wolf in England was killed) are seats.

Salkeld, Little, tp. and vil. near the junction of three streams, pa. of Addingham (q.v.), E. Cumb., 6 N.E. of Penrith; ac. 1,038. The ancient chapel stood near the river, by the overflowing of which it was washed away. The present chapel of St. Mary was originally a barn. Half a mile from the vil. are the remains of a circle, known as "Long Meg and Her Daughters" (q.v.). There are five caves, called the Grotto or "Lacy's Caves," by the side of the river. S. Hall is a seat.

Sall, pa. and vil., N. Norf., 6 S.W. of Aylsham; ac. 1,802; soil sand and loam, overlying clay and gravel. The church of SS. Peter and Paul (restored 1887) is a noble Perp. building. There are brasses to Thomas Roose (1441) and Catherine his wife, with eight sons and four daughters standing on brackets by their parents; another to John Funteyn (1453) and his wives, Alice, Joan, and Agnes, with three children, but only two effigies of wives and the inscription with a scroll remain. There is an effigy in a shroud of John Brigge (1415); and brass inscriptions to Simon Boleyn, chaplain (1482), and Thomas Hagham, chaplain (1483); and others of 16th-cent. date. There is also a palimpsest brass with inscription to Geoffrey Melman; and on the reverse the head of a lady with braided hair, resting on a cushion, apparently Flemish work. Two other inscriptions commemorate Peter and Margaret Crome, and Catherine Good. The brass of Geoffrey Boleyn (1440), Alice his wife, and ten children is said to be now lost. There remains a monument to Erasmus Earle (1695). S. House is a large mansion of brick, in a well-wooded park of over 200 ac.

Sallagh Braes, ridge of hills, E. co. Antr., Ir., 3 N.W. of Larne. They form a very fine amphitheatre of hills overlooking Carncastle.

Salmonby, pa. and vil. on the Steeping, S.E. Lincs., 5½ N.E. of Horncastle; ac. 991; soil mostly sandy loam, overlying clay and sandstone rock. The church of St. Margaret, originally Perp., was almost rebuilt in 1871; the chancel retains a piscina. William of Wainfleet (d. 1486) was formerly rector. Here is a chalybeate spring, with properties similar to those of the waters of Tunbridge Wells.

Salmon Leap. [LEIXLIP.]

Salop. [SHROPSHIRE.]

Salperton, pa. and vil., E. Gloucs., 9 E.S.E. of Cheltenham; ac. 1,210; soil and subsoil loamy. All Saints' Church (restored 1886) is chiefly Perp., but the chancel arch and windows are Norm. S. Park is a seat.

Salrock, pass at the head of Little Killary Bay, N. co. Galway, Ir., 6 N.W. of Kylemore. The pass is said to have been formed by the struggles of St. Roc, who had been chained by the Devil when he was asleep.

Salsburgh, vil., pa. of Shotts (q.v.), N.E. Lanarks., Sc., 5 E. of Holytown.

Salt, eccl. pa. and vil. on the Trent, pa. of Stafford SS. Mary and Chad (q.v.), Mid Staffs., 4¼ N.N.E. of Stafford. The church of St. James was built 1842, in E. Eng. style; the font is Norm. There is a Methodist New Connexion chapel.

Saltaire, large industrial vil., pa. of and 3½ N.W. from Bradford (q.v.), W.R. Yorks. It was entirely created and built by the enterprise of the late Sir Titus Salt, Bart.; the area of S. mill is computed at 5½ ac., while the several floors, warehouses, and sheds measure 13 ac.; the weaving shed is covered by a hollow girder roof, supported by 65 iron pillars, covering an area of 8,400 square yards, with 1,200 looms; the works employ 3,500 hands. There are good roads extending through the estate. There is a Congregational church, in Italian style; also a Wesleyan chapel. In the centre of this place are baths and washhouses, erected in 1862. There are comfortable almshouses with an infirmary attached, available for residents within 3 miles; pensions are granted to deserving aged poor residing with their friends. S. Park, presented by Sir Titus Salt for the recreation of the inhabitants, was opened in 1871, and contains 14 ac. of land, partly arranged as cricket, croquet, and lawn tennis grounds and bowling greens. The Salt schools comprise an Institute and High School for boys and girls, and a technical school; the building is in Italian style, and is arranged in two blocks, having an extensive frontage to Albert Road. The Institute contains a magnificent hall and large reading-room, lecture theatre, gymnasium, numerous class-rooms, and a large library.

Salt and Enson, tp., pa. of Stafford SS. Mary and Chad (q.v.), Mid Staffs., 4 N.N.E. of Stafford; ac. 1,609. [SALT.]

Saltash, mun. bor., eccl. pa., and tp., pa. of St. Stephens by Saltash (q.v.), S.E. Cornw., on the western bank of the Tamar (which separates it from Devon), 5 N.W. of Plymouth; ac. 177. The town is built on a steep, rocky acclivity, the old houses rising tier above tier to the summit of the hill at Longstone, from which point the prospect is very fine, embracing on the south-east the whole harbour of Plymouth, with its breakwater, the Hamoaze and its wooded shores and Mount Edgcumbe, while at the rear are the Dartmoor Hills, and the rivers Tamar and Tavy winding their way down to the sea. The town was first incorporated in the reign of John, and returned two members to Parliament from the time of Edward VI. until its disfranchisement in 1832. Clarendon, the historian, represented S. in the Long Parliament in 1640, and in 1685 Edmund Waller the poet, then eighty years old, sat for this place. S. received a new charter of incorporation in 1885. The Royal Albert Bridge, which carries the Cornwall Railway across the Tamar, was erected 1857–59, from the designs of Isambard K. Brunel. It consists of two spans, each of 455 ft.; the centre pier rests on the solid rock, and is carried up to a height of 240 ft. from the foundation; the span is of oval tubing 17 ft. by 12 ft., the ends being connected by chains forming a parabolic curve, from which the roadway is suspended at a height of 100 ft. above high-water mark; the whole structure is strengthened and steadied by vertical struts and diagonal braces. It was opened by Prince Albert on May 2, 1859. The effect of this railway on the commerce of the co. has been very great, owing to the rapid communication it offers with London, a market being thus provided for the vegetables grown in Cornwall, which are produced in this co. at an earlier period of the year than in any other co. in England. South of the bridge is a steam ferry. The church of the eccl. pa. of SS. Nicholas and Faith is an ancient building of stone, mainly of the Norm. period, but with portions of Dec. and Perp. work. In the north wall of the transept are three stout piers and two closed arches, which seem to mark the former junction of the church with the monastic building to which it belonged. The bosses of the roof display the arms of Richard (Plantagenet), Earl of Poitou and Cornwall, and those of Edmund, his son and successor. In the wall of the building is an inscribed tablet recording its renovation in 1689; the monuments are all of modern date. The Baptists and Wesleyans have chapels. The Guild-hall, situated in the principal street, is a plain building, supported on granite pillars; the open space beneath the hall is used as a market. There are charities amounting to £16 yearly. The fisheries have been much injured by impurities from mines at the head of the river Tamar. Cattle sales are held on the first Tuesday in each month. St. Barnabas Cottage Hospital and Convalescent Home, at Port View, is a building of red brick with stone facings and decorative work. S. is a nursery for seamen, and furnishes a great number of men and boys for the Royal Navy. A regatta for rowing-boats is held here annually on Coronation Day (June 28); the watermen of the port are celebrated for their skill, and have carried off prizes at regattas round the coast. River steamers ply hourly between here and Devonport.

Saltburn by the Sea, small to. and watering-place, pa. of Marske near Redcar (q.v.), N.R. Yorks., 19 N.W. of Whitby. It is situated about 150 ft. above the sea; a good carriage road and various paths lead to the sands, and there is also an inclined tramway from the sands to the top of the cliffs and leading directly to the pier. This place is noted for the salubrity of its climate and its picturesque scenery, both coast and inland, which render it very suitable for a watering-place. There is a firm sandy beach, extending along the coast about 10 miles from Saltburn to the mouth of the Tees; the bathing is good and safe. Near the to. the North Eastern Railway crosses a valley by a fine viaduct of eleven arches. The to. has a modern church and several Nonconformist places of worship. The convalescent home was founded in 1867; the buildings were completed in 1872. The brine and swimming baths were erected 1890–91, and are of red brick and terra-cotta, in Queen Anne style; at one angle of the principal front is a lofty square tower containing the tanks for storing the brine, which is conveyed in specially-constructed tank-waggons from the Cleveland brine wells, a few miles from Saltburn. The Saltburn and Cleveland Institute was opened in 1888, and consists of reading room, smoking, and chess rooms. There are extensive pleasure grounds, where a band plays during the season, and at the sea end is the Assembly Hall, which is fitted with a stage for theatrical performances; these gardens are tastefully laid out in terraces, lawns, and parterres, extending down to the edge of the stream which runs through the grounds, and contain a spring of mineral water said to resemble the springs of Harrogate.

Saltby, pa. and vil. in the Wold Hills and on the Salt Way, an ancient Roman road on the borders of the co., E. Leics., 9 N.E. of Melton Mowbray; ac. 2,680; soil clay and limestone rock, overlying stiff clay and rock. The small river Eye has its source in this pa., and there is a chalybeate spring. The church of St. Peter (restored 1885) is E. Eng. with Perp. additions. Here is a Wesleyan Methodist chapel.

Saltcoats, seaport to., pas. of Ardrossan and Stevenston, W. Ayrs., Sc. The to. is much resorted to in the summer by visitors from all quarters, on account of its facilities for sea-bathing. The harbour here was constructed for the shipment of coal from the extensive fields in the immediate neighbourhood. The shipping and shipbuilding trade of the port has, since 1852, been for the most part transferred to the harbour and docks at Ardrossan. The making of salt created at one time a very large trade, but the manufacture ceased in 1890. S. is, nevertheless, still a flourishing town. Its close proximity to Ardrossan on the one side, with its extensive harbours, docks, and public works, and to Stevenston with its foundries on the other, and the collieries in the neighbourhood of the town, have not only improved the trade of the place, but increased the population and stimulated building to a very large extent. Five churches and three new manses have been built of late years, besides the Free Church school and other public schools. The Town House, in Countess Street, was built in 1892. The Albert Hall and Good Templars' Hall are in Green Street, and in Canal Street is a volunteer drill hall.

Saltee Islands, two islands (Great S. I. and Little S. I.), pa. of Kilmore (q.v.), off the south coast of co. Wex., Ir., 10 S.W. of Carnsore Point. They were formerly considered very dangerous, but are now protected by a moored lightship with a fixed double light.

Salter and Eskat, pa., W. Cumb., 3½ N.E. of Cleator; ac. 637; soil chiefly light loam, overlying gravel and freestone. Limestone and iron-ore abound in the district. S. Hall, built in 1653 (now occupied as a farmhouse), is an ancient residence, with a good staircase of carved oak.

Salterforth, tp., pa. of and ½ S. from Barnoldswick (q.v.), W.R. Yorks.; ac. 1,721. There is a mission school church, and some denominational Salterhebble, eccl. pa., pa. of and part of Halifax (q.v.), W.R. Yorks. The church of All Saints (restored 1874) is in E. Eng. style, and has a highly-decorated interior.

Salterns, Great (formerly extra-parochial), pa., Portsea Island (q.v.), S. Hants; ac. 337, with 186 water. Great S. House, a seat, lies about 4 N.E. of Portsmouth.

Saltersford-with-Kettleshulme, eccl. pa., pa. of Prestbury (q.v.), E. Chesh., 5½ N.E. of Macclesfield. The chapel of St. John the Baptist (1733) is a small plain stone building.

Salterstown, coast pa. on Dundalk Bay, Ferrard bar., E. co. Louth, Ir., 4½ N.E. of Dunleer; ac. 1,047.

Salters Way, ancient road, N.E. Durham, diverging south from Wearmouth in several directions.

Salterton (1). [BUDLEIGH SALTERTON.]

Salterton (2), or Salteston, ha., pa. of and 2 S. from Durnford (q.v.), S.E. Wilts.

Saltfleet, or Saltfleet Haven, coast vil. and bathing resort, pa. of Skidbrook (q.v.), E. Lincs., 3 N. of Saltfleetby railway station. S. was formerly a considerable port, and in 1359 furnished two ships and forty-nine men for the invasion of Brittany. Here are Wesleyan and Free Methodist chapels, and a coastguard station with rocket apparatus. In the neighbourhood are many springs of excellent water, and off the coast is a valuable oyster-bed.

Saltfleetby All Saints, pa. and vil., E. Lincs., about 9 E. by N. of Louth; ac. 1,164; soil rich loam, overlying clay. The church of All Saints (restored 1873) is chiefly E. Eng., with some Trans. work and insertions of later periods. In the chantry is an E. Eng. canopy for a triptych, and an ancient slab with an almost effaced inscription in Norman-French. Some fragments of old stained glass remain. Here is a Primitive Methodist chapel. The charities are devoted to the poor and to educational purposes, and there are almshouses for four poor widows. The Newcomens, ancestors of T. Newcomen (b. 1633), the inventor of the steam engine, long resided here.

Saltfleetby St. Clement, coast pa. and scattered vil., E. Lincs., 10 E. of Louth by road; ac. 1,030 land (principally rich bullock-feeding pasturage) and 1,175 water. The church of St. Clement, built early in the 13th cent., was taken down in 1885–86, and a new church built in E. Eng. style. The beautiful E. Eng. arcade of five arches has been removed to the new church.

Saltfleetby St. Peter, pa. and vil. with railway station (Saltfleetby), E. Lincs., 8 E. by N. of Louth; ac. 2,147; soil loam, overlying clay. The church of St. Peter (1877), in E. Eng. style, is an exact reproduction, except the tower, of an ancient church, the tower of which still stands, and is sometimes used as a cemetery chapel. In the old burial-ground are early incised slabs to Maria, wife of William Pomard, and to Michael Gros (d. 1380). The Wesleyans and Primitives have places of worship. S. House is a seat, with a prospect tower commanding fine views.

Saltford, pa. and vil. on the Avon, Somerset, 5 W.N.W. of Bath; ac. 880; soil various. The church of St. Michael (restored 1851) is an ancient building of stone. Here is a Primitive Methodist chapel and a meeting-house for Brethren.

Salthill, ha., partly in pa. of Stoke Poges, but principally in that of Farnham Royal (q.v.), S. Bucks., about 1 N.W. of Slough. The mound here known as "Montem" was the scene of an ancient annual festivity held by the boys of Eton College, but discontinued since 1847.

Salt Hole, dell, E. co. Antr., Ir., near Ballycarry. Here, in 1597, the governor of Carrickfergus was captured by James McDonnell.

Salthouse, pa. near the seashore, E. Norf., 10 W. of Cromer; ac. 1,559 and 55 water; soil chiefly light, overlying marl. The surface of this pa. is undulating, and the higher grounds command fine sea views. About 500 ac. of marsh, belonging to this pa. and the adjoining pas. of Cley and Kelling, were in 1851 drained and embanked; but about 1863 the banks were broken, and have not since been repaired. The church of St. Nicholas is a large and lofty Perp. building; several of the old oak poppy-heads of the benches remain. There are places of worship for the Free and the Primitive Methodists. On the east of the heath is an earthwork, which may be roughly described as a raised bank, much in the form of an old-fashioned figure of 6, with a mound in the centre, perhaps 6 or 8 ft. higher than the embankment; the entrance is on the north side, towards the sea.

Salthrop, ha., pa. of and 2 S.W. from Wroughton (q.v.), N.E. Wilts. S. House is a seat.

Saltley, eccl. pa., pa. of Aston (q.v.), N. Warws., forming a north-east suburb of Birmingham, and within the parl. limits of that bor. The church of St. Saviour is a large cruciform building of stone. Here are extensive works for the manufacture of railway carriages and waggons; these establishments are among the most complete in the kingdom for the supply of all kinds of railway rolling-stock. Here also are the works of the Gas Department of the Birmingham Corporation. The Worcester, Hereford, and Lichfield Diocesan Training College for elementary schools dates from 1852; connected with this institution is a model and practising school. The Birmingham Reformatory for Boys was built in 1854.

Salt, Lough, lake, N. co. Don., Ir., 5 W. of Milford. It is 1,000 ft. above the sea-level, is said to be never frozen, and has a depth of 240 ft. It is at the foot of Salt Mountain (1,546 ft.), and from this fact it derives its name—the ancient name, Lough-agus-Alt (= "the Lough and the Crag"), having been corrupted into Lough Salt.

Saltmarsh (1), pa., N.E. Herefords., 3 N.E. of Bromyard; ac. 129. Here is S. Castle, a fine edifice in the Dec. style, which has been renovated

Salt Mountain. [SALT LOUGH.]

Saltney, tp. and vil., pa. of Hawarden (q.v.), S.E. Flints., 2 W.S.W. of Chester; ac. 2,302. S. is situated beside the Dee, on land which in old days formed a marshy tract extending beside the upper part of its estuary, but was reclaimed by the River Dee Company, pursuant to an Act of Parliament passed in 1732. Its ancient name was Morfa Caerleon. It passed into the hands of the monks of Basingwerk, who used it as grazing land. Since 1860 a considerable vil. has grown up, chiefly in connection with the works of the Great Western Railway and the shipping industry. The church of St. Mark dates from 1893. The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have chapels. S. has a wharf and docks, and carries on a considerable trade in the produce of Wales and the North Midlands. The industrial establishments include railway-carriage works, ironworks, candle-works, manure-works, and brickworks. Henry II. encamped here when marching against Owen Gwynedd in 1157.

Salt, North, bar., N. co. Kildare, Ir.; ac. 21,918. It is bounded on the north by co. Meath, on the east by co. Dub., on the south by South Salt and North Naas bars., and on the west by the bar. of Ikeathy and Oughterany. It contains Maynooth, Celbridge, and Leixlip, and is traversed by the Midland Great Western Railway.

Salton (1), pa., tp., and vil., N.R. Yorks., 10 N.W. of Malton; ac. of pa. 2,761, of tp. 1,748; soil loam, overlying clay. The church of St. John of Beverley (restored 1881) is Norm., with an E. Eng. west tower.

Salton (2), pa. on the Tyne, S.W. Haddings., Sc.; ac. 3,812. The pa. lies chiefly in a fertile valley on the north side of the Lammermoor Hills, bounded on the north, west, and south by the Tyne and the Birns Water, and contains the vils. of East and West S. The pa. church, a cruciform building with a tower and spire 90 ft. high, was almost rebuilt in 1805. Gilbert Burnet, Bishop of Salisbury in 1689, had S. for his first benefice (1665), and it was here that he used the only book of common prayer known to have existed in the Episcopal Church of Scotland during the reign of Charles II. This eminent churchman and historian bequeathed a valuable library to the pa., besides a considerable sum for educating, clothing, and apprenticing thirty poor children; the proceeds of the bequests amount now to about £96 per annum. Andrew Fletcher, a political writer and pupil of Bishop Burnet, was born in this pa. in 1655, was some time a member of the Scottish Parliament, afterwards took part in the rebellion under the Duke of Monmouth (1685), for which he suffered exile, returning in the year 1688 with William III., and was subsequently a bitter opponent of the union of the two kingdoms, and died in 1716. S. Hall, a mansion in a fine park on the western border of the pa., is a seat.

Salton, East, vil., pa. of Salton (q.v.), S.W. Haddings., Sc., 5 S.W. of Haddington.

Saltrick, creek, pa. of Santon (q.v.), S.E. I. of M., about 2 N.E. of Castletown Bay.

Salt, South, bar., N. co. Kildare, Ir.; ac. 16,777; it is bounded on the north by North Salt bar., on the east by co. Dub., and on the south and west by North Naas bar. It contains Kill and Kilteel, and is traversed by the Great Southern and Western Railway.

Salt Way, ancient Roman road, which was divided into two portions—the Upper Salt Way and the Lower Salt Way. The Upper road ran from Droitwich in Worcs. in a N.E. direction, over the Lickey Hills to Birmingham, and thence to the coast of Lincs.; the Lower road ran southward through Glouc. to the Hants coast.

Saltwick, ha., pa. of and 3 W. from Stannington (q.v.), S.E. Northumb.

Saltwood, pa. and vil., E. Kent, 1 N.W. of Hythe; ac. 2,588; soil sandy loam, overlying limestone. The church of SS. Peter and Paul is Norm. and E. Eng. In the north aisle is a brass to Thomas Brokill (d. 1437) and Joan his wife; in the chancel are brasses with effigies to John Verien, rector of Sandhurst (c. 1370); and to Ann, wife of William Muston (d. 1496), with a demi-figure of an angel holding a heart; there are also remains of a large brass at least 6 ft. long, and a remarkably fine old chest with tracery of the Dec. or Perp. period. The font and some wood-carving are very ancient. The precise origin of S. Castle is unknown, but the site is supposed to have been occupied by a fortress from the earliest times. Hugo de Montfort, a knight who accompanied William I., held the castle of the Archbishop of Canterbury by right of knight's service. It was practically rebuilt by Archbishop Courtenay about 1382, and used by him as his chief residence. It was completely restored in 1882; the fine double gate-house was included in the restoration, and a new block of buildings erected behind. Brock Hill Park and Sandling Park are also seats. The American gardens of the former contain some very valuable American and East Indian plants and shrubs.

Salvington, ha., pa. of and ½ N. from West Tarring (q.v.), S.W. Sussex. It was the birthplace of John Selden, and the cottage in which he was born, known as "Lacies," still exists.

Salwarpe (1), pa. and small vil. on the Droitwich Canal and the Salwarpe, Mid Worcs., 5½ N. of Worcester; ac. 1,848; soil marl, overlying marl and gravel. The pa. is undulating and, like most of the surrounding country, well wooded, chiefly with elm and oak. The church of St. Michael (restored 1885) is chiefly Norm.; the aisles are Dec. and the tower Perp. Each aisle had chantries; the south aisle still retains a piscina and three recessed arches, and the north aisle a trefoil-headed niche. In the north wall of the chancel is the recumbent figure of a priest, supposed by some to represent William Richepot, rector (1367–1401), who founded a chantry here. On the opposite wall is a Jacobean monument with effigies to Thomas Talbot (1613), his wife, and their children. The ancient sedilia remain, and there are traces of wall-painting, including the figure of a bishop, supposed to represent St. Dunstan as Bishop of Worcester. A clock commemorates Queen Victoria's Jubilee (1887). The communion plate is in part Elizabethan. The charities are small. Chawson (or Chawston) is an Elizabethan mansion, now occupied as a farmhouse. S. Court, a large half-timbered structure (formerly the seat of the Talbots), is also a farmhouse. The national school has a small endowment.

Salwarpe (2), river, Mid Worcs., rises about 1 E. of Bromsgrove, and flows in a S.W. direction for about 12 miles (passing Stoke Prior, Droitwich, and Salwarpe) to the Severn, which it joins about 1 mile above Claines.

Salwick, ha., pa. of Kirkham (q.v.), N. Lancs., about 6 W. of Preston. [CLIFTON-WITH-SALWICK.]

Samares, bay, south-east of Jersey, Channel Islands, between St. Aubin Bay and St. Clement Bay, about 1¾ S.E. of St. Helier. S. Manor House is in the vicinity. S. Marsh stretches along the shore from Le Nez Point some distance towards St. Helier.

Sambourne, tp. and vil., pa. of and 2 N.W. from Coughton (q.v.), S.W. Warws.; ac. 2,218. Many of the inhabitants are engaged in the needle trade. There is a parish room, built in 1892.

Sambrook, eccl. pa., pas. of Chetwynd and Cheswardine (q.v.), N.E. Salop, 5 N. of Newport. The church of St. Luke (1856) is in Gothic style.

Samlesbury, eccl. pa., tp., and vil. on the Ribble, pa. of Blackburn (q.v.), N.E. Lancs., extending from 2½ to 6 E.N.E. of Preston. The church of St. Leonard the Minor (restored 1885) was built in 1096, and rebuilt in 1558 of stone. The fragments of stained glass formerly in various windows were collected and placed in one window at the west end of the nave. In the baptistery, at the west end of the south aisle, is a Norm. font; in the north aisle is a chained Bible dated 1608, and an ancient helmet, sword, and shield belonging to one of the Southworths. The pews are of oak, one having the armorial bearings of Sir Henry Hoghton, of Hoghton Tower, and dated 1678. There is also an ancient oak chest. St. Mary's Catholic Chapel dates from 1818. The charities are considerable. Here is a paper mill. S. Hall, a noble manorial timbered mansion, erected in the 13th cent. and restored in 1532 and in 1864, is a seat. It was moated round until the formation of the new road. The great hall or banqueting room has a fine open timber roof and a minstrels' gallery. The exterior of the edifice is ornamented with heads of carved wood, and the hall is altogether remarkable, not only for its rare antiquity and beauty, but for the quantity of timber used in its construction. One of the bays formerly constituted a chapel; it still retains a piscina, but is now used as a morning room.

Samore, mountain (1,430 ft.), N.E. co. Sligo, Ir., 5 N.E. of Sligo town.

Sampford Arundell, pa. and vil., S.W. Somerset, 2¾ S.W. of Wellington; ac. 1,105; soil rich loam, overlying clay and sand. The church of the Holy Cross is Perp., and contains a marble monument to Christopher Baker, High Sheriff of the county in 1724, and also memorials to various families and former vicars of the pa.; the north aisle retains a holy-water stoup. Easterland House, Marlands, Werescote, and Woolcombe are seats.

Sampford Brett, pa. and vil., N.W. Somerset, 15 N.W. of Taunton; ac. 932; soil rich sandy loam with some clay, overlying marl. The church of St. George (restored 1835) is Dec. In the vestry is an altar-tomb with recumbent effigy of a cross-legged knight in full armour, said to represent one of the Brits, by which family this manor was held from the time of Henry I. for a considerable period. Richard Brito was one of the four knights concerned in the murder of Becket. The figure of a woman carved upon a bench-end at the bottom of the nave, with two children on either side of her feet, is said to represent Florence, wife of John Wyndham (d. 1562). There are various later memorials.

Sampford Courtney, pa. and vil., N. Dev., 5 N.E. of Okehampton; ac. 7,498; soil red loam and clay, overlying skillett. The church of St. Andrew is a Perp. building, with a finely-carved oak roof, hidden by plaster. The charities are small. Here are several ancient crosses. Stone is largely quarried.

Sampford, Great (or Sanford), pa. and vil., N. Essex, 8 S.E. of Saffron Walden; ac. 2,182; soil loam, overlying clay. The church of St. Michael is E. Perp., with chancel of the Dec. period and fitted with stone stalls; there are several memorials here to persons who died in the 17th and 18th cents. The Baptists have a chapel. A sum of £200 was bequeathed to the poor of this pa. and Sampford, Little, pa. and vil., N. Essex, 9 S.E. of Saffron Walden; ac. 2,727; soil sandy loam, overlying clay. The church of St. Mary the Virgin is chiefly Perp., but with some portions of Norm. date. The chancel, which retains a piscina, is fitted with stalls, and on the walls are inscriptions to Sir Edward Green (d. 1550) and Margerye his wife (d. 1530), and a monument (with effigies) to William Tweedy and his wife Mabel (d. 1605). In the north aisle are several monuments to the family of Peck, of which the most magnificent is a tomb about 12 ft. high, with an effigy of fine workmanship, lying on a mattress, and inscribed above to Bridget, wife of William Peck, of S. Hall (d. 1712). The aggregate amount of charities from several sources is £9, which is distributed in coats to poor men; the interest on a charity of £200, for the pas. of Great and Little S., amounts to about 55s. each, and is distributed yearly to the poor. S. Hall is a seat.

Sampford Peverell, pa. and vil., N.E. Dev., 5 E. of Tiverton; ac. 2,154; soil sandy, overlying rock and gravel. The church of St. John the Baptist (restored 1864) is E. Eng. and Dec.; the south aisle and porch was added in 1498 by Margaret Beaufort, Countess of Richmond and Derby, and mother of Henry VII.; the font is Norm.; in the chancel is a mutilated effigy of a knight, supposed to be Sir Henry Peverell (c. 1259), and a mural monument with brass to Margaret, wife of Sir Amias Powlett (d. 1602), keeper of Mary Queen of Scots. There is a Wesleyan chapel. The charities amount to over £50 yearly. There was formerly a castle here belonging to the Peverells. A cattle fair is held on the Monday before the last Wednesday in April.

Sampford Spiney, pa. and vil., S.W. Dev., 4 S.E. of Tavistock; ac. 1,274; soil loam and gravel. The church of St. Mary is a Perp. building.

Samphire Island, Little. [LITTLE SAMPHIRE ISLAND.]

Samphrey, uninhabited island, pa. of Dingwall (q.v.), Shetland Islands, Sc., 1 S.W. of Yell island. It rises to nearly 100 ft. above the sea-level.

Sampson Island, one of the Scilly Islands, lying to the south of Bryher (q.v.). A barrow opened here yielded the only perfect kistvaen found in Cornwall. Walter Besant chose this island as the scene of his novel "Armorel."

Samson's Ribs. [ARTHUR'S SEAT.]

Samuelston, vil. on left bank of the Tyne, pa. of Gladsmuir (q.v.), N.W. Haddings., Sc., 3½ S.W. of Haddington.

Sancreed, pa. and vil., S.W. Cornw., 4 W. by S. of Penzance; ac. 4,471; soil clay-slate, overlying marl. The church of San Creed or Sancta Crida (restored) dates chiefly from the 15th cent. The rood-stairs, piscina, and stoup remain; some carving on the rood-screen is possibly Spanish. During the restoration the remains of a Norm. font were found. On the churchyard wall is the circular head of a cross, discovered in a ditch close by; and near the vicarage gates the quatrefoiled head of another has been erected on its original shaft, recently found in the south aisle. In the churchyard is a fine cross, incised with a lily, the emblem of the Virgin. In the pa. are Wesleyan and Bible Christian chapels. The chief antiquities are two logan-stones, a series of perfect British caves, and an ancient circular fortification at Caer Bran, now ruinous.

Sancton, pa. and vil., E.R. Yorks., 2 S.E. of Market Weighton; ac. 4,478; soil loam, overlying chalk and sand. The church of All Saints was rebuilt 1869–71. The Wesleyans have a chapel, and the school has a small endowment. There is a Roman amphitheatre in the neighbourhood, and Anglo-Saxon ornaments and urns have been found.

Sancton and Houghton, tp. and small vil., pa. of Sancton (q.v.), E.R. Yorks.; ac. 3,112. Adjoining H. Hall, a seat, are a Roman Catholic chapel (1829) and a school (1801).

Sand, ha., pa. of Wedmore (q.v.), N.W. Somerset, about 7 W. of Wells.

Sanda, small island at west side of the entrance of the Firth of Clyde, pa. of Southend (q.v.), S. Args., Sc., about 10 S.E. of Campbeltown. It is 1¼ miles in length and ¾ mile in breadth, and has a hilly surface running up to 405 ft. There are remains of an ancient chapel, and a lighthouse, with light visible 17 miles.

Sandabay, cove on the west side of Combe Martin Bay, N. Dev., about 1 mile from Combe Martin.

Sandall, Long, formerly a tp., pa. of Kirk Sandall (q.v.), with which it is now amalgamated, 3 N.E. of Doncaster, W.R. Yorks. In the days of the old corporation of Doncaster this place was famous for the municipal fishing excursions made to it.

Sandal Magna, extensive pa., tp., and small to., pleasantly situated on the south side of the vale of the Calder, W.R. Yorks., about 2 S.S.E. of Wakefield; ac. of pa. 7,694, of tp. 1,617; soil loamy, overlying sand on sandstone rock. The Barnsley Canal passes through the pa. The church of St. Helen (restored 1888) is a cruciform building of stone, of Norm. and later periods. The font bears the date 1662 and on two oak stalls are carvings in wood of the Percy badge; there are monuments of the 17th and 18th cents. The school and almshouses were erected, with a house for the master, and endowed in 1686 by Richard Taylor; since then there has been a bequest by Alderman Scholey of £10,000, half as an endowment for the school and half for the poor, and by a new scheme made in 1880 these foundations are now administered as one foundation under the name of Taylor and Scholey's Endowed School. The sum of £4,484 14s. 4d. was invested in Consols, the income of which is distributed among 50 poor parishioners, and the weekly sum of 8s. to two poor widows. Another charity of about £84 a year is applied partly to apprenticing and paying school-fees of poor children; and Hardcastle's dole produces £9 14s. 7d. yearly, payable out of the great tithe to the poor. Here was once a formidable castle, restored about 1320 by John Plantagenet, stood this celebrated baronial mansion. The castle grounds were presented to the town in 1888, to be used as a recreation ground or pleasure park. Kettlethorpe Hall is a stone mansion situated in a hollow; within its grounds stands the old front of the chapel from Wakefield Bridge, which was taken down in 1847.

Sanday (1), island, N.E. Ork., Sc., 9 N.N.E. of Kirkwall; ac. 13,498; soil light and sandy. S. comprises the pas. of Lady (q.v.) and Cross and Burness (q.v.). It lies between North Ronaldshay on the north-east, Stronsay on the south-east, and Eday on the south-west. It is extremely irregular in outline, extending about 13 N.E. and S.W., with a width varying from ½ mile to 4½ miles. The surface is mostly flat, but in the west is a ridge rising to a height of upwards of 170 ft. Otterswick (q.v.) is the principal inlet, affording safe anchorage for small craft. The island is studded with small lakes. The antiquities include several brochs and ruined chapels, and a collection of vitrified cairns on Els Ness.

Sanday (2), small island, pa. of Small Isles (q.v.), Inner Hebrides, N. Args., Sc., 32 W.N.W. of Arisaig; ac. 578. S. lies about 3 W.N.W. of Rum, enclosing Canna Harbour on the south-east side. It is about 1⅜ mile long from east to west, with a mean breadth of about ½ mile. At low tide a belt of sand connects it with the island of Canna (q.v.). The north part of the island is mostly low-lying, but towards both east and west it ends in bold and lofty cliffs.

Sandbach, pa., tp., and mkt. to. (TH.), S.E. Chesh., about 5 N.E. of Crewe; ac. of pa. 16,310, of tp. 2,694. Some of the streets in the more ancient parts are narrow, but since the increase of manufactures the thoroughfares have been considerably improved. The to. is remarkably clean and the houses well built. The church of St. Mary, situated on an eminence, is in Perp. style, and contains some modern monuments. There are also Catholic, Wesleyan, United, and Primitive Methodist, and Congregational chapels. The new Town Hall and Market Hall (1889) is a red-brick building with stone dressings, and has a square clock-turret. The old town hall was demolished in 1891. The other public buildings are the Literary and Scientific Institution (1857), in Perp. style; the Temperance Hall, the County Police and Fire Stations, and the Savings Bank (1854), in Elizabethan style. The chief trade is in salt, chemicals, and fustian-cutting. Boots and shoes are also manufactured, and there are brine springs, extensive salt-works, and steam and water corn mills. Fairs are held on Easter Tuesday, the first Thursday after Sept. 11, and Dec. 28. This last is a great cattle and pleasure fair, and on the same day is a statute fair for hiring servants. In the market-place are two ancient obelisks, the faces of which are covered with rude figures and scrolls of foliage. Amongst the former may be distinguished the Birth of Jesus and the Crucifixion. They are said to date from the 7th cent. Sandbach Old Hall is a fine timber-framed building, now used as an inn. The consolidated charities amount to about £2,000 a year, out of which about £750 a year is paid to the grammar school. There are also almshouses for twenty persons (men or women), each of whom has an allowance of 6s. weekly.

Sandbach Heath, eccl. pa., pa. of Sandbach (q.v.), S. Chesh., about 4¾ N.E. of Crewe. The church of St. John the Evangelist (1861) is in the E. Eng. style.

Sandbank, q.s. pa. and vil., pa. of Dunoon and Kilmun (q.v.), S.E. Args., Sc., 3 N. by W. of Dunoon. S. is pleasantly situated on the west side of Holy Loch. It affords great facilities for sea-bathing, and has recently become a favourite summer resort. The vil. has a pier, and there is communication by steamer with Greenock and Glasgow. The Established and Free churches are modern edifices.

Sanderay, island, pa. of Barra (q.v.), Outer Hebrides, Invs., Sc. It lies about 5 S.E. of Barra, and is separated from Vatersay by S. Sound. It is about 2 miles long and of equal breadth, and consists of a hill of gneiss.

Sanderay Sound. [SANDERAY.]

Sanderstead, pa. and vil., E. Surrey, 3 S. of Croydon; ac. 2,241; soil gravel and sand, overlying chalk. The church of All Saints (restored 1846) is E. Eng. There are several interesting monuments, one to John Ownstead (d. 1600), servant of Queen Elizabeth, and an altar-tomb with effigy to Maria Bedell (d. 1655); also some good mural monuments. The charities are small. Purley Bury, 1 N.W., was once the residence of Horne Tooke.

Sandford (1), pa. and vil. on the Creedy, Mid Dev., 9½ N.W. of Exeter; ac. 7,698; soil and subsoil chiefly loam. The church of St. Swithin (restored 1848) is Gothic, and contains a 17th-cent. monument to a member of the Davie family and an extremely curious brass to Mary Dowrich (d. 1604). There is a Congregational chapel. The charities amount to over £100 yearly, and the parochial school has an endowment. Cattle fairs are held on the third Monday in March and the Monday after July 26th. Among the seats in the pa. are Bremridge, Creedy Park, Gays, and Town Barton.

Sandford (2). [SANDFORD-ON-THAMES, SANDFORD ST. MARTIN.]

Sandford (3), vil., pa. of and 1½ N.W. from Warcop (q.v.), N.E. Westmd. There are remains of an ancient chapel at a spot called Hall Well. Near a stream there was an earthwork encampment, and by the old Roman road three tumuli, the largest of which was opened in 1766 and an iron urn discovered. S. Hall, once a seat, is now a farmhouse.

Sandford (4), vil., pa. of and 4 S. from Morden (q.v.), S.E. Dors. In the neighbourhood are several barrows. There is a seat of the same name.

Sandford, Dry, with Cothill. [DRY SANDFORD WITH COTHILL.]

Sandford-on-Thames, pa. and vil. on the Isis, S. Oxon, 2½ S. of Oxford; ac. 943; soil loam, overlying clay. The church of St. Andrew (restored 1865) is Norm., and was originally built soon after the Conquest; the walls are those of the original building, and in the nave the earliest portions are the north and south doors and a Norm. window. Over the reading-desk is a curious carving in alabaster (dug up in 1723, supposed to be 15th cent.) representing the Assumption of the Virgin. Over the church porch is a tablet (1652) recording its rebuilding. Some of the old benches with carved poppy-heads, dating from 1630, have been preserved. The font has been assigned to the 13th cent. In the chancel, on the north side, is a plain recess, and below this an altar-tomb; on the south side is a similar tomb, but of later date, with debased arabesque carving, and above a mural monument (with arms) to Sir William Powell, erected 1661. Here is a paper-mill. A charity of £11 is for clothing. There is good fishing for pike, perch, and roach. There are remains of the Preceptory of Knights Templar (removed here in 1274), consisting of the gable end of a building, a gateway, and fragments of architectural ornament. There are also the remains of Cherley Mynchery or Nunnery (suppressed 1524); the existing buildings are of Perp. date, and are still inhabited.

Sandford Orcas, pa. and vil., S.E. Somerset, on the borders of Dorset, 3 N.W. of Sherborne; ac. 1,091; soil sandy, subsoil various. The church of St. Nicholas (restored 1871) is Dec. and Perp., with some Norm. remains. The south aisle belongs to the manor-house adjoining, and has a rich Perp. roof. There are remains of an ancient wall-painting, some monuments to the Hutchings family, and one (dated 1607) to the family of Knoyle. The font is E. Eng. The charities amount to £1 17s. yearly. Dr. Francis Godwin, author of a "Catalogue of the English Bishops," was at one time rector here. The Manor House, adjoining the church, dates from about 1560, and includes a great hall, with a fine oak screen, a large old-fashioned fireplace, and unusually massive mullioned windows, looking on the bowling-green. The whole of the rooms are richly panelled with oak. There is a fine gate-house, and over the east gable of the house are the royal arms of the Tudors.

Sandford St. Martin, pa. and vil., N. Oxon, 7 N.W. of Woodstock; ac. 2,251; soil partly oolite, with stone-brash, lias, clay, and limestone. The church of St. Martin (repaired 1856) is of various periods, the nave having Trans. Norm. arches in the north aisle and E. Eng. in the south. The clerestory has Perp. windows; the east window of the chancel and that of the south aisle are Trans. from Dec. to Perp., and the latter has curious tracery. In the south aisle is a very rich Dec. piscina, and the south porch retains a stoup. Of the chancel screen of Perp. work, only the upper portion, with the arms of Queen Elizabeth (1602), is now left. The font has Norm. carving in the upper part, and there is an hourglass-stand of iron. There are several wall and other monuments of the 17th and 18th cents. Some allotments produce £38 yearly for fuel, which is distributed to the poor. The village cross (repaired 1856) dates from the 13th cent. In the Cow Ground, on Brandon Farm, is a spring, once famous for its medicinal qualities, but now disused. The farmhouse itself has some portions of Elizabethan date. Sandford Park is a seat.

Sandgate, eccl. pa. and small watering-place, pas. of Cheriton and Folkestone (q.v.), S.E. Kent, 1½ W. of Folkestone. The to. is built at the foot of an extensive range of hills facing the French coast, of which it commands a clear view; there is good bathing. The church of St. Paul is a plain edifice in a debased style of Gothic. Here are Wesleyan and Congregational chapels. The Gough coffee tavern, now called "The Soldiers' Home and Institute," in High Street, was opened in 1881, the foundation stone having been laid by John B. Gough, the temperance orator. The subscription reading room, opened in High Street, June, 1884, has a library. In 1875 the "James Morris Dwellings" were erected for the poor by James Morris, Esq. The local charities are very numerous, but are supported entirely from voluntary subscriptions and vary considerably from year to year. Here is a dispensary. Beach Rocks Convalescent Home, a non-sectarian charity, was opened in 1892. S. Castle, built by Henry VIII. in 1539, was visited by Elizabeth in 1573. In 1806 the castle underwent considerable alterations in order to render it serviceable in case of an invasion. These changes, however, entirely destroyed all traces of its original form, and it is now little more than a martello tower.

Sandhurst (1), pa. and vil., S.W. Berks., separated from Hants by the Blackwater, 4½ S.E. of Wokingham; ac. 4,680; soil sandy, overlying sand and gravel. The church of St. Michael (restored 1864) is E. Eng.; there is a brass to Richard Geale (d. 1608), his wife Elizabeth, four sons and five daughters, with effigies of all. Here are Wesleyan and Baptist chapels. In the pa. are the remains of a Roman camp and two hills supposed to be barrows. S. Military College (established at High Wycombe in 1799, transferred in 1802 to Marlow, and finally settled here in 1812) is about 2 miles from the church and situated in beautiful park-like grounds. The buildings comprise a central block, with a portico of the Doric order and two wings; the chapel contains some tablets in memory of former governors and others. There is a well-furnished library, with portraits of George III. and Queen Charlotte and of past governors. The students, who are called "gentlemen cadets," are admitted by open competition between the ages of seventeen and nineteen, and receive instruction in military subjects exclusively, before entering for a competitive examination for commissions in the army.

Sandhurst (2), pa. and vil., S. Kent, separated from Sussex by the Kennett and Rother, 6 N.E. of Etchingham; ac. 4,230; the land is heavy, with clay and gravel subsoil, and there is a quantity of marshland. The church of St. Nicholas, on an elevated spot and forming a conspicuous object in the landscape, is chiefly Perp., with E. Eng. clerestory; the north chapel, separated from the chancel by two arches of unequal size, formerly belonged to the family of De Bettrinden, and the south chapel, once used as a school, has now been thrown into the church. There are Wesleyan and Baptist chapels. The Clock Tower is a building of red brick, erected in 1889. A fair for cattle is held on May 25. Fowle's charity yields about £3 10s. a year. Downgate is a seat.

Sandhurst (3), pa. and vil. on the Severn, N. Glouc., 3 N. of Gloucester; ac. 2,200; soil sandy loam and clay, overlying blue lias. The church of St. Lawrence (restored 1858) is Norm. and later; the leaden font is Norm. There is a Wesleyan chapel. The charities are small. Wallsworth Hall is a seat.

Sand Hutton (1), eccl. pa., tp., and vil., pa. of Bossall (q.v.), N.R. Yorks., 7 E.N.E. of York; ac. 2,242. The church of St. Mary (restored 1886) is in Perp. style. The old church is now in ruins. S. H. Hall, a handsome mansion in picturesque grounds, with ornamental lake, and commanding fine views of the Vale of Derwent and the Wolds, is a seat.

Sand Hutton (2), eccl. pa., tp., and vil., pa. of Thirsk (q.v.), N.R. Yorks., 8½ S. of Northallerton; ac. 1,294. The church of St. Mary (rebuilt 1877) is a small stone structure. Here is a Wesleyan chapel.

Sandiacre, pa. and vil., S.E. Derbys., 9 E. of Derby; ac. 1,070; soil loam and clay, overlying clay. The church of St. Giles (restored 1881-91) is of various periods, the tower being Norm. with E. Eng. windows and with a Dec. spire. The great attraction of this church is its remarkably fine chancel, an exceedingly good example of the Late Dec. period. Near the west window is a priest's doorway, and within, on this side, are fine sedilia and a piscina; on the chancel-floor is a very remarkable incised gravestone (probably 12th cent.) exhibiting a tall floriated cross, supported by nondescript animals; and several incised slabs date from the 16th cent. There was once an ancient chapel at S., dedicated to St. Sythe or Osyth. The Wesleyans, Primitive Methodists, and Free Methodists have chapels.

Sandiway, vil., pa. of and 2 S.E. from Weaverham (q.v.), Mid Chesh.

Sandleford, or Sandleford Priory, pa., S. Berks., on the Hants border; ac. 520; soil gravelly clay, overlying clay. There is no church; the place was formerly extra-parochial, and belonged to a priory of Augustinian canons founded here before 1205. The seat of S. Priory includes a portion of the monastic building, the ancient chapel now forming a dining-room.

Sandlin, vil., pa. of Leigh (q.v.), S.W. Worcs., about 7 S.W. of Worcester.

light, overlying chalk, clay, and red loam. The church of All Saints (restored 1875) is Late Gothic, dating from the latter part of the 14th cent. On the south side of the chancel are triple sedilia, richly ornamented with pinnacles and crockets, and now filled up with masonry; adjoining is a piscina, and on the opposite side is a recess under a flattened arch, perhaps intended as an Easter sepulchre. The chancel is separated from the nave by a Perp. oak screen. There are piscinæ in both aisles. Under the pulpit is a brass to John Fitz Geoffrey (d. 1480), Elizabeth his wife, and nine children (with effigies of both). There is a Congregational chapel at Red Hill, and one at Roe Green. A sum of £23 9s. 3d. is applied by trustees to the maintenance of Dissenting places of worship in this pa., and a sum of £4 yearly is distributed among the poor.

Sandon (2), pa. and vil. on the Trent, Mid Staffs., 5 N.N.E. of Stafford; ac. 3,617; soil sand and gravel, overlying rock and sandstone. The church of All Saints (enlarged and restored 1840) is E. Eng.; there are several modern brasses, a monument to Sampson Erdeswicke, the antiquary (d. 1603), and others of the family (dating from 1473). Ann Hector, Dr. Johnson's first love, is buried in the churchyard. The charities are small. S. Hall was rebuilt in Jacobean style in 1852; in the park there are memorials to William Pitt and Spencer Percival, and the moat of the manor-house of the Erdeswickes can still be traced.

Sandon (3), or Sandown, pa. and vil., Mid Essex, 3 S.E. of Chelmsford; ac. 2,301; soil partly light and partly clay. The church of St. Andrew is partly Norm. and partly of Tudor date, and contains several hatchments, and a brass to Patrick Fearne and his wife (c. 1580). There is a Congregational chapel. Dr. Brian Walton, editor of the Polyglot Bible, was once rector of this pa. There is a charity of £10 yearly.

Sandown (1), to., pa. of Brading (q.v.), I. of W., 6 S. of Ryde. The town is beautifully situated at the head of a fine open bay, on the south of the island, between Dunnose and Culver Cliff, commanding extensive views of the sea, the cliffs, the Bay of Sandown, and some picturesque inland scenery. The salt water at this part of the island is strong and pure; and the sands, which gradually shelve to the sea, being smooth, firm, and free from pebbles, the bathing, for which there is an ample supply of bathing machines, is extremely pleasant. Here is a pier, and a sea-wall has been built and a new promenade constructed. The houses stand chiefly on a gently-rising ground, far above the level of the sea, and the atmosphere at this delightful place is particularly genial and salubrious. There are two eccl. pas. Christ Church (1845) is in E. Eng. and Dec. styles. One of the stained windows is a memorial to Lieutenant Boxer, R.N., one of the officers who perished in the ill-fated Captain. The church of St. John (1880–81) is in E. Eng. style; the principal feature of this church is its unusual height, the distance from the floor to the interior ridge of the roof being over 60 ft. There are also places of worship for various Nonconformist bodies. The town hall (1869), in Grafton Street, is a plain brick building, and consists of public hall with gallery and the necessary offices. New Local Board offices were added in 1888. The Oddfellows have a hall here. The existing barracks are only a portion of those originally erected, and are now used as a military hospital and as quarters for the I. of W. Militia Staff.

Sandridge, pa. and vil., Mid Herts., 2 N.E. of St. Albans; ac. 5,753; soil light, overlying gravelly. The river Lea flows across the north of the pa. The church of St. Leonard (restored 1888) is a very ancient building. It was consecrated as a chapel by Herbert Losinga, first Bishop of Norwich, about 1119, and the chancel was rebuilt about the year 1399 by John de la Mothe, abbot of St. Albans. Previous to the late restoration the exterior appearance of this church was very singular, the nave and aisles being covered by a continuous roof of slight elevation, and the chancel by a roof rising to a greater height. The most striking peculiarity within the church was, until lately, the division between the nave and chancel, which consisted of a solid wall rising to the roof, with a central doorway of Saxon or Norman date constructed of Roman bricks, flanked on either side by square-headed Perp. fenestrations of three lights with cusped trefoiled heads, and a similar opening of two lights above the door—the screen being plain on its eastern, but enriched on its western side; in the course of the restoration it was partially removed and superseded by screen-work of oak, yet without interfering more than was absolutely necessary with the architectural effect. The nave and aisles are divided by Norm. arcades of three arches on either side. There are some small charities. Near St. Albans and in this pa. is Bernard's Heath, where the second battle of St. Albans was fought (1461); it is now used as a cricket-ground. On the large furzy common called "No Man's Land" is a great boulder of the conglomerate known as "pudding stone," which marks the division between Wheathampstead and S., and which in former days indicated the boundary between the possessions of the rival monasteries of Westminster and St. Albans. Near this boundary stone is an ancient entrenchment called the "Devil's Dyke," about 35 ft. deep and 70 or 80 ft. wide, and partly in Wheathampstead pa. Eastwards from the dyke, and parallel to it for about a third of its length, is a moat called the "Slad," always, even in the dryest summer, filled with water, and said to be very deep. Another ancient dyke runs through part of the pa. between the two roads from St. Albans to Harpenden and S. Marshall's Wick and Sandridgebury are seats.

Sandringham, pa. and vil., N.W. Norf., 7½ N. by E. of Lynn; ac. 1,331. The name is derived from its deep sandy soil, of which more than 200 ac. are on the extensive heath stretching hence to Wolferton. The church of St. Mary Magdalene, standing in the grounds of S. House, is a small but beautiful Perp. building. There is a handsome brass eagle lectern, presented by H.R.H. the Princess of Wales in commemoration of the recovery of the Prince from typhoid fever in 1872. In the churchyard, immediately outside the east end of the church, rest the remains of the infant prince Alexander John Charles Albert (1871). In the chancel are memorial tablets to H.R.H. the Prince Consort (d. 1861); to H.R.H. Princess Alice, Grand Duchess of Hesse (d. 1878); to H.R.H. the Duke of Albany (d. 1884); and to H.I.M. Frederick III., German Emperor (d. 1888). There are other memorials to officials of the Prince's household. Bricks are made in the pa., and carr-stone is obtained, both of which have been used in the construction of cottages on the estate. S. House, the seat of Field-Marshal H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, K.G., was erected in 1870. The new building is of brick, with Ketton stone dressings, in the Elizabethan style. The main part of the building, with the offices, forms a parallelogram of about 450 ft. by 70 ft. The flower-gardens and pleasure-grounds, though not very extensive, are laid out tastefully, and interspersed with evergreens and venerable oaks; there are also some pieces of water. The kitchen garden is 15 ac. in extent, 7 ac. of which are within the walls, and form a parallelogram with an oval at each end and a convenient carriage drive around. The stables are spacious, and will hold about forty horses. The park is stocked with deer, and the estate abounds with game, including blackcock. The entrance gates are fine specimens of modern English iron-work, and were presented by the county to the Prince on his marriage. S. Waterworks were erected in 1878, to supply S. House with pure water. There is also a dairy, which includes a tea-room used by the Princess of Wales; and a stud farm for the rearing of hackneys and hunters.

Sandsting, pa. in Mainland, Mid Shetland, Sc., 8 N.W. of Lerwick; ac. 39,870; soil chiefly moss, elsewhere sandy, clayey, or light brown earth, overlying gneiss, limestone, granite, and felspar. The pa. comprises the east portion of the peninsula stretching westwards from the centre of the island, and includes the island of Vementry (q.v.) on the north. The surface consists of low hills, but the coast is bold and rugged, with numerous voes extending far inland. The number of small fresh-water lakes is extremely large. The Established church dates from 1780. The antiquities include several tumuli, Scandinavian forts, and ancient burial-grounds.

Sandwich, mun. bor., seaport, mkt. to., and head of Co. Co. dis., E. Kent, 7 S.W. of Ramsgate. S. is on the Stour, in the midst of a wide area of rich marsh-land, through which the river winds a circuitous course to Pegwell Bay and the sea, here distant about 2 miles from the town. S. is one of the principal Cinque Ports, and was formerly a place of considerable importance. In 851 the Danes were defeated here by Athelstan, and they attacked the to. many times in later years. Here Canute the Great landed. During the reign of Henry IV. the town was three times burnt by the French. The streets are narrow and irregularly built, but are paved and lighted. The ancient walls, which surrounded the town on the east, west, and south sides, have been razed and sloping banks formed, covered with grass and planted with shrubs; these are kept in good order, and the summit of the embankment forms a pleasant promenade. Portions of the Fishergate and the Barbican also remain. Until 1885 S. returned, in conjunction with Deal and Walmer, two members to Parliament. The bor. contains four pas.—St. Bartholomew's Hospital, St. Clement, St. Mary, and St. Peter, with following ac. respectively 6, 535, 126, and 40. The church of St. Peter (restored), built early in the 13th cent. on the site of an earlier structure, is Norm. and E. Eng.; among the many monuments is one with the figure of a knight in chain armour (c. 1320), originally in the south aisle; a magnificent altar-tomb in the north aisle to Thomas Elys (c. 1320–40), the founder of St. Thomas's Hospital; and an altar-tomb with two recumbent figures, supposed to represent John Eue (or Ive), a merchant, and his wife Maud (1390). The parvise over the north porch was probably taken down early in the 17th cent.; there is a very fine E. Eng. piscina, and in the chancel are some remains of equally rich sedilia, and an aumbry. This church had once a south aisle, but it was destroyed by the fall of the tower on October 13, 1661, and has never been rebuilt. In 1878 a portion of the north side was rebuilt, and during this work a portion of an early stone coffin was discovered and several fragments of the Norm. church. The church of St. Clement is a massive structure of flint and stone; the tower is an uncommonly beautiful specimen of enriched Norm. work, but all the other parts of the church are of later date, chiefly E. Eng. and Perp.; the font is of the latter period, and its sides bear roses and shields of arms alternately. In the nave is a large mutilated canopied brass (with male effigy only) to a merchant, his wife, and son (c. 1490). The church of St. Mary the Virgin (restored 1874) is Norm. and E. Eng. There are some vestiges of brasses and a slab with an inscription in Lombardic letters, too much worn to be deciphered. The chancel wall retains a Norm. pillar, and there is an altar-screen of classic design; the exterior of the church, from repeated modern alterations, is mean and unsightly. The chapel of St. Bartholomew is of the E. Eng. period, consisting of two aisles, separated by an arcade of plain Pointed arches; it contains an altar-tomb with an upper slab of Sussex marble, on which is carved the figure of a man in mail armour, supposed to represent Sir Henry de Sandwich; there is also some good stained glass. The hospital (founded about 1244 by Sir Henry de Sandwich) contains sixteen aged men and women, who receive £40 (with house and garden) each annually; and there are also two out-pensioners, who receive £12. The Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists have chapels. The free grammar school (1563) was virtually refounded in 1894. The buildings date from 1564, and are of a picturesque Flemish style, with stepped gables. The Guildhall dates from 1579. A corn market is held every Wednesday, and a cattle market every alternate Monday. The trade of the town consists chiefly in tanning and wool-sorting, and the importation of coal, timber, and stone, and the export of corn, malt, flour, seeds, hops, fruit, and wool. There are breweries, malting-houses, a seed-crushing mill, and an iron foundry. Extensive golf-links have been formed on the downs. The charities are important, and are chiefly distributed in bread, coals, and flannel to the poor. St. John's Hospital was founded during the 13th cent., and now affords pensions of £20 yearly and a separate residence for six males and females. St. Thomas's Hospital was founded in the 14th cent., and affords separate apartments and £24 in yearly pensions for eight males and four females. The Polders, on the borders of the marshes to the west, received their name from the Flemish settlers at S. in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, "Polders" being the name which is still applied to the rich marshy meadows of the Netherlands. These settlers introduced the manufacture of baize and other woollen stuffs, and the cultivation of vegetables, flax, and canary seed.

The Great Northern Railway has a station here on its main line, which is intersected at this point by a branch of the London and North Western, affording railway communication with London, the South of England, and Oxford and the Midland Counties, thus constituting this place a railway centre. The railways give great facility for sending the staple products of the neighbourhood (principally potatoes, beans, onions, and cucumbers) to the London markets and the manufacturing districts. The church of St. Swithin (restored 1861) is a cruciform E. Eng. building. In the chancel is a marble monument to Captain Sir W. Peel, R.N., K.C.B.

Here are Wesleyan and Baptist chapels. There is a Conservative Club in the Bedford Road, and a parochial lending library. The charities are considerable. S. is supposed to have been the Salinæ of the Romans, and in the immediate vicinity are the remains of two camps, one of which, called "Cæsar's Camp," contains about 30 ac.; several remains of Roman pottery and other relics have at different times been discovered during the working of the stone pits and in making cuttings for the railways. The Hazells, a 17th-cent. mansion in Italian style; The Lodge, in picturesque and finely-wooded grounds; and *S. Sankey Canal, S.W. Lancs., extends from St. Helens to Warrington, and thence to Widnes, its total length being about 23 miles. The part between St. Helens and Warrington (formed 1755–68) was the first work of this kind constructed in England; it has ten locks with a fall of 78 ft. Together with the St. Helens Railway the canal became the property of the London and North Western Railway Company in 1864.

Sanquhar, pa., parl. and royal burgh, W. Dumfs., Sc., 12 N.W. of Thornhill; ac. of pa. 40,846; soil in the valleys generally dry and gravelly, but in some parts a rich loam. The to. consists chiefly of one main street; it was made a burgh of barony in 1484 and a royal burgh in 1596, and now forms one of the Dumfries district of burghs. The pa. church, erected in 1823, on the site of the former edifice, has a square tower. The free school (founded by James Crichton, of Friar's Carse, a native of S.) was discontinued in 1885, and the endowment is now applied, through the School Board, to the purposes of higher education. The town hall stands at the end of High Street, and has a tower with a clock. In 1882 a handsome public hall was erected. There is a subscription library at the town hall, and a social club also holds its meetings there. S. is the principal coal mart in the co., large quantities being supplied to Dumfries and other parts. The coalfield is 7 miles in length and 2½ miles in breadth, and the veins are from 3 ft. 8 in. to 4 ft. 6 in. in depth. There are spade and shovel manufactories at Crawick and near the railway station, and two brick and tile works in the town. Fairs are held on the first Friday after Feb. 12 and Nov. 12 (old style); and there is one for lambs, sheep, and wool on July 17, or the first Friday after. The S. Farmers' Society's show for horses, sheep, and cattle is held annually on the second Friday in May. The castle ruins, on a high bank overlooking the Nith, a short distance south-east, have been excavated, and many interesting objects were found, including several human skeletons and a well of great depth with a bucket suspended in it. The fortress, originally a building of great strength, had towers at the angles, and was surrounded by a ditch. It formerly belonged to a branch of the family of Crichton, ancestors of the Marquess of Bute. Elliock is the residence of the family of Veitch; this mansion lays claim to the honour of being the birthplace of the "Admirable Crichton" (1561).

Santon (1), pa. on the Little Ouse, S.W. Norf., 3½ N.W. of Thetford; ac. 1,508; soil sandy, overlying chalk. The church of St. Helen is a small building of flint, in Gothic style; the chancel (including the timber roof, screens, floor tiles) originally formed the south transept of West Tofts church, rebuilt in 1858, when the old materials were brought here.

Santon (2), vil. on the north bank of the Irt, pa. of Irton (q.v.), S.W. Cumb., 4 N.E. of Drigg. There is a Wesleyan Methodist chapel. The river is crossed by a good stone bridge, and nearly adjoining is an inn. The surrounding scenery is very beautiful. [IRTON, SANTON, AND MELTHWAITE.]

Santon (3). [ST. ANNE (1).]

Santon Burn, stream, I. of M., rises near the South Barrule, and flows for about 5 miles in a S.E. and S. direction to the sea, which it joins about 1 N. of Derby Haven.

Santon Downham, pa. on the Little Ouse, N.W. Suff., 5 W. of Thetford; ac. 3,920; soil light sand. The church of St. Mary is Norm., Trans., and E. Eng.; round the tower is an inscription and other marks and initials; a stone carved panel is above the south doorway (now closed); a handsome carved Dec. oak screen separates the nave from the chancel. In 1688, owing to sand being blown by high winds from the hills of Lakenheath (5 S.W.), several houses were buried and destroyed, and the river was choked up. Downham Hall, standing in a well-timbered park, is a seat.

Santry, pa. and vil., Coolock bar., S.E. co. Dub., Ir., 3¾ N. of Dublin; ac. 4,726. The vil., which is small, consists of neatly-built cottages, situated on the road to Swords. The church is an old edifice, containing several monuments to the Domvile and Barry families. S. House is a seat.

Sapcote, pa. and vil. near the Fossway, W. Leics., 4 E. of Hinckley; ac. 1,487; soil various, overlying clay and gravel. The church of All Saints (restored 1886) is Dec.; in the chancel are sedilia, a piscina, and an aumbry, and there is an aumbry in the aisle; the font is Norm. Here is a Wesleyan chapel. There are five almshouses (1847), with a yearly income of about £100, and the school has a small endowment. Stone-quarrying, which is carried on here to a large extent, affords employment to the greater portion of the inhabitants. Goden Well is a mineral spring reputed to be useful in scorbutic complaints. In the pa. there was formerly a famous spring of remarkably soft water, known as "Soap Well." A tessellated pavement, Roman coins, and other antiquities have been found. In former times a castle stood here, and portions of the moat can still be traced.

Sapey, Lower, pa. on the Frome, W. Worcs., 5 N.E. of Bromyard; ac. 1,697; soil clay, overlying brash. The church of St. Bartholomew (1877) is in E. Eng. style. The old church, now disused, is gradually falling into decay.

Sapey, Upper, pa. and vil., N. Herefords., on the Worcs. border, 6½ N. of Bromyard; ac. 2,171; soil clayey and loamy, overlying rock and clay. The church of St. Michael (restored 1860) is Norm.; the archway at the west end is fine Norm. work in good preservation. There are some small charities and an endowed school. Cider is made here.

Sapiston, pa. and small vil., N.W. Suff., 10 N.E. of Bury St. Edmunds; ac. 1,284; soil mixed, principally heavy, overlying clay and gravel. The church of St. Andrew is Perp., with thatched roof, and south porch over a fine Norm. doorway. The doorway and steps to the rood-loft are well preserved. In the south wall of the sacrarium is a piscina, and in the south wall of the nave is a holy-water stoup. The font is Norm., with a fine old carved oak canopy.

Sapperton (1), pa. and vil., S.E. Gloucs., 5 W. of Cirencester; ac. 3,908; soil alluvial, overlying oolite. The church of St. Kenelm (built 1200) was rebuilt in the reign of Queen Anne; in the north aisle is a monument to Sir Henry Poole (d. 1616), and in the south aisle one to Sir Robert Atkyns, the historian of Gloucestershire (d. 1711). There is a charity of over £60. Here is a sawmill, and the Thames and Severn Canal passes through a tunnel. There are remains of an ancient camp, and some Roman coins were discovered in 1759.

Sapperton (2), pa., S. Lincs., 7 E. of Grantham; ac. 661; soil loam, overlying clay. The small church of St. Nicholas is Trans.; there was formerly a north aisle, the arcade of which is built into the masonry of the present north wall.

isthmus, called the Coupée (q.v.). Both Great S. and Little S. consist of high tablelands, bounded by precipitous cliffs varying in height from 150 ft. to 300 ft. or more; but towards the north the ground falls somewhat abruptly, and here the coast is low and rocky. Of the islets surrounding S., the Isle des Marchands (q.v.), or Brechou, is the only one which is more than a rock. Before the construction of the Creux Harbour the only landing-places were the Éperquerie at the north extremity of the island and the Havre Gosselin (q.v.) on its west side, where the lower part of the cliff is ascended by means of a ladder fixed against the face of the rock. The Creux Harbour, formed in 1823, is very small, with a high breakwater extending almost the whole way across the entrance. Access is gained to the interior by means of a tunnel which has been bored through the rock. S. is renowned for the beauty of its coast scenery, which is due at once to the picturesque and often fantastic outline of the rocks and the exquisite colouring which is produced in certain states of the atmosphere. The cliffs are pierced by innumerable caverns. S. is dependent on a Seigneur, the office being now hereditary in the Collings family. The Court (or governing body) consists of a seneschal, a prévôt, and a greffier—all of whom are appointed by the Seigneur. This local Court is partly subject to the States of Guernsey (q.v.). The church is a plain edifice, erected in 1820 and enlarged in 1878. There is a Wesleyan chapel. The Seigneurie is a picturesque house standing in beautiful grounds, which extend to the cliffs on the north side of the Port du Moulin. The old Seigneurie, built in 1565, is now the rectory house.

Sark (2), rivulet, S. Dumfs., Sc., rises among the Lower Eskdale Hills, and flows in a S. direction for 11 miles to the head of Solway Firth, which it joins about 1 W. of Gretna. It forms the boundary between England and Scotland for the last 7 miles of its course.

Sark, The Black, rivulet, S.E. Dumfs., Sc., rises in the pa. of Kirkpatrick-Fleming (q.v.), and flows S.E. to the Sark, which it joins about ¾ mile above Springfield.

Sarn (1), eccl. pa. and vil., pas. of Churchstoke and Kerry (q.v.), E. Montgoms., 4 S. by W. of Montgomery. The church of the Holy Trinity is a small modern edifice.

Sarn (2), vil., pa. of Meyllteyrn (q.v.), S.W. Carnarvs., 6½ S.S.W. of Nevin. The vil. is pleasantly situated in a picturesque dingle, watered by a small stream. It has good accommodation for those who would explore the lower part of the Lleyn peninsula.

Sarnau (= "Roads"), ha., pa. of Penbryn (q.v.), S.W. Cardigs., 9½ E.N.E. of Cardigan. The vil. derives its name from the remains of paved roads near it, which ran over a marsh.

Sarn Badrig, or St. Patrick's Causeway, W. Merions., is a narrow ridge of rock lying out in the sea between Harlech and Barmouth. It is about 24 ft. wide, and extends for 21 miles from the shore. The legend is that this was once a causeway protecting the fertile country which is said to have once occupied the site of Cardigan Bay, but the ridge has been pronounced to be of natural formation. It derives the latter part of its name from the story that St. Patrick was accustomed to use it to cross over to Ireland.

Sarnesfield, pa., N. Herefords., 10 S.W. of Leominster; ac. 1,021; soil loam, overlying clay. The church of St. Mary is E. Eng.; it contains several monuments to the Monington family, and a 16th-cent. one to Isabel de Sarnesfield. The windows retain some fragments of ancient stained glass. S. Court, a red-brick mansion, is a seat.

Sarn Gynfelin, a reef or causeway in Cardigan Bay, believed to be the remains of a Roman road. It extends, it is said, for 7 miles out to sea. The tradition is that Cardigan Bay was once occupied by a large tract of fertile land, containing sixteen fortified cities. S. G. and similar causeways are the only remains of this once prosperous district.

Sarn Helen Way, the remains of an old Roman road running from Carmarthen to Llanio, and thence up into Carnarvs., not far from Bettws-y-coed. There are several stones with Roman inscriptions along its course, and near Maentwrog is a green mound within an oblong vallum or ditch—the remains of a station. It was named after Helen (or Helena), the wife of the Emperor Maximus.

Sarn Hwlcin, a roadway, supposed to be of ancient British origin, running from Maen Achwynfan, N. Denbighs., in a due W. direction for about a mile until it crosses Offa's Dyke.

Sarn Sws, ancient Roman road, N. and S. Wales, is supposed to have originally run from Brecknock to Chester. Vestiges of it may still be traced at Caersws, Meifod, and elsewhere.

Sarn-y-Bwlch, reef in Cardigan Bay, near Towyn, off south-west coast of Merions. The reef forms a natural causeway, extending about 5 miles seawards. It is left uncovered for about a mile at low tide. The depth of the sea at its outer end is about 6 fathoms. It is supposed that the reef formed part of the submerged tract of Cantre Gwaelod.

Saron, pl., pa. of Llangeler (q.v.), W. Carmarths., 4 E. by S. of Newcastle Emlyn.

Sarratt, pa. and vil. on the Chess, S.W. Herts., on the borders of Bucks., 6 N.W. of Watford; ac. 1,550; soil light loam, overlying chalk. The pa. church of the Holy Cross is Late Norm.; the nave is separated from the aisles by two plain pointed arches on each side resting on massive piers; in the north wall of the chancel is a deep apsidal niche, perhaps an Easter sepulchre, and close by it a square aumbry; on the south side is a piscina dating from about 1450, and double E. Eng. sedilia. The pulpit, singularly small, dates from about 1620 and is of carved oak; on the wall of the south transept are frescoes of scenes from the New Testament. The walls of the chancel and of the greater part of the church have at one time been similarly decorated. The Baptists have a chapel. There are six almshouses (founded 1550 and rebuilt 1821) and some small charities. Fancy trimmings are made here.

Sarre, pa. and vil., S.E. Kent, 8 S.W. of Margate; ac. 663; soil light chalk, overlying chalk. There is no church. Here is a Primitive Methodist chapel.

Sarsden, pa. on the Evenlode, N. Oxon, 2½ S.W. of Chipping Norton; ac. 1,383; soil and subsoil stonebrash, clay, and sand. The church of St. James is a small cruciform building of Jacobean date. The charities amount to about £4 yearly. S. House is a seat.

Sartfell, mountain (1,560 ft.), Mid I. of M., 5 E.N.E. of Peel. The mountain consists of an immense mass of shale and schist disposed in huge layers. The cavities seen on its slopes are due to the attempts to find slate, which have proved fruitless. Its lower declivities are covered with herbage, and afford pasture for sheep.

Sarum, New. [SALISBURY.]

Sarum, Old (or Old Castle), pa. and site of a city, S. Wilts., about 2 N. of Salisbury; ac. 75. North of the city is a desolate mound, rising abruptly from the valley on the west, and its eastern side connected with a ridge of the Downs; its deep fosses and stupendous earthen ramparts, nearly a mile in circumference, mark the site of Old Sarum, now called Old Castle, or Castle Hill. The name is said to mean, in British, "a dry situation." There is reason for believing it to have been a stronghold of the Belgæ, who inhabited Hants, Wilts., and Somerset; and that it was a station of the Romans is indicated by coins of various emperors found within its area, and by three Roman roads, of which it was the converging point, from Winchester, Silchester, and Dorchester, with other three (partly traceable) to Bath, Ilchester, and a station on the Kennet. Under the West Saxons it became a Christian see. Stephen placed a garrison here, which offended the Churchmen, who, immured upon a steep and arid hill, had probably already cast many a longing glance at the fertile and irrigated meads at its foot. A new cathedral was projected; the proud fane of Salisbury arose; and, deprived of its splendid ecclesiastical establishment, this once important and flourishing city gradually decayed and finally disappeared. A few fragments of foundations alone remain. The elevation of the inner mound is calculated to be 339 ft.; within it stood the citadel, with some streets radiating from and others encircling it. In the hot summer of 1834 the extreme drought caused the ground between the entrenchments to crack, so as to discover the entire foundations of the ancient cathedral, situated, as had been supposed, on the north-west side; a very large and curious double key was found among its ruins. Old S. sent two members to Parliament from the reign of Edward I. till 1832. A tree near Stratford was the place of nominal election for the bor. of Old Sarum, but almost immediately after the Reform Act of 1832 a violent wind blew down the principal part of the tree.

Sauchet, small cove, pa. of St. Martin (q.v.), north-east coast of Jersey, Channel Islands, 4½ N.N.W. of St. Helier. It is situated between Bouley Bay on the west and Rozel Bay on the east. It has a pebble beach, and shows in a marked degree the manner in which the sea is wearing away the coast-line.

Sauchie (1), q.s. pa. and vil., pas. of Clackmannan and Alloa (q.v.), S.W. Clacks., Sc., 1½ N.N.E. of Alloa. The Established church was built about 1843. S. Tower, formerly the seat of the Cathcarts, is an ancient and well-preserved fortress situated beside the Devon. The villagers are mostly engaged in the neighbouring collieries. Part of the pa. forms an outlying portion of Alloa (q.v.).

Sauchie (2), estate with seat and ruined fortalice of same name, pa. of St. Ninians (q.v.), N.E. Stirls., Sc., 3 S.W. of Stirling. The battle of Sauchie (1488), in which James III. of Scotland was defeated and afterwards slain by the insurgent nobles, took place in the vicinity.

Saulseat, or Soulseat, ruined abbey and ancient pa., pa. of Inch (q.v.), W. Wigs., Sc., 3 S.E. of Stranraer. The abbey was founded in 1148, and is now commemorated only by some mounds.

Saundby, pa. and vil. near the Trent, N.E. Notts., 3 S.W. of Gainsborough; ac. 1,397; soil clayey, overlying red marl and indurated clay. The church of St. Martin (added to and restored 1886 and 1891) is Late Dec. It retains in the chancel a piscina, and has a monument to John Hellays and his wife (1599), and on the floor is a slab with inscription to William Saundeby and his wife (d. 1418), the builder of the church. In the exterior north wall is a portion of the mutilated stone effigy of a mailed warrior, said to be that of the founder, removed from his tomb.

Saundersfoot, small port and watering-place, pa. of St. Issell (q.v.), S.E. Pembs., 3 N. of Tenby. S. has grown up since 1821, when its site was occupied by two or three houses. It is beautifully situated at a point where two valleys meet in an opening in the cliffs on the west side of Carmarthen Bay. The harbour is connected with the neighbouring collieries by a mineral railway. Anthracite coal, culm, and iron-ore are shipped in considerable quantities. The harbour, which is artificial, is situated below the cliffs immediately south of the vil. The development of the coal-trade has done little to destroy the natural beauty of the place, the principal feature in the scenery being the bold wooded cliffs. The salubrious air and the facilities for bathing attract many visitors during the summer. Bonville Castle, a ruin in the neighbourhood, was erected by one of the Norman settlers.

Saunderton, pa., S. Bucks., 1 S.W. of Princes Risborough; ac. 1,674; soil light and shallow, overlying rubble and chalk. The church of SS. Mary and Nicholas (restored 1888–91) is chiefly Dec.; the font probably dates from the end of the 12th cent.

Saut Jeffroi, or Geoffrey's Leap, large detached rock off east coast of Jersey, Channel Islands, 2 N.N.E. of Gorey. It is said to have been so called because an individual named Jeffroi was for some reason forced to leap from the summit in order to save his life, and succeeded in the dangerous exploit. According to another account, it was customary to throw criminals from the rock into the sea.

Savernake, eccl. pa. comprising the pas. of North and South Savernake and parts of the pas. of Burbage and Preshute, E. Wilts., 2½ S.E. of Marlborough. Christ Church is in E. Eng. style.

Savernake Forest, eccl. pa., pas. of Great and Little Bedwyn and Burbage (q.v.), E. Wilts., 5 S.E. of Marlborough. The church of St. Katharine is a handsome stone structure in Dec. style. S. F. House is a noble mansion in the Corinthian style of architecture, and is surrounded by forests and plantations of about 4,000 ac., which abound with deer and game. The grand avenue, about 4 miles long, is bounded by magnificent beeches. There are some fine specimens of timber-trees. The "Eight Walks" is a spot where eight roads converge.

Savernake, North, pa., E. Wilts., about 2½ S.E. of Marlborough; ac. 3,740 (with South Savernake); soil principally clay and greensand, overlying chalk and sand.

Savernake, South, with Brimslade and Cadley, pa., E. Wilts., about 2½ S.E. of Marlborough; ac. 3,740 (with North Savernake); soil principally clay and greensand, overlying chalk and sand.

into a Hospital of St. John the Baptist. It was suppressed in 1553, but revived in the reign of Mary, and retained its royal endowment till 1702, when it was abolished. The Savoy Conference for the revision of the Litany took place here in 1661. The last traces of the palace were removed during the erection of Waterloo Bridge, but the Late Perp. chapel, erected in 1505, remains. It was restored after a disastrous fire, in 1864, at the expense of Queen Victoria, the chapel belonging to the Crown in connection with the Duchy of Lancaster. Here are buried Gavin Douglas, Bishop of Dunkeld (d. 1522), and the poet George Withers (d. 1667).

pa. and to. on the Stort, S.E. Herts., 3¼ s. of Bishop Stortford, on the borders of Essex; ac. 6,607; soil various, subsoil mixed. The church of Great St. Mary is E. Eng., with some portions of good Perp., and contains a monument with effigies to Sir John Leventhorpe and his wife (1625). There are brasses with effigies to John Leventhorpe (d. 1433) and Katherine his wife (d. 1431); Geoffrey Joslyn (d. 1470) and his wives; John Leventhorpe (d. 1484) and his wife (d. 1448), with effigies in shrouds; Thomas Leventhorpe (d. 1527) and his wife, in heraldic mantle (effigy of husband and inscription lost); Edward Leventhorpe (d. 1551) and his wife; Mary, wife of Edward Leventhorpe (d. 1566). There is also an incised slab of the 14th cent., with the figure of a lady, much defaced, and memorials of the Jocelyn family from 1470 to 1867. The chancel is divided from the nave by an open Perp. screen; the pulpit and communion table date from 1632. In the north aisle is a large piscina under a foliated canopy. The Congregationalists have a chapel. There are some small charities. Fairs are held in April and October, and a considerable trade is done in malt; there are also extensive nursery grounds, and a model farm for the continuous growing of corn. There is an endowed school. Hyde Hall is a seat.

Sawddwy, stream, E. Carmarths., rises in a small lake near the Brecons. border, and flows 11 W.N.W. to the Towy.

Sawdon, formerly tp., pa. of Brompton (q.v.), N.R. Yorks., 8 s.w. of Scarborough. It is now amalgamated with Brompton for civil purposes.

Sawel, mountain (2,236 ft.) on borders of cos. Londy. and Tyr., Ir., 8 s.w. of Dungiven; it is the highest summit of the Sperrin range.

Sawley (1), pa. (extending into Leics.) and vil., S. Derbys., 8½ S.S.E. of Derby; ac. 3,959; soil sand and gravel, overlying gravel. The Derwent unites with the Trent in this pa., and is crossed by the Erewash Canal on an aqueduct. The church of All Saints (restored) is of various periods. The north wall of the chancel shows traces of herring-bone work. An ancient oak screen divides the nave from the chancel. There is a locker on the north side of the chancel, a piscina on the south side, and one in the north aisle. The carved oak Jacobean pulpit is dated 1636. Under a canopy in the chancel is the recumbent effigy of Roger Bothe, dated 1466; in a recess in the south wall of the chancel is a 15th-cent. alabaster effigy of John Bothe. Near the reading-desk, in the nave, is an altar-tomb, with brasses to Robert Bothe (d. 1478); and there are other interesting effigies and memorials, but the names and dates are mostly illegible. The Baptists, Wesleyans, and Primitive Methodists have chapels. The charities amount to about £36 yearly.

Sawley (2), tp. and small vil. on the Ribble, pa. of Mitton (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., 4 N.E. of Clitheroe; ac. 2,069 and 35 water. Here are the ruins of an abbey founded in 1147, for the Cistercian order, by William, Baron Percy, the third of that name, who was buried here. At the dissolution of the monasteries in 1538 by King Henry VIII. it was by him granted to Sir Arthur Darcy. The ruins stand on a sloping site near the east bank of the Ribble. Except part of the outer walls of the nave and choir, there is little left beyond the foundation, the whole being overgrown with ivy and presenting a very picturesque appearance. In the E. Eng. chapter-house is a stone coffin, supposed to have been that of a lady connected with the abbey. The abbot's house is now converted into a keeper's cottage. There is also a subterranean passage, still open, leading formerly to the offices. Here is a Wesleyan chapel.

Sawley (3), eccl. pa., tp., and vil., pa. of Ripon (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., 5½ S.W. from the city of Ripon; ac. 3,284. The church of St. Michael and All Angels is modern. There are charities of the yearly value of £10 10s. S. Hall, a fine old mansion in a large and well-wooded park, is a seat.

Sawley and Wilsthorpe, tp., pa. of Sawley (q.v.), S. Derbys., about 9 S.S.W. of Nottingham; ac. 1,860.

Sawrey, eccl. pa. and vil. at the foot of Esthwaite Water, pa. of and 2 S.E. from Hawkshead (q.v.), N.W. Lancs. The church of St. Peter is in Gothic style.

Sawrey, Extra, vil., pa. of and about 2 E.S.E. from Hawkshead (q.v.), N.W. Lancs. There is an endowed school.

Sawrey, Far. [FAR SAWREY.]

Sawrey Infra, pretty vil. at the foot of Esthwaite Water, pa. of and about 2 S.E. from Hawkshead (q.v.), N.W. Lancs.

Sawston, large pa. and vil. (formerly with a market—the remains of a pillar of the market cross stand in the centre of the place) on the Cam, S. Cambs., 7 S. of Cambridge; ac. 1,718; soil chalky, overlying chalk. The church of St. Mary (restored 1870–71) is Norm., E. Eng., and later. The chancel retains a piscina, and below it is a trefoiled recess; on the north side are two large debased Perp. tombs. In the south aisle is a piscina, aumbry, and bracket. There are several monuments to the Huntingdon and Huddleston families, dating from the 16th cent.; and a brass (with effigy, vested and holding a chalice) and inscription to William Richardson, alias Byggins, rector of Rainham Mare (d. 1527). There is another brass figure of a man in armour, wife, and five daughters; a mutilated brass effigy of a civilian (c. 1420); and inscriptions on brass to Hera, daughter and heir of Thomas, second Baron Bradeston, and wife of Sir Walter de la Pole (d. 1423); and John Huntington, Esq. (1558), and Joyce his wife (1564), benefactors. The Congregational church (1879), in the High Street, is of red brick, with Bath stone dressings; the old Congregational chapel is now used as a lecture-room and Sunday school. There is also a Primitive Methodist chapel. Here is an extensive paper-mill. Huntingdon's Almshouses are for eight poor men and women. Huntingdon's Charity, producing £128 yearly, is for distribution in coals. S. Hall, near the church, was rebuilt in the reign of Mary, and has a Catholic chapel annexed.

Sawtry, to., N. Hunts., 8 N.N.W. of Huntingdon. It formerly comprised three pas.—viz., S. All Saints, S. St. Andrew, and S. St. Judith—but in 1886 the first two were amalgamated into one pa., to be designated S. All Saints and St. Andrew. Until 1880 there were two churches here—All Saints' and St. Andrew's; but both were demolished in that year, and the materials used in the erection of the new church of All Saints, a building in E. Dec. style. Its western turret contains one bell, formerly belonging to S. Abbey. There is a brass in the church, with three effigies, supposed to represent Sir William Moyne (d. 1404), his wife, and a monk; that of the knight is in armour, and there remains part of a marginal inscription. Here is a Wesleyan chapel. A clothing charity is supported by voluntary subscription. This place was the site of an abbey of the Cistercian order, founded by the Earl of Northampton in 1447, and colonised from the monastery of Warden, Beds. At its dissolution there were twelve monks and twenty-two servants, and the revenues were estimated at £141. There are now no remains. Many Roman coins have been dug up in the locality.

Saxavord, hill (934 ft.) in the north of Unst island, Shetland, Sc.

Saxby (1), pa., N.E. Leics., 4 E. of Melton Mowbray; ac. 1,360; soil clayey, overlying gravel. The church of St. Peter (restored 1874) was rebuilt in 1789, in Italian style. In the neighbourhood skeletons of men and horses, earthenware urns, bridle-bits, fibulæ, and early weapons have been discovered 3 ft. below the soil. Some Roman urns containing human remains were found in this pa. in 1890.

Saxby (2), or Saxby by Barton-on-Humber, pa. and small vil., N. Lincs., 5 S.W. of Barton-on-Humber; ac. 2,322; soil in places highly fertile. The church of All Saints was rebuilt between 1845 and 1849, in E. Eng. style, from Gilbert Scott's designs. Some of the communion plate dates from the 16th cent.

Saxby (3), or Saxby-by-Lincoln, pa. with railway station, N. Lincs., 10 N.E. of Lincoln; ac. 1,332; soil loam and clay, overlying clay. The church of St. Helen, a brick building in Classic style (restored 1869), was originally a mortuary chapel for the Saundersons, Earls of Castleton.

Saxelby (1), pa. among the Wold Hills, N. Leics., 4 N.W. of Melton Mowbray; ac. 1,052; soil clay and gravel, overlying clay. The church of St. Peter is E. Eng. There are some small charities. S. Park is a seat.

Saxelby (2). [SAXILBY.]

Saxelby-with-Ingleby. [SAXILBY.]

Saxham, Great, pa., W. Suff., 5 W. by S. of Bury St. Edmunds; ac. 1,428; soil mixed, overlying clay. The church of St. Andrew (restored), situated in Saxham Park, is Dec.; there are monuments with brasses to the Eldred family. The single light in the tower consists of fragments of 16th-cent. painted glass, brought over from a dissolved abbey in Germany. On the plaster ceiling of the nave being removed, the handsome old oak roof was exposed. There are charities to the amount of £36 a year. S. Hall, in the midst of a fine park of 140 ac., is a seat.

Saxham, Little, pa. and vil., W. Suff., about 4 W. of Bury St. Edmunds; ac. 1,381: soil good mixed, overlying clay. The church of St. Nicholas is an old flint building with stone dressings. In the vestry is a marble monument to Lord Croft (d. 1677). There are charities of about £15 yearly.

Saxilby, or Saxelby-with-Ingleby, pa. and vil., W. Lincs., on the border of Notts., 12 S.S.E. of Gainsborough; ac. 4,270; soil loamy, overlying clay. The Perp. church of St. Botolph has a double chancel; in that to the north is a raised tomb with recumbent figures of a knight and a lady, sadly disfigured. There is also a mission church, and the Wesleyans, Primitives, and Free Methodists have chapels. In the pa. is a Roman barrow.

Saxlingham, pa., E. Norf., about 3½ W. of Holt; ac. 1,498; soil light loam, partly on a chalk formation. The church of St. Margaret is a cruciform Perp. building. In a niche is an effigy of the lady of Sir Christopher Heydon (d. 1593).

Saxlingham Nethergate, pa. and pleasant vil., S.E. Norf., 7 S. of Norwich; ac. 1,618; soil various, overlying clay. The church of St. Mary (restored 1867) is a fine Dec. building.

Saxlingham Thorpe, pa., S.E. Norf., adjoining Saxlingham Nethergate; ac. 454; soil various, overlying clay. The church of St. Mary is in ruins. Here is a Baptist chapel.

Saxmundham, pa. and well-built mkt. to. (M.), E. Suff., 12 N.E. of Woodbridge; ac. 1,106. The church of St. John the Baptist (restored 1873) is Dec. and Perp. There are several monuments of the Long family by Nollekens, and one to Lord Farnborough by Westmacott. The Congregationalists and Particular Baptists have chapels. There are several small bequests for the repair of the church and use of the poor. Here is a reading-room, well supplied with periodicals and newspapers, and affiliated to the County Society at Ipswich. A fire brigade was established here in 1875. Adjoining the "Bell" hotel is a large public room, used as a corn market, and for any other purpose conducive to the interests of the town. There is a large repository sale for cattle on alternate Wednesdays. Formerly two yearly fairs were held, but they are now obsolete. Hurts Hall, in a park of 200 ac., is a seat.

Saxonbury Hill, eminence (700 ft.), N.E. Sussex, about 2 S.W. of Frant. It has on its summit a small camp, in which stands a prospect tower, from which fine views may be had.

here at the time of the Domesday survey, which afterwards became part of the possessions of Shelford Priory. When that house and its property came into the hands of the Stanhopes, they pulled down the church of S., to save the expense of its maintenance; in the stack-yard stone coffins and human remains have been dug up at different times very near the surface.

Saxon Street, ha., pa. of and 1½ E. from Wood Ditton (q.v.), S.E. Cambs. There is a red-brick chapel, erected 1877. At S. Hall, a seat, are the kennels of the Green Lodge drag hounds.

Saxtead, pa. and vil. on the Alde, E. Suff., 3 N.W. of Framlingham; ac. 1,202; soil clayey, overlying clay. The church of All Saints is a Gothic building of stone.

Saxthorpe, pa. and small vil. on the Bure, N. Norf., 6 N.W. of Aylsham; ac. 2,113; soil sandy, overlying sand and gravel. The church of St. Andrew, on rising ground a little north of the Bure, is a large Dec. building. An iron foundry and agricultural implement manufactory gives employment to a number of the inhabitants.

Saxton, pa. and vil., W.R. Yorks., 4½ S. of Tadcaster; ac. 3,699; soil limestone, overlying mostly limestone rock. The church of All Saints (restored 1876) is partly of Norm. work, with later additions. In the churchyard is a grey marble tomb to Ralph Lord Dacre of Gillesland, slain at the battle of Towton, fought near here in 1461. Here is a Wesleyan chapel. S. Grange, a very ancient building about 1 N. of the vil., is occupied by a farmer.

Saxton-with-Scarthingwell, tp., pa. of Saxton (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., about 4 S. of Tadcaster; ac. 2,719.

Scackleton, tp. and vil., pa. of Hovingham (q.v.), N.R. Yorks., 10 W. of Malton; ac. 1,460. Here is a Primitive Methodist chapel. Limestone is quarried here.

Scafell, mountain (3,162 ft.), S. Cumb., next to Scafell Pike the highest in England, and separated from that mountain by Mickledore Chasm (q.v.). It may be ascended most easily from Wasdale Head, either direct or by Esk House, and, though quite simple if directly ascended, furnishes practice ground for climbers at various points—notably Scafell Pinnacle, the Broad Stand, and the Chimney.

Scafell Pike, mountain (3,210 ft.), the highest point in England, in S. Cumb., about 2 S.E. of Wasdale Head. It is ascended most usually from one of four points—viz. Wasdale, Dungeon Gill, Rosthwaite, or Boot in Eskdale. The first-named route is both easiest and shortest. Very fine views of the surrounding Lake District are obtained; and the Isle of Man, Solway Firth, and Scotland are visible on clear days.

Scaftworth, tp., bounded on the north, south, and west by the Idle, pa. of and 2 N.W. from Everton (q.v.), N. Notts.; ac. 1,083.

Scagglethorpe, tp. and vil., pa. of Settrington (q.v.), E.R. Yorks., 3 N.E. of Malton; ac. 1,206. Here are Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist chapels.

Scalby (1), pa., tp., and vil. on the New Cut from the Derwent to the sea, N.R. Yorks., 3 N.W. of Scarborough; ac. of pa. 11,872, of tp. 2,302; soil clay and loam, overlying gravel. The church of St. Lawrence (enlarged 1862) is E. Eng.; the tower was rebuilt in 1683 and the chancel in 1685. The pa. has a small Wesleyan chapel, four almshouses, and some small charities. S. Hall, Wreahead, and Wyndyate are seats.

Scalby (2), tp. and vil., pa. of Blacktoft (q.v.), E.R. Yorks., 7 E. of Howden; ac. 1,398.

Scaldwell, pa. and vil., Mid Northants, 7½ N. of Northampton; ac. 1,211; soil clay and red marl, overlying stone. The church of SS. Peter and Paul (restored 1863) is an edifice of stone of the 13th cent., with some portions of E. Norm. date; the font is ancient and curious, and has a very elaborate cover, made and presented by a wheelwright of the pa. Here is a Congregational chapel. The charities for distribution amount to about £40 a year. There is also a charity, left in 1738, called the "Town Estate," which is let out in allotments, the proceeds being applied in keeping the pump and masonry of the town well in good repair. Roe's charity provides 10s. for the rector to preach a thanksgiving sermon on Dec. 5.

Scaleby, pa. and vil., N. Cumb., 6½ N.E. of Carlisle; ac. 3,646; soil various, overlying clay. The church of All Saints (restored 1861) is an ancient edifice of stone, and contains remains of a Roman altar. The Wesleyans have a chapel. There are some small charities. S. Castle, ½ S. of the vil., was originally built in the 12th cent., and was fortified in 1307. A massive tower of 14th-cent. date still stands, and there is a large 15th-cent. hall, gatehouse, and octagonal tower. The castle was repaired in 1730, and again in 1834 and 1854. The grounds, once surrounded by a moat, are now only of small extent. The inner moat has been partly filled up, but the outer moat has always been kept full, and is crossed by a stone bridge. S. Hall is a seat.

Scales Tarn, small lake on the shoulder of Saddleback, S. Cumb., about ½ N.E. of the summit of the mountain. It lies nearly 2,000 ft. above the level of the sea. A small stream issues from it.

Scalford, pa. and vil., N.E. Leics., 4 N. of Melton Mowbray; ac. 2,520; soil various, chiefly clay land, overlying ironstone rock. The church of St. Egelwin the Martyr (restored 1845 and 1859) dates from the 13th cent., and contains traces of Norman or Saxon work on the north side of the chancel-arch and in the remains of the rood-stairs; there is a stone coffin-lid in the porch and a piscina in the south aisle. The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have chapels. The charities amount to about £40 yearly. A market and fair were formerly held here. In this pa. are springs of very clear water, providing a constant supply to Melton Mowbray.

Scaling Dam, ha., pa. of Easington (q.v.), N.R. Yorks., about 10 N.E. of Guisborough.

Scalloway, seaport vil., pa. of Tingwall (q.v.), Shetland, Sc., 6½ S.W. of Lerwick, on the north side of a fine bay on the west side of Mainland. Anciently this was the capital of Shetland. Fishing is the chief industry, consisting principally of cod, ling, haddock, and herring; and for facilitating this trade there are several quays, warehouses, and cooperages. The men of S. are of a fearless character, and frequently put to sea in very boisterous and stormy weather. The vil. is well supplied with water. On the west shore is an excellent spring, the flow from which is uninfluenced by the seasons, being constant and abundant; but it is covered by the sea at high water. There is a chapel-of-ease in the vil. Near the vil. are the ruins of S. Castle, erected in 1600 by Patrick Stewart, Earl of Orkney and Shetland.

Scalpa, Scalpay, island on the north side of the entrance of East Loch Tarbert, off south-east coast of Harris, Outer Hebrides, N.W. Invs., Sc., 25 S.S.W. of Stornoway. The island is about 3 miles long from north-west to south-east, with a maximum breadth of 1½ mile. A channel ½ mile in width separates it from Harris on the north. The surface, which is low and heath-covered, is broken into sections by arms of the sea, which ramify in all directions. On the west shore are two excellent natural harbours. The Glass Lighthouse, on the south-east shore, was erected in 1788, and has a fixed light visible 17 miles.

Scalpay, or Scalpa, island in pa. of Strath, off east coast of Isle of Skye, N.W. Invs., Sc., 10 S.E. of Portree. The island extends about 4 N.W. and S.E., and has a rounded outline with an average breadth of 2½ or 3 miles. Scalpay Sound (q.v.) separates it from Skye, and opposite the north-west part of the island is Loch Ainort. The shore, which consists of a blackish clayey limestone, is mostly low-lying, but on the north-east side of the island there are some bold cliffs. The surface of the interior is grassy, rising by a gentle ascent to a height of nearly 1,000 ft. Near the summit is a petrified rock, containing interesting varieties of shells. An ancient chapel still stands on the spot once inhabited by a Culdee or hermit.

Scalpay Sound, or Loch na Cairidh, sea-channel between the islands of Skye and Scalpay, N.W. Invs., Sc., 12 S.W. of Portree. The average breadth of the Sound is about ¾ mile, but in some places it narrows to less than 1½ mile. It is famous for its oysters. The herring fleet assembles here.

Scamadale, Loch, pa. of Kilninver and Kilmelford (q.v.), W. Args., Sc., 7 S. of Oban.

Scamblesby, pa. and large vil., Mid Lincs., 7 S.W. of Louth, on the road to Horncastle; ac. 1,850; soil clay, chalk, and sand. The church of St. Martin is a small brick building in E. Eng. style; the chancel was rebuilt 1890–91. Here are Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist chapels.

Scammonden, eccl. pa., tp., and vil., pa. of and 7 W. from Huddersfield (q.v.), W.R. Yorks.; ac. 1,806. The church of St. Bartholomew was rebuilt 1865. There is a Baptist chapel.

Scampston, tp. and vil., pa. of Rillington (q.v.), E.R. Yorks., 5½ N.E. of Malton; ac. 2,046. St. Martin's chapel-of-ease (1842) is in Gothic style. S. Hall, a seat, is surrounded by a fine park.

Scampton, pa., W. Lincs., about 6 N.N.W. of Lincoln; ac. 2,116; soil various, overlying limestone, ironstone, and clay. The church of St. John the Baptist (restored 1877) is E. Eng., with remains of Norm. work. On the floor are brasses to Sir John Bolle (d. 1648) and Catherine his wife (d. 1644). In 1795 the pavement of a Roman villa was found here near the Roman road, and near the same spot was formerly a small chapel dedicated to St. Pancras.

Scamridge, eminence near Ebberston, N.R. Yorks., about 6 E. of Pickering. On it are the remains of an ancient camp.

Scarba, island off north coast of Jura, pa. of Jura and Colonsay (q.v.), Inner Hebrides, Args., Sc., about 3½ w. of Craignish. It is 3½ miles long, and nearly 3 miles at its widest part. It consists almost entirely of a mountain (1,500 ft.), and contains a deer-forest. S. Sound is the name given to the strait separating S. from Luing island.

Scarborough, mun. and parl. bor., pa., fashionable watering-place, mkt. to., and head of U. and Co. Co. dis., N.R. Yorks., 42 N.E. of York; ac. of bor. and pa. 2,348. The bor. returned two members to Parliament from 1295, but in 1885 the representation was reduced to a single member. S. is situated on the north and south sides of a rocky promontory, jutting out into the North Sea and forming two unequal bays. This peculiar position gives the town the effect of two watering-places in one, the portion occupying the South Cliff being, however, by far the larger and more fashionable. The sands are extensive, and afford excellent bathing. The place is also much frequented on account of its spa, or mineral springs, discovered in 1620, and still maintaining a high reputation; and the air is singularly fine and bracing. The southernmost portion of the town is separated from the rest by a deep and picturesque ravine, laid out and planted and spanned by two bridges. There is a hydraulic lift to convey passengers to and from the spa and sands and the top of the South Cliff. The ancient churches of St. Clement, St. Helen, St. Nicholas, St. Sepulchre, and St. Thomas have disappeared, but the sites of some of these are still indicated in the names of modern streets. The church of St. Mary (restored 1850), on the upper part of the hilly promontory on which the old town is built, is an ancient edifice of stone, formerly belonging to a monastic house. In the history of the fabric each period of ecclesiastical architecture can be traced—from the Norm. of the time of Stephen, to the Perp. of the reign of Richard II. Of the choir, destroyed by the guns from the castle during the siege at the time of the Commonwealth, only portions of the eastern walls now remain; the nave is without triforium, but has an E. Eng. clerestory The northern arcade and two bays on the south side are Trans. Norm., the rest E. Eng.; the south transept, once the Percy chantry, is Dec. The spacious stone porch retains its parvise, and has stone seats; adjoining and projecting equally is the chapel of St. Nicholas. Next follow in order the chapels of St. James the Great, St. John the Baptist, and St. Stephen. All the chapels have massive stone-ribbed groining, and are roofed with stone slabs disposed in ridges, and several retain piscinæ, aumbries, and founders' tombs. In the church are over seventy small modern brass inscriptions, chiefly on the walls; and similar brasses are found on many tombs in the churchyard. There were originally cloisters, which adjoined the church on the south-west. A churchyard, crowded with tombstones, surrounds the church on all sides, but is divided by paths into eight irregular enclosed portions, the easternmost of which, separated from the rest by a road, contains the grave of Anne Brontë ("Acton Bell"), (d. 1849), authoress of "Agnes Grey" and third daughter of the Rev. Patrick Brontë, incumbent of Hawarth, Yorks. There are several eccl. pas. with modern churches; a Catholic church (1858), dedicated to St. Peter; and places of worship for various Nonconformist bodies. The promenade pier (1869), on the North Sands, has been greatly improved by the addition of gardens and a drive, which it is proposed to continue round the hill on which the castle stands. The present spa buildings date from 1880, and are in Italian style; they include a theatre, a restaurant, and shops. The People's Palace and Aquarium is in Indian style, and various portions have been reproduced from celebrated Indian buildings. The harbour, at the eastern end of the South Sands, is the only one between Tynemouth and the Humber accessible to large vessels. It is formed by three piers projecting from the foot of Castle Hill; the middle (or St. Vincent's) pier has a lighthouse, in which a signal is exhibited when there is 10 ft. of water at the mouth of the harbour. Here is the harbour-master's office. The west pier is chiefly devoted to the fish trade. Here is the lifeboat station. The town hall, in Castle Road, contains town clerk's and police offices. The Public Hall, on the site of the old town hall, in St. Nicholas Street, was erected by the corporation; the ground floor is occupied as shops. The Market Hall, in St. Helen's Square, is open daily for the sale of provisions of all kinds, and on Thursdays is well attended. The cattle market and public slaughter-house are in Wrea Lane. Amongst the literary institutions, the most important are the Philosophical and Archæological Societies, the Mechanics' Institute, and the Horticultural Society. S. has three club-houses—the Scarborough, the Constitutional, and the Liberal. The Museum, a rotunda of the Roman Doric order, contains a valuable and interesting collection of local and other antiquities, and geological specimens illustrating the strata of this district. There are two theatres—the Royal and the Londesborough. The South Cliff Baths date from 1876. The King's Cliff Hospital was established in 1883. The Seamen's Hospital, in Castle Road, has rooms for thirty-six poor seamen and their wives, or seamen's widows belonging to S. The Trinity House, another maritime charity for the same object, has thirty-one rooms. The Royal Northern Sea Bathing Infirmary, on the Sandside, established for the reception of patients residing in all parts of England, will hold ninety-six patients. Wheelhouse Free Almshouses consist of forty comfortable dwellings for the poor of S. The People's Park comprises the two sides of the Ramsdale valley; it is prettily laid out in winding walks, amply furnished with seats, is well planted with trees and shrubs, and has a sheet of water at the western end. In Conduit Street stand the remains of the "Butter Cross;" it consists of a tall obelisk-shaped crocketed shaft, with remains of panelled niches at the base. S. Castle appears to have been built about 1127; in 1312 Edward II. visited the fortress. For about three centuries after 1378 the castle was left to decay, and in 1553, during the rebellion of Sir Thomas Wyat, it was surprised and held for three days by the Earl of Stafford. During the Civil War, being held for the king, it was twice besieged and taken, in 1645 and 1648; and on the last of these occasions the keep was mined and partially destroyed. Oliver's Mount, about 1 s. of the town, is said to derive its name from the fact that the Parliamentary cannon were planted here by Cromwell's orders. The castle stands on a broad platform immediately above the East Cliff; on the north and east it is defended by the sea and the precipitous cliffs on which it is placed, and on the west and south by the keep and a continuous curtain wall, near the centre of which, and south of the present barracks, stood the "King's Hall," the foundations of which, and of a smaller structure attached to one angle of it, were discovered in May, 1888. For the protection of the keep on the east side a part of the castle area was walled in and ditched, forming an enclosed oblong space called the "ballium," or "bailey." The gateway consists of a recessed arch between two semicircular towers, but there does not appear to have been any portcullis or drawbridge. The keep is a huge square tower of red sandstone; the west side has wholly disappeared, and the sides adjacent are imperfect, but the foundations remain entire. Towards the eastern extremity of the castle area may be traced the site of the chapel and the castle well.

Scarcliff, pa. and vil., N.E. Derbys., 8 s.s.e. of Chesterfield; ac. 3,765; soil limestone, overlying limestone and clay. The church of St. Leonard (restored 1842) is E. Eng. and Dec., and contains a monument of the 11th cent. with nearly-obliterated Latin inscription; the chancel retains two piscinæ of Norm. date. The charities amount to about £36 yearly. There is a spring in this pa. called Owlsditch, remarkable for its greater abundance in the summer than in the winter months.

Scarcroft, tp. and pleasant vil., pa. of Thorner (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., 5 s. of Wetherby; ac. 1,073.

Scarf Gap, pass (1,400 ft.) between Ennerdale and Buttermere, S. Cumb., between High Crag Mountain and Haystacks. Some parts of the ascent are rough; the continuation of the path, known as Black Sail Pass, leads over to Wasdale.

Scarfskerry, coast ha., pa. of Dunnet (q.v.), N. Caiths., Sc., about 8 N.E. of Castletown.

Scargill, tp. and vil., pa. of and about 3 W. from Barningham (q.v.), N.R. Yorks.; ac. 4,817. There are some remains of an ancient castle.

Scarisbrick, eccl. pa., tp., and vil., pa. of and 4 N.W. from Ormskirk (q.v.), S.W. Lancs.; ac. 8,397. The church of St. Mark (1848) is in Perp. style. There is a Catholic church. S. Hall is a seat.

Scarle, North, pa. and extensive vil., W. Lincs., near the Notts. border, 10 S.W. of Lincoln; ac. 1,955; soil various, overlying sand and clay. The small church of All Saints (restored 1874) is said to date from the reign of William II. The south of the church and the lower part of the tower are Norm. There are Wesleyan and Free Methodist chapels. The charities, about £30 a year, are distributed in fuel.

Scarle, South, pa. and tp., E. Notts., on the borders of Lincs., 7½ N.E. of Newark-on-Trent; ac. of pa. 2,395, of tp. 1,093; soil sandy loam and clay, overlying principally gravel. The church of St. Helena (restored 1871) is chiefly E. Eng., and contains several mural tablets, and on the chancel floor a broad stone with inscription to Sir Henry Mering (1504); a double piscina remains in the south chancel wall. Remains of a low side window and a piscina were found in the nave. The Methodists have a chapel. There are some small charities.

Scarlet Point, or Stack of Scarlet, headland on west side of entrance to Castletown Bay, S. I. of M., 1 S.S.W. of Castletown. The Stack consists of an immense mass of black basalt some 50 ft. high.

Scarness, tongue of land on east side of Bassenthwaite Water, Mid Cumb., 5½ N.W. of Keswick.

Scarning, pa. and vil., Mid Norf., about 2½ W. of East Dereham, on the road to Swaffham; ac. 3,470; soil clay and loam, overlying clay. The church of SS. Peter and Paul (restored 1859) is a fine building dating from about the middle of the 15th cent. The rood-screen is in a very good state of preservation, retaining its original gilding and colours in a comparatively fresh condition, and on the east side, at the south corner of the screen, is a small sanctus-bell in its original oak frame. In the chantry chapel, now used as a vestry, is a piscina and an aumbry. Here is a Primitive Methodist chapel. The charities for distribution are £22 yearly, and there is a fuel allotment of 14 ac.

Scarp, island, pa. of and ½ W. from Harris (q.v.), Outer Hebrides, Invs., Sc. It is 3 miles long by 2¼ miles wide, and consists almost entirely of a mountain (1,000 ft.).

Scarriff (1), vil. on the Scarriff, pa. of Tomgraney (q.v.), W. co. Clare, Ir., 8 N.N.W. of Killaloe. S. is pleasantly situated at the foot of the Slieve Aughty Mountains, within a mile of the west shore of Lough Derg. It has communication by steamer with Limerick and Dublin.

Scarriff (2), islet in Kenmare Bay, pa. of Kilcrohane (q.v.), S. co. Kerry, Ir.

Scarriff (3), river, E. co. Clare, Ir., rises on the borders of cos. Galway and Clare, and flows for 18 miles in a S.E. direction through Lough O'Grady to Lough Derg.

Scarrington, pa. and tp., S.E. Notts., 3 N.E. of Bingham; ac. of pa. 2,205, of tp. 932; soil strong clay, overlying clay. The church of St. John of Beverley is a stone building. The Wesleyans have a chapel. There are some small charities.

Scars, East, reef on north-east side of the Tees estuary, off coast of N.R. Yorks., 1 N.E. of Redcar. It is 2 miles in length, and is much feared by sailors. The sea leaves the reef uncovered at low tide.

Scartaglen, pl., pa. of Castleisland (q.v.), E. co. Kerry, Ir., about 13 E.S.E. of Tralee.

Scarthingwell, ha., pa. of and 1 E. from Saxton (q.v.), W.R. Yorks. S. Hall is a seat; just outside the park wall, at the west corner, is the place where Lord Clifford is supposed to have been killed at the commencement of the battle of Towton. There is a Catholic chapel attached to the mansion.

Scarthin Nick, ha., pa. of Matlock (q.v.), Mid Derbys., adjoining the vil. of Cromford (q.v.). Here is a mission church; there are also Primitive and Wesleyan Methodist chapels. The name was first applied to a limestone gap at the entrance to Cromford.

Scartho, pa. and vil., N.E. Lincs., 2 S. of Grimsby, on the road to Louth; ac. 1,150; soil light clay, overlying clay. The church of St. Giles is said to be partly of Saxon date; the nave is E. Dec. The belfry stage has a double window in each face, the arches resting in the middle on a single stone extending through the thickness of the wall, supported by a shaft with a curiously-ornamented impost, which seems to be wholly confined to Saxon work. The basement courses show signs of fire, indicating that a still older tower, once standing on these foundations, has been burnt; and at the west end of the north wall there appears to be a fragment of the earlier church, once forming an exterior angle and consisting of huge blocks of brownish sandstone. Here are Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist chapels. Upon a small eminence north-west of the vil. is the reservoir of the Grimsby Waterworks Company, constructed in 1863.

Scartlea, vil., pa. of Garranekinnefeake (q.v.), S.E. co. Cork, Ir., 4 S. of Middleton.

Castle, built by Monk; the cairn of Cairn Cochy (70 ft. high), which marks the spot of a battle, A.D. 332; and Lisnaguard Fort. S. House is a seat.

Scar Water, rivulet, N.W. Dumfs., Sc., rises near the boundary of the co., and flows at first E. and then S.E. for 19 miles to the Nith, which it joins 2 S.W. of Thornhill. It abounds in trout.

Scarweather, sandbank in Bristol Channel, off coast of Glamorgs., in vicinity of Porthcawl. Here is a lightship, with a revolving light visible 10 miles.

Scatrick, islet in Lough Strangford, pa. of Killinchy (q.v.), E. co. Down, Ir. There was formerly a castle here.

Scattery Island, or Inniscattery, islet in the Shannon, pa. of Kilrush (q.v.), S. co. Clare, Ir. It has a lighthouse, with light visible 10 miles. There are some interesting remains of churches founded by St. Senanus, who, like St. Kevin, sought a secluded spot, where he vowed "the sacred sod should ne'er by woman's feet be trod."

Scavaig, Loch, sea-inlet, island of Skye, Invs., Sc. It is in the south-west of the island, is nearly 5 miles wide at the entrance, and runs up to the Cuchullin Mountains.

Scawby, pa. and vil., N. Lincs., 2½ S.W. of Brigg; ac. 3,930; soil sandy, overlying gravel. The church of St. Hibald, originally E. Eng., was rebuilt in 1842, with the exception of the tower; there are several mural tablets to the Nelthorpe family (1632–1865). Here is a small Wesleyan chapel, and a Primitive Methodist chapel. Reading-rooms with a library were established in 1858. The Red Well is a strong chalybeate spring. S. Hall, in a large park, is a seat.

Scawsby, pl., pa. of Brodsworth (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., 2½ N.W. of Doncaster. S. Lees, on the road from Barnsley to Doncaster, is where the insurgents in the "Pilgrimage of Grace" (1536) were encamped.

Scawton, pa. and vil., N.R. Yorks., 5 W. of Helmsley; ac. 2,876; soil limestone and moor soil, overlying limestone and sandstone. The church of St. Mary was erected in 1146 by Roger, second abbot of Byland Abbey, and retains some good Norm. work; in the chancel there is a low side window.

Scethrog, ha., pa. of Llansaintfraed (q.v.), S.E. Brecons., 5 S.E. of Brecknock. The ha. is said to take its name from Brochmail Yscythrog, Prince of Powys. The "Victorinus Stone," near S., is supposed to have been erected as a sepulchral monument by the Romans.

Schel, The, eminence (1,979 ft.) in the Cheviot Hills, N.E. Roxbs., Sc., on the English border.

Schemes Islets, two islands in Roaringwater Bay, S. co. Cork, Ir., 3 N.W. of Baltimore.

Schiehallion, mountain (3,547 ft.), pas. of Dull and Fortingall (q.v.), N.W. Perths., Sc., 11 N.W. of Aberfeldy. Here Dr. Nevil Maskelyne (1732–1811), Astronomer Royal, made his observations on the powers of attraction.

Scholes (1), straggling vil. on a bleak and lofty eminence, pa. of Kirkburton (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., about 7 S. of Huddersfield. Here are woollen mills.

Scholes (2), vil., pa. of Birstal (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., 1½ N.W. of Cleckheaton. There is a Free Methodist chapel.

Scholes (3), vil., pa. of and 1 N. from Barwick-in-Elmet (q.v.), W.R. Yorks.

Scholing, or Sholing, eccl. pa. and vil. on the Itchen, pas. of St. Mary Extra and Hound (q.v.), S. Hants, forming part of the parl. bor. of Southampton. The church of St. Mary is in E. Eng. style; and there are Nonconformist chapels.

Schull. [SKULL.]

Scilly (1), vil., pa. of Ringcurran (q.v.), S. co. Cork, Ir., 1 E. of Kinsale, occupying the summit and acclivity of a gentle eminence forming a peninsula projecting into Kinsale Harbour. Immediately above the vil. are the Militia barracks of that town, of which this place may be considered a suburb.

Scilly (2), or Silly Bank, eminence (500 ft.), S.W. Cumb., 1½ N.E. of Whitehaven.

Scilly Islands, a group of islands at the western entrance to the English Channel, consisting of six large islands and a multitude of islets and rocky masses to the number of 145, 40 W. of the Lizard Point, and which are reached by steamers from Penzance within an average passage of three hours. The situation is wild, and the rocky scenery beautifully grand. The total ac. of the whole of the islands is 3,560. These islands are supposed to have been first known to the Greeks by the name of the Hesperides, and to the Phœnicians as the "Cassiterides," or "Tin Islands," and were called by the Romans "Silurœ Insulæ." In 1649 Sir John Grenville, the Royalist, who afterwards took an active part in the restoration of Charles II., fortified these islands, and converted them into a fort and refuge for privateers, with which he so completely swept the adjacent seas that, the Channel trade being seriously injured, Parliament at length fitted out and despatched an expedition under Admiral Blake and Sir George Ayscue, and in June, 1651, compelled him to surrender. The isles of Scilly were in 936 granted by Athelstan to some monks who settled at Tresco, but were subsequently in part granted to the abbey of Tavistock on its endowment. During the reign of Elizabeth they were divided amongst numerous proprietors, from whom they were purchased by the Crown, and from that time to 1830 they were rented by the Godolphin family. At present all the islands are included in the Duchy of Cornwall, and are granted on leases to a lord-proprietor. The inhabitants were in former times chiefly small farmers, fishermen, sailors, and pilots, but very few are now engaged in fishing. After the potato famine in 1847, the attention of the farmers was directed to the growing of early potatoes for the London and other markets, and the exceptional mildness of the climate enables them to supply the earliest English-grown potatoes. This industry, however, has largely given place to the growing of asparagus and other early vegetables, and the raising of early spring flowers, chiefly narcissus. Large quantities of lobsters are also exported. The isles are composed wholly of granite, consisting of a coarse-grained mixture of felspar, quartz, and mica, occasionally stained by iron; and in some places may be found schorl, chlorite, and hornblende. The rocky surfaces are in many places hollowed out by the action of rain-water into basins, some of which are of considerable size. The scenery, though impaired by the absence of trees, is romantic; among the rocks the heather grows luxuriantly, and the extreme mildness of the climate admits of a semi-tropical vegetation. The seas amid the islets abound with fish, and the western reef with huge seals, and at certain times both the cliffs and the surface of the water are covered with myriads of sea-fowl. Coral is met with in large quantities. The temperature is singularly equable, the winter readings of Fahrenheit's thermometer giving a mean of 46° and in summer a mean of 58½°. Snow seldom falls, and ice is very rarely seen. The subsoil being entirely granitic, moisture never remains long on the surface, but, rapidly percolating, leaves the roads dry and elastic; there is mostly a pleasantly cool breeze from the sea in the summer months, and during the winter, when the winds are more boisterous, they have a soothing effect from their comparatively high atmospheric temperature, making this locality an admirable residence for the invalid. The inhabited islands are Bryher, St. Agnes, St. Martin, St. Mary, and Tresco (q.v.).

Scissett, eccl. pa. and vil., pas. of Elmley and High Hoyland (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., 9 S.E. of Huddersfield. The church of St. Augustine is in E. Eng. style.

Sclattie, part of the vil. of Auchmill (q.v.), S.E. Abers., Sc., 6 N.W. of Aberdeen.

Scofton-with-Osberton, eccl. pa., pa. of and 3 E. from Worksop (q.v.), N. Notts. The church of St. John (1832) is in Norm. style. Osberton Hall is a seat.

Scole, or Scole with Thorpe Parva and Frenze, pa. and pleasant vil., S. Norf., 2 E. of Diss, on the borders of Suff.; ac. 821; soil mixed, overlying clay and gravel. The church of St. Andrew (restored 1874) is E. Eng. Scole Lodge, pleasantly situated on the Norwich road, is a seat.

Sconcer, or Sconser, vil. on Loch Sligachan, pa. of Portree (q.v.), Skye, Inner Hebrides, Invs., Sc., 3 N.E. of Sligachan Inn.

Scone, pa. and vil., E. Perths., Sc.; ac. 7,815; soil in parts light and gravelly, in others strong clay. The vil., on the Tay, 2 N.E. of Perth, has Established, Free, and United Presbyterian churches, a public hall, and a cemetery. A little west of the vil. is the site of the Palace, founded here by Kenneth II. when he made S. the seat of the Scottish monarchy (about 850) and deposited here the Stone of Destiny, which rested in the abbey until its removal to Westminster, London, by Edward I. S. Abbey was founded by Alexander I. (1114). It stood close to the palace, and is now represented by a part of one aisle, used as the burial-place of the Viscounts of Stormont. The Earl of Gowrie, who lost his life and his estates for the attempt to imprison King James VI. (known as the Raid of Ruthven), began the palace which preceded the present one on the site of the old palace of the Kings of Scotland, and Sir David Murray of Gospatrick, cup-bearer to and favourite of the king, finished this palace in 1606. It was in this building that Charles II. was crowned King of Scotland in 1651. The present mansion, which is modern, occupies the same site overhanging the Tay, and contains much of the old furniture, including some bed-hangings embroidered by Queen Mary. The old gallery, in which the coronation took place, is 160 ft. in length, and is included in the modern palace, now the seat of the Earl of Mansfield. Near the house stands the old market cross of S., surrounded by pleasure grounds, which have usurped the site of the ancient vil.

Scone, New, a name sometimes given to the vil. of Scone (q.v.), from the fact that the old vil. of S. has disappeared.

Scoonie, pa. on the north shore of the Firth of Forth, S. Fifes., Sc.; ac. 4,091; soil fertile, overlying whinstone. It contains the seaport town of Leven (q.v.), where is the pa. church.

Scopwick, pa. and vil., Mid Lincs., 9 N. of Sleaford; ac. 3,403; soil marl and heath-land, overlying limestone. The church of the Holy Cross (restored 1882) is E. Eng., and contains several ancient monuments to the Sewell family. There is a Wesleyan chapel.

Scorborough, or Scorbrough, pa. and small vil., E.R. Yorks., 4½ N. of Beverley; ac. 1,385; soil and subsoil various. The church of St. Leonard (rebuilt 1859) is E. Eng. S. Hall is a seat.

Scoreby. [STAMFORD BRIDGE WITH SCOREBY.]

Scorhill Circle, or The Longstones, stone circle on Dartmoor, Mid Dev., 3 W. of Chagford. The circle, considered the finest in Devonshire, retains thirty stones, twenty-five of which are still erect, the original number having been about fifty. The Long Stone is nearly 8 ft. high, and two of those which have fallen are almost as large. The circle is about 28 yds. in diameter.

Scorrier, vil., pa. of and about 4 N. from Gwennap (q.v.), S.W. Cornw. At Fourburrow are the kennels of the Fourburrow Hounds. S. House is a seat.

The church of St. Wilfrid (restored 1881 and 1884) is of stone, and contains under the tower the royal arms, with the initials C. R. and the date 1684; there is also a fine font dated 1170, and a fine altar-tomb of alabaster to Mr. Richard Whalley (d. 1583), with his effigy (life-size) in armour. At the back of and around the tomb is a raised screen, also of alabaster, divided into four compartments; in the first is a figure of his first wife, with five children; in the next a figure of his second wife, with thirteen children; in the third his third wife, with seven children; the fourth compartment is filled with rhyming verses. There are mural monuments to other members of this family.

Scrivelsby, pa., E. Lincs., 2½ s. of Horncastle; ac. 1,916; soil sandy loam, overlying white clay and gravel. The church of St. Benedict (restored 1876) is E. Eng., Dec., and Perp.; the monuments chiefly commemorate the Marmion and Dymoke families, possessors of the manor of S. and hereditary Champions of England. Beneath the chancel arcade is an altar-tomb, with brass effigy and inscription, to Sir Robert Dymoke, knight-banneret (d. 1545), and Champion at the coronations of Henry VII. and VIII.; at the east end of the aisle is a tomb with the recumbent cross-legged effigy in stone of a knight in armour, conjectured to represent Philip, last Lord Marmion, of S. and Tamworth (d. 1292); contemporary with this is the recumbent effigy of a lady with a dog at her feet. In the chancel is an inscription on copper to Sir Charles Dymoke, Knight, Champion at the coronation of James II. (d. c. 1688), and Eleanor (Watson) his wife, as well as to other members of the family; here also is a slab inscribed to the Hon. Charles Dymoke, Champion at the coronation of William and Mary (d. 1702), and mural monuments of white marble to the Hon. Lewis Dymoke, M.P., Champion at the coronations of George I. and George II. (d. 1760), and the Hon. John Dymoke, Champion at the coronation of George III. (d. 1784). There are also mutilated brass effigies of a man and his wife, with part of a canopy (c. 1430). S. Court stands in a large park; on the right hand of the principal entrance, lighted by a tall mullioned window, is the armoury, containing a large collection and a huge "black jack." In the dining-room are a number of family portraits, including one of Henry Dymoke on horseback in his character of Champion at the coronation of George IV. in 1828; and there are also preserved a number of the coronation cups. The chief entrance to the park, called the "Lion Gate," from the figure of a lion on the archway, bears the name "R. Dymok," divided by the rudely-carved boughs of a tree.

in East Street, is available for entertainments and public meetings, and will hold 500 persons. The S. golf links are on the downs, east of the town. The Fitzgerald Almshouses were endowed in 1868. The convalescent hospital dates from 1860. The air is remarkably bracing, and a great number of visitors resort here during the summer months. Some fishing is carried on; fine prawns are caught among the rocks, and mackerel and other fish are sometimes taken in the bay in large quantities. The cliffs are of great height, and, the bay being very deep, the roadstead affords a good shelter to shipping during the prevalence of easterly gales. On S. Heights are the remains of a large British or Roman camp and cemetery. S. gives the title of Baron to the family of Ellis, Lords Howard de Walden. Sutton, near S., was anciently a separate pa. The church has long been destroyed, though its foundations are clearly traceable in the now desecrated churchyard. The living was annexed to S. in 1508, and has since been ecclesiastically designated "Sutton-with-Seaford."

Seaforde, or Neaghen, vil., pa. of Loughinisland (q.v.), Mid co. Down, Ir., 4 W. of Downpatrick. There are Protestant and Presbyterian churches. Fairs are held in March, June, September, and December. S. House is a seat.

Seaforth, eccl. pa. and vil., pa. of Sefton (q.v.), S.W. Lancs., 4½ N.E. of Liverpool. The church of St. Thomas (built 1815) is in Debased Gothic style. There are Wesleyan and Congregational chapels. The Convent of the Sacred Heart of Mary occupies a commanding position on the shore. There are cavalry barracks.

Seaforth, Loch, sea-loch on the east side of Lewis island, Outer Hebrides, Ross and Invs., Sc., dividing Lewis from Harris, 19 S.E. of Stornoway. The loch is a long narrow arm of the sea extending upwards of 13 miles inland, with a breadth ranging from ¼ mile to upwards of 3 miles. It stretches 8½ N. by W. from its mouth to a large island; then 5½ N.E., dividing eventually into two branches, which strike off E. and W., and are 3 miles and 1 mile long respectively. The upper part of the inlet lies wholly within the pa. of Lochs. The lofty mountains skirting its lower part render the scenery very grand and impressive; in the narrower parts, higher up, it resembles a huge trench dug through their midst. From 1623 to 1716 the loch gave the title of Earl to a branch of the Mackenzie family.

Seagate Castle. [IRVINE (1).]

Seagoe, pa. bounded by the Bann, O'Neilland East bar., N. co. Armagh, Ir., adjacent to Portadown; ac. 9,876. The church of St. Gobhan was rebuilt and enlarged in 1891. There are two Catholic churches; and places of worship for Presbyterians and Wesleyan Methodists. The rectory was built about one hundred years ago, on a fine elevated site above the valley of the Bann. Carrick-Blacker Manor House (1692), of small red Dutch brick, with a balustrade on which are alternate urns and bosses, after the style of the period, contains many interesting relics of the time of the Revolution of 1690.

Seagrave, pa. and vil., N. Leics., 9 N.E. of Leicester; ac. 2,470; soil loam, overlying clay. The church of All Saints (restored 1891) is E. Dec. The Primitive Methodists have a chapel. There are a few small charities. The ancient Roman Fossway skirts a portion of the pa. from north to south. The scenery in and about the neighbourhood is beautiful.

Seagry, pa. and small vil. on the Avon, N. Wilts., 5 S. of Malmesbury; ac. 1,068; soil various, overlying gravel. The church of St. Mary (rebuilt 1849) is in Dec. style.

Seaham, coast pa. and tp., E. Dur., about 5 S. of Sunderland; ac. of pa. 2,910, of tp. 1,518; soil clayey, overlying clay and limestone. The church of St. Mary is a building of stone of the early part of the 12th cent.; in the church is a very ancient stone coffin bearing an inscription. The poor have the interest of £10 a year. S. Hall, a large mansion of stone, a short distance from the church, is the seat of the Marquess of Londonderry. Lord Byron the poet was married here in 1815 to Anna Isabella, only child of Sir Ralph Milbanke Noel, Bart., and Baroness Wentworth, and his autograph is to be seen in the register.

Seaham Colliery, vil., pa. of Seaham (q.v.), N.E. Dur., about 4 S. of Sunderland. The colliery is one of the deepest pits in the coalfield, and affords support to over 5,000 persons. There are Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist chapels.

Seaham Harbour, seaport to. and eccl. pa., pa. of Dalton-le-Dale (q.v.), E. Dur., 6 S. of Sunderland. S. Harbour and the to. of that name were founded in 1828, when the first stone of the north pier was laid by the third Marquess of Londonderry, and that of the to. by Viscount Seaham. The progress of the to. has been remarkable; begun on one of the most desolate spots of the coast, where not a single habitation stood before, it has grown into a considerable place. The harbour, which consists of two wet docks and one dry dock, and one tidal basin, allowing room for about 300 coasting ships, was designed to facilitate the shipment of coals from Lord Londonderry's collieries. The lighthouse is built upon a rugged piece of rock, and at the base is a red light, revolving every half-minute. Here is a lifeboat station. The church of St. John the Evangelist (1841) is in Perp. style. The Catholic church has a priest's house attached; and there are places of worship for various Nonconformist bodies. Flower shows are held annually by the local Horticultural Society. The Londonderry Literary Institute is a handsome structure of freestone, of the Grecian Doric order, built in 1855 by the third Marquess; it consists of a library, reading-room, and lecture hall. The Masonic Hall, in the North Road, is a brick building, and a portion of the premises is occupied by a private club. The infirmary (1849) is an edifice of stone, in Gothic style. The harbour and colliery office is a large stone building with a cupola, containing the requisite offices for Lord Londonderry's extensive works. The town depends principally on the coal trade, but there are extensive bottle works, Seaham, New, eccl. pa. and colliery vil., pa. of Seaham (q.v.), N.E. Dur., about 4 s. of Sunderland. Christ Church is a modern structure.

Sea Houses, vil. and seaport, pa. of North Sunderland (q.v.), N.E. Northumb., 9½ E. of Belford. There is a Primitive Methodist chapel. Herrings and other fish and crabs are very plentiful in their seasons, and fish-curing is extensively carried on. A harbour, mostly used in the herring season, was opened in 1889. The National Lifeboat Institution has a station and boat here.

Seal (1), pa. and vil., W. Kent, 2 N.W. of Sevenoaks; ac. 4,445; soil sandy and loamy. The church of St. Peter is E. Eng., and contains several ancient and handsome monuments of the Camden family. Within the communion rails is a remarkable brass, in perfect preservation, with effigy and marginal inscription to William de Bryene, Knight, one of the lords of Kemsing and Seal (d. 1395). The amount of £9 yearly for the poor is derived from the interest of the money left in 1878 by Mrs. Randolph, of Godden Green. Here is a convalescent home. Wilderness is a seat.

Seal (2), or Seale, pa. and vil., S.W. Surrey, about 3 E. of Farnham; ac. 2,993; soil sand, chalk, and clay. The vil. is on the south side of the foot of the chalk ridge which extends from Guildford to Farnham, but the pa. extends to the north side of that hill. The church (dedication unknown), originally E. Eng., was partly rebuilt in 1861. The charities amount to £8 16s. a year. The pa. contains part of the eccl. pa. of Tongham (q.v.), and is sometimes called "Seal-with-Tongham." Broad Oak and S. Lodge are seats.

Seal (3), or Seale, pa., N.W. Leics., on the Derbys. border, 5½ S.W. of Ashby-de-la-Zouch; ac. 4,890; soil clayey, subsoil various. The church of St. Peter (restored 1874) is E. Eng.; there is an effigial altar-tomb of the 15th cent., representing Roger Doughton, a former rector, in full canonicals. The Wesleyans and Baptists have chapels. There are almshouses for nine poor people; and the sum of £41 is yearly distributed in bread. Here is an extensive colliery.

Seal Edge, summit (1,977 ft.) of Kinder Scout (q.v.), N.W. Derbys., 5 S.E. of Glossop. It has a bold outline, forming part of the northern edge of Kinder Scout.

Seal Houses, ha., pa. of Arkengarthdale (q.v.), N.R. Yorks., about 4 N.W. of Reeth.

Seal Island (1), another name for Eilean-nan-Roan (q.v.).

Seal Island (2), islet in Trawbreaga Bay, N.E. co. Don., Ir., about 5 S. of Malin Head.

Seal, Nether and Over, tp., pa. of Seal (q.v.), N.W. Leics., about 5½ S.W. of Ashby-de-la-Zouch; ac. 3,795. It contains the vil. of Overseal, where is a chapel-of-ease. [NETHERSEAL.]

Seamer near Northallerton, pa., tp., and vil., N.R. Yorks., 8 S. by E. of Stockton; ac. of pa. 3,904, of tp. 2,650; soil sandy loam, subsoil sandy. The church of St. Martin was rebuilt 1822 (with the exception of the tower), in Gothic style. Between S. and Newby is a remarkable tumulus, called How Hill; and on an adjoining hill are traces of an entrenchment, where ancient armour and human bones have been found.

Seamer near Scarborough, pa., tp., and vil., N.R. Yorks., 4 S.S.W. of Scarborough; ac. of pa. 11,947, of tp. 4,691; soil limy, overlying limestone. The church of St. Martin (restored 1888) is partly Norm., partly Perp.; the post-Reformation screen remains, and is adorned with shields. There are Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist chapels. On the moor are numerous early earthworks. In 1857 some gold and silver ornaments of Saxon date were found in a quarry here. In 1549 this place was the scene of a conflict during the progress of the religious insurrection called the "Pilgrimage of Grace," in which the Sheriff of York was killed. The Scarborough racecourse is situated in this pa. A fair is held every fourth Monday.

Sea Park, estate with seat of same name, pa. of Kinloss (q.v.), N. Elgs., Sc., 2½ N.E. of Forres.

Seapatrick, pa. on the Bann, Upper and Lower Iveagh bars., N.W. co. Down, Ir.; ac. 7,159. It contains the to. of Banbridge (q.v.). The pa. church is in Banbridge. There are two meeting-houses for Presbyterians and places of worship for Wesleyans, Unitarians, Catholics, and Baptists. There is a mill for flax-spinning and linen manufacture.

Searby, or Searby-with-Owmby, pa., N. Lincs., 4 N.W. of Caistor, on the road to Brigg; ac. 2,407; soil and subsoil chalk, clay, and sand.

The church of St. Nicholas is a modern building in Gothic style. In the alley of the nave is the stone coffin-lid of a former vicar (d. 1441); in the churchyard are the remains of one of the capitals of the original church, and a coped stone (with a floriated cross) utilised as a gravestone for the wife of a former parish clerk. Here is a Wesleyan chapel.

Sea Reach, fairway in the lower part of the Thames, between S. Essex and N. Kent. The Reach extends about 13 miles, from Hope Point on the east to the Nore on the west.

Seasalter (called in Domesday Book a small bor.), pa., N. Kent; ac. 1,483 and 2,268 water. It occupies a retired situation, and is bounded by the sea on the north; the east and southern parts consist chiefly of coppice wood, the soil being a deep clay. There is no village, but a considerable part of the town of Whitstable (q.v.) stands in this pa. The old church and churchyard are now used only for burial purposes; the site of a still more ancient church was discovered, some years since, on the falling-away of a portion of the cliff, owing to the encroachment of the sea. The church of St. Alphage (1845) stands in the High Street, Whitstable, and is an edifice of brick and stone in E. Eng. style. The charities for the poor of Seasalter amount to £35 yearly, derived from waste lands and an annuity of £2 from Whitstable. (See p. 393.)

Seascale, vil. and sea-bathing pl. with railway station, pa. of Gosforth (q.v.), S.W. Cumb., 12½ S.E. of Whitehaven. The church of St. Cuthbert (1890) is a chapel-of-ease to Gosforth. There is a large hotel, and during the summer the pl. is much frequented by visitors for sea-bathing and golfing. Many tourists also visit Wastwater, Scafell, etc., from here. Half a mile from the station are some megalithic remains.

Seasend, ha., pa. of Moulton (q.v.), S. Lincs., about 3 N.W. of Holbeach. Here is a school-chapel.

Seathwaite (1), eccl. pa. and vil., pa. of Kirkby Ireleth (q.v.), N.W. Lancs., 5½ N. of Broughton-in-Furness. Trinity Church (1874) is in E. Eng. style. [DUNNERDALE-WITH-SEATHWAITE.]

Seathwaite (2), ha., pa. of Borrowdale (q.v.), S. Cumb., 9¼ S. of Keswick.

Seathwaite Fells, mountain group on north side of Seathwaite Tarn, N.W. Lancs., 8 E.S.E. of Ambleside. The highest point is Greyfriars (2,537 ft.).

Seathwaite Tarn, mountain lake, N.W. Lancs., 6 W. of Hawkshead. It lies in a deep hollow in the mountains west of Coniston.

Seathwaite Valley, between S.W. Cumb. and N.W. Lancs., 8 W. of Hawkshead. It extends about 3 N. by E. and S. by W., and is traversed by the Duddon. The scenery of the valley is extremely picturesque. The rainfall here is one of the greatest in Europe, 160 in. having been recorded within a year. Near the vil. are the traces of a celebrated plumbago mine, the produce of which was so valuable that several laws were passed regulating its management. An attempt to resume work in 1863 proved unsuccessful, and the mine has now been abandoned.

Seatoller, ha., pa. of Borrowdale (q.v.), S.W. Cumb., about 8 S. of Keswick. It is in the middle of the Borrowdale valley, at the point where the coach-road goes over the Honister Pass to Buttermere.

Seaton (1), to. on the Axe, pa. of Seaton and Beer (q.v.), S. Devon, 22 E. of Exeter. Across the Axe, an excellent trout-stream, a stone bridge of three arches has been erected, connecting this place with Axmouth. S. is much frequented by visitors during the summer months on account of the salubrity of its climate. The pa. church of St. Gregory (restored) is chiefly Late Dec.; the chancel retains a piscina and two squints. Previous to the restoration the church contained some fine oak screen-work with open tracery, displaying the shields of Walrond, Stowford, Holbeame, and Hake; in the Walrond chantry is a 17th-cent. tomb with kneeling effigy to Edmond Walrond of Bowe (d. 1640). Here is a Congregational chapel. There are charities of £1 7s. yearly value. Honiton lace is made here.

Seaton (2), pa., tp., and vil., S. Rutld., separated from Northants by the Welland, 2½ S.E. of Uppingham; ac. of pa. 2,135, of tp. 1,446; soil good, chiefly mixed, as is the subsoil. The church of All Hallows (restored 1874–75) is E. Eng.; the arcades, of three arches on each side, are Norm., and the chancel arch is of the E. Norm. period; in the south aisle are two piscinæ; there is a monument to the Monckton family. The charities are of about £11 10s. yearly value.

Seaton (3), tp. and vil., pa. of Camerton (q.v.), W. Cumb., 1½ N.E. of Workington; ac. 2,597 land, 623 foreshore. The church of Holy Trinity, West Seaton (1893), is in E. Eng. style. St. Paul's (1883) is a chapel-of-ease to Camerton. There is a Wesleyan chapel. S. Castle, once a seat, is now known as the "Barrow Walls," and is used by the Volunteers as shooting-butts.

Seaton (4), vil., pa. of and 1 N.E. from Sigglesthorne (q.v.), E.R. Yorks. [SEATON AND WASSAND.]

Seaton (5), vil., pa. of Seaham (q.v.), E. Durham, about 5 S. of Sunderland. S. House is a seat.

Seaton and Wassand, tp., pa. of Sigglesthorne (q.v.), E.R. Yorks., 2½ W. of Hornsea; ac. 1,744. The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have chapels. The Public Rooms were opened in 1887. There is a small charity.

Seaton Burn, vil., pa. of Killingworth (q.v.), S.E. Northumb., about 4 N.W. of Long Benton. Here is a colliery. There is a chapel-of-ease to North Gosforth church, and also Presbyterian, Wesleyan, Primitive and New Connexion Methodist chapels. S. B. House is a seat.

Seaton Carew, eccl. pa., tp., and small to., pa. of Stranton (q.v.), S.E. Dur., 1½ S. of West Hartlepool; ac. 2,665. The church of Holy Trinity was built 1831, in E. Eng. style. There is a Wesleyan Methodist chapel, and the Society of Friends have a meeting-house. The Temperance Hall is used for entertainments. Brewing is carried on, and the salmon fishery is extensive. There is an excellent hotel, and good lodgings. At the south end of the vil., on the seashore, are fine golf-links; the clubhouse (built 1884, and enlarged 1893) comprises a large club-room besides several other rooms. S. C. is a lifeboat station, which was first established in 1823. The fine level stretch of sands affords excellent bathing.

Seaton Delaval, tp. and vil., pa. of Earsdon (q.v.), S.E. Northumb., 6 N.W. of Tynemouth; ac. 2,653. The mission church of St. Stephen was erected in 1887. There is a Primitive Methodist chapel. The Mechanics' Institute contains a library. Of the ancient castle, there are no remains. S. D. Hall, the seat of Lord Hastings, was built in 1707, from designs by Sir John Vanbrugh, in Grecian style, and after suffering much ill-fortune was restored in 1862. Near the Hall is a Classic mausoleum to John, only son of Sir John Hussey Delaval (d. 1775). Coal-mining is largely carried on.

Seaton, North, tp. and vil. with railway station, pa. of Woodhorn (q.v.), S.E. Northumb., 7 E. of Morpeth; ac. 1,468. The church of St. John, a chapel-of-ease, is an iron building. There are Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist chapels. Coal is found here in abundance, and there is an extensive colliery. North Seaton Hall is a seat.

Seaton Ross, pa. and vil., E.R. Yorks., 15 S.E. of York; ac. 3,380; soil sandy, overlying clay and sand. The church is dedicated to St. Edmund. There are Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist chapels. Brick-making is carried on.

Seaton Sluice, seaport vil., pa. of Earsdon (q.v.), S.E. Northumb., ½ N. of Hartley. St. Paul's is a mission church, and there is a Free Methodist chapel. The harbour was originally made by Sir Ralph Delaval (temp. Charles II.), and the copperas and salt works were begun in 1787.

The font is of polished granite, ancient and very beautiful; there is a monumental bust of Dr. Dawson, the mathematician (1820), and a memorial tablet to St. John Ottway, Vice-Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1693). The chancel has a piscina and a credence table. There are Congregational, Wesleyan, and Baptist chapels, and a meeting-house for the Society of Friends. The Royal Free Grammar School was founded by Roger Lupton, D.D., Provost of Eton in the reign of Henry VII., and refounded in 1552 by Edward VI.; a new scheme was formed in 1874 by the Endowed Schools Commission. There are charities of about £223 yearly value (over £100 being distributed among poor householders not receiving parochial relief), and almshouses for six poor widows. The market is of small importance, but has a considerable trade in butter. Fairs are held on February 26, March 20, April 28, and October 29 for cattle; and pleasure fairs on the Thursday in Whitsun week and the first Wednesday after October 3. In the tp. are two small woollen mills. The public hall (1865) is used for public meetings, concerts, and lectures; the county magistrates also hold their sittings here. A police station was built in 1864. The market-house and reading-room was erected in 1858 as a testimonial to a former headmaster of the grammar school. The S. Agricultural Society holds its meetings annually on or about October 4, and there is also a Horticultural Society holding yearly exhibitions. Ingmire Hall, standing in an extensive park, is a large castellated building, partly ancient, but considerably enlarged in 1838, the interior of which is fitted with oak and contains a large and fine collection of old china. Settlebeck is also a seat.

Sedgeberrow, pa. and vil., S. Worcs., on the Glouc. border, 3½ S. of Evesham, on the road to Winchcomb; ac. 1,042; soil clay, overlying gravel, clay, and stone. The church of St. Mary (restored 1868) is of the Trans. period from Dec. to Perp. It contains a high carved oak rood-screen on a stone base, a richly-carved canopied reredos, plain double sedilia, canopied piscina, some fragments of ancient stained glass, and a plain Norm. font.

Sedgebrook, pa. and vil., S.W. Lincs., 4 N.W. of Grantham; ac. 1,628; soil clay and loam, overlying clay. The church of St. Lawrence is Norm., E. Eng., and Perp.; in the angles of the chancel are large canopied niches, and in the south wall a canopied sedile, piscina, and credence within a single niche; in the north wall is a smaller niche. The pulpit, of carved oak, has the date 1634, and the prayer-desk is constructed from portions of the old screen; the font is coëval with the north arcade and has an octagonal basin. The chapel on the south side of the chancel was built by Sir John Markham, Knight, Chief Justice (1462–69), and opens into the chancel by two arches, the easternmost of which is now enclosed by the remains of the rood-screen. In the east wall is a small incised slab, with effigy and inscription to Alice (Skipwith), wife of Sir John Markham (d. 1494), and Dorothy his daughter; in the angles of the chapel are canopied niches similar to those of the chancel, a piscina with credence, and at the west end a stoup, with a shield below it. A field called the "Abbey Field," to the east of the church, but now included in the pa. of Barrowby, seems to indicate the connection of this place with a monastic house.

Sedgefield, pa., tp., and to., S.E. Dur., 9 S.W. of Stockton; ac. of pa. 17,857, of tp. 5,259. The church of St. Edmund the Bishop (restored at various times) is a cruciform E. Eng. and Dec. building; the side walls are panelled with oak and have canopied stalls divided by slender shafts. A very fine screen of tabernacle work of Late Perp. character divides the chancel and nave. The transepts were chantry chapels, and in the south transept are two recumbent effigies, discovered during the restoration. The nave has very fine E. Eng. arcades, the piers of which each consist of four clustered and banded shafts on square bases with exquisitely-foliated caps, and support wide moulded arches with an outer enrichment of dog-tooth moulding springing from corbel heads. The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel. Here are almshouses for five men and five women, founded in 1703 and restored in 1868; several other charities are distributed according to the direction of the donors. S. was formerly a mkt. to., but the markets are obsolete. A fair for the sale of swine is held on the first Friday of every month. The Mechanics' Institute, established in 1850, contains a library and reading-rooms. About 1½ S. is the County Lunatic Asylum (1858), in Domestic Gothic style; there are about 350 ac. of land, on which the patients are employed. Hardwick Hall, a spacious structure in the midst of a beautiful and well-wooded park of nearly 300 ac., is a seat.

Sedgeford, pa. and vil., N.W. Norf., 13 S.S.E. of Lynn; ac. 4,180; soil chalky, overlying principally chalk. The church of St. Mary (restored 1882) is an ancient Gothic building. Here is a Wesleyan and a Primitive Methodist chapel. There is a corn-mill, a sand-pit, and a chalk quarry. Rolfe's charity of £16 yearly is for clothing; and £20 yearly, the rent of the fuel allotment, is applied in coals. S. Hall is a seat.

Sedgemoor, long narrow tract of marsh and moor land, Mid Somerset, about 5 S.E. of Bridgwater. It derives its name from the abundant growth of the common sedge, from the decay of which have resulted large beds of peat, some of which have been worked since Roman times. Sedgemoor is bounded on the north-east by a low range of hills, and on the south-west by the Parret. It was formerly of much greater extent, but within the last century a large area has been well drained; much of it, however, still shows traces of its old character. The spade cuts down into a dark peaty soil. Tracts of unreclaimed moorland yet remain, overgrown with heather and bog myrtle, and traversed by reedy ditches, which stretch away in long straight lines of stagnant water into the distance. A good deal of S. is utilised as very valuable grazing-ground. The battle of Sedgemoor —"the last fight deserving the name of a battle that has been fought on English ground"—took place on July 6, 1685, on the western extremity of the marshland between Weston Zoyland and Bridgwater. Monmouth's untrained levies were routed by the royal troops under Lord Faversham. The duke escaped, to be taken a few days later near Ringwood.

Sedghill, pa., S. Wilts., on the Dorset border, 3 N. of Shaftesbury; ac. 1,175; soil light clay, overlying sand and marl. The church of St. Catherine is in Gothic style. In the churchyard is a Saxon cross.

Sedgley, pa. and to., S. Staffs., 3 S. of Wolverhampton; ac. 7,400; soil loam, overlying sand and gravel. All Saints' Church was built 1829, on the site of an old building, in Dec. style. There are three mission churches, and Roman Catholic, Wesleyan, Primitive Methodist, and Congregational chapels. A Public Hall was built in 1882, and a Temperance Hall in 1871. The charities amount to about £36 yearly. Nails, rivets, chains, locks, and safes are manufactured; and coal, lime, and ironstone abound.

Sedgwick, tp. and vil. on the Kent, pa. of Heversham (q.v.), S. Westmd., 4 S. of Kendal; ac. 484. The Kendal and Lancaster Canal runs through the tp. S. House is a seat.

Sedlescombe, or Selscombe, pa. and vil. on the Brede, E. Sussex, 3 N.E. of Battle; ac. 2,037; soil Hastings clay, overlying sandy gravel. The church of St. John the Baptist (restored 1874) is chiefly E. Eng. There are several mural monuments to the family of Bishop and others. In the north aisle is a curious iron slab with an inscription to a member of the Bishop family, who were for many years ironmasters in this neighbourhood. The chancel retains its sedilia, and there is a font with a cover of singular shape. Here is a Wesleyan chapel. There is a charity of £30 yearly.

Seend, eccl. pa., tp., and vil. with railway station, W. Wilts., 4 W. of Devizes; ac. 2,759. The Kennet and Avon Canal passes through. The church of the Holy Cross (rebuilt 1876) is in Perp. style; there is a brass in good preservation (1498) to John Stokys, founder of the north aisle, and many monuments to the Seymours, Schombergs, Ludlow-Bruges, Lockes, Awdrys, Dugdales, and one to Adam Wragg and family. There are places of worship for the Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists. The charities amount to about £20 a year. Iron ore is found here in abundance, and until recently was largely worked.

Seer Green, eccl. pa. and tp., pa. of Farnham Royal (q.v.), S. Bucks., 2 S.W. of Beaconsfield. The church of the Holy Trinity (1846) is in Gothic style. There is a Baptist chapel.

Seething, pa. and vil., S. Norf., 9 S. of Norwich; ac. 1,630; soil mixed, overlying sand and clay. The church of St. Margaret is a small Norm. building with a thatched nave. The charities amount to £16 yearly.

Sefton, or Sephton, pa. and tp., S.W. Lancs., 6 N. of Liverpool; ac. of pa. 12,688, of tp. 1,234; the soil varies considerably, and overlies sand and clay. The church of St. Helen was partly built in the reign of Henry VIII.; the tower, the oldest part of the church, belongs to the E. Eng. period, the rest of the building being Late Perp. There are chapels north and south of the chancel, belonging to the Sefton and Blundell families and containing various monuments, amongst which is a marble altar tomb to Sir Richard Molyneux, created knight-banneret on the field of Agincourt (d. 1439); and a brass with effigies of Sir William Molyneux and his two wives, Jane (Rugge) and Eliza (Ellison). This knight captured two standards at Flodden Field (1513), which are still preserved (d. 1548). There are also two other brasses, one on a rich altar tomb to Sir Richard Molyneux (d. 1558), another to Margaret Bulkeley; and two cross-legged stone effigies of knights belonging to the 13th cent.; there is also an altar tomb of white marble to Joan (Haydock), relict of Sir Peter Leigh, Knight, and first wife of Sir Richard Molyneux. The Molyneux chapel retains a piscina, sedilia, and a credence table; here was buried (1789) John Sadler, one of the inventors of a method of transferring printed patterns to earthenware.

Seghill, tp. and to., pa. of Earsdon (q.v.), and eccl. pa. (called also "Sighill," and extending into the pa. of Cramlington), S. Northumb., 6½ N.W. of North Shields; ac. 1,425. The church of the Holy Trinity is a modern building. There are also Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist chapels.

Seighford, pa. and vil. on the Sowe, W. Staffs., 3 W. by N. of Stafford; ac. 4,741; soil marl and gravel, overlying gravel. The church of St. Chad is chiefly Norm., and contains a piscina and a large altar tomb with effigies to Sir William Bowyer and his wife Mercy (1593). There is a small charity. Bricks are made here. S. Hall, an ancient building, is a seat.

Seigneurie, The. [SARK (1).]

Seil, island, pa. of Kilbrandon and Kilchattan (q.v.), W. Args., Sc., 3½ S.W. of Kerrera. It is about 4 miles long by 2 miles wide, and is separated from the mainland by a very narrow strait. In the north of the island it rises to over 800 ft., and descends to the sea in sheer precipices. Most of S. is composed of clay-slate.

Seiont, river, N.E. Carnarvs., rises on north-east side of Snowdon, and runs about 13 miles past Llanberis to the Menai Strait at Carnarvon. The course of the river is N.W. for a few miles, then it turns W.N.W. and soon afterwards S.W., but it again flows N.W. for more than a mile before reaching Carnarvon. The lower part of its valley forms a picturesque dell, delightful glimpses of which are obtained from the railway.

Seirkieran, pa., Ballybritt bar., S.W. K. Co., Ir., 6 S.E. of Parsonstown; ac. 5,818. The Protestant church of St. Keiran was built in 1841. This pa. was the site of the first bishopric established in Ireland (A.D. 402), and was the mother church of the diocese of Ossory; the see was removed to Aghaboe about 1052, where a monastery had been founded by St. Canice, and ultimately, after 1178, the see was transferred to the city of Kilkenny. There are some ruins remaining, and a round tower 20 ft. high, quite perfect, still stands.

Seisdon, ha., pa. of Trysull (q.v.), S. Staffs., 6½ S.W. of Wolverhampton. It was formerly a place of importance.

Selattyn, pa. and vil., N.W. Salop, 3 N.N.W. of Oswestry; ac. 5,553; soil various, overlying clay. The church of St. Mary (restored 1892) is a plain cruciform building; John Hanmer, Bishop of St. Asaph, was buried here 1629, and Dr. Sacheverell was vicar of this pa. There is a Welsh Methodist chapel. The charities amount to £100 yearly. Brogyntyn, a mansion in Classic style, is a seat.

Selborne, pa. and vil., E. Hants, 4½ S.E. by E. of Alton; ac. 7,819 and 97 water; the soil is (in succession from the summit level of the hills westward to Woolmer Forest eastward) chalk, black and white malm, with rock of the Upper Greensand formation below. The church of St. Mary (restored) is of various periods from Norm. to Dec., with some modern additions; the altar-piece is of the Early German or Flemish school. There is a tablet to the Rev. Gilbert White, author of "The Natural History of Selborne," who was born here in 1720, and lies interred in the churchyard. The Congregationalists have a chapel. A charity of £18 yearly value is applied to the national school. A great portion of Woolmer Forest is in this parish. At the time of the Domesday survey Selborne was held in royal demesne. A priory of Black Canons was founded here in 1233 by Peter de Rupibus, Bishop of Winchester; it was subsequently suppressed, and became part of the endowment of Magdalen College, Oxford.

Selby, pa., U. and mkt. to. (M.), and head of Co. Co. dis., W.R. Yorks., separated from the East Riding by the Ouse, 15 S. of York; ac. 3,401; soil sand and gravel, overlying clay. The first remarkable event in its history is the foundation of a Benedictine abbey by William the Conqueror in 1070, which was dedicated to St. German, and in process of time acquired such extensive possessions and immunities as to render it equal in rank to the church of St. Peter at York; the Superior of this establishment, with that of St. Mary's in that city, being the only mitred abbots north of the Trent. Of this magnificent fabric, the church (St. Mary and St. German) is the only part remaining. It consists of a choir of seven bays and a sacristy on the south side, a north transept and fragment of south transept, nave of eight bays, incomplete western towers, a north porch, and a central tower containing clock and bells, presented in 1614. The total length is about 300 ft., and the width 60 ft.; the transept, when entire, was 100 ft. long. The nave ranges in date from Late Norm. to E. Eng.; but some portions of the north transept were rebuilt in the Dec. and Perp. periods. The Norm. choir terminated in an apse; the present choir, erected probably between 1320 and 1350, is a superb example of the Dec. period. Its east window (restored 1889) contains some very fine stained glass of the early 14th cent., representing the First and Second Coming of Our Lord, and the lower portion is occupied by a "Jesse" tree. The tombs and monuments include those of several of the abbots. In 1867 the grave of Alexander, twelfth abbot (1214–21), was discovered; in the choirs are slabs (with incised effigies) to others, the latest in date being that of John Barwick, thirty-second abbot (d. 1526). The Norm. font is supposed to have been brought from an early church on Church Hill, where in 1857 an ancient cemetery was discovered. The monastic buildings occupied ground to the south and west of the church. South of the nave were the cloisters, traces of which still exist. The gatehouse, which remained standing till 1792, stood opposite the "Londesborough Arms" hotel. The tithe-barn originally 313 ft. long, still exists in part, but the middle portion was taken down about 1840. The church of the eccl. pa. of St. James is a modern building in the style of the 12th cent. There is also a Catholic church, and various Nonconformist bodies have places of worship. The charities have an aggregate income of about £200 a year. In the Market Place, opposite the west front of the church, is a stone cross, erected in 1790. Fairs are held on Easter Tuesday, on Monday after June 22, and Oct. 8 for horses, cattle, and wool; and there is a sale of stock every Monday. S. has a Mechanics' Institute and Public Rooms, a School of Art, and a Conservative Club. The chief industries are flax-scutching, rope-making, boat and barge building, tanning, brewing and malting, and iron-founding. The town has also been celebrated for nearly a century for the manufacture of patent shoe-threads, netting-twine, etc. S. is also the centre of a rich agricultural district; potatoes, flax, and mustard are largely cultivated in the neighbourhood.

Selham, or Sulham (the "Saleham" of Domesday), pa. on the Rother, N.W. Sussex, 3½ E. of Midhurst; ac. 413; soil sand, overlying gravel. The church of St. James (restored 1861) is chiefly E. Eng., with a Norm. arch separating the nave from the chancel, which is a fine example of that period. S. House is a seat.

Selhurst, eccl. pa., pa. of Croydon (q.v.), N.E. Surrey, about 8 S. of St. Paul's. The church of Holy Trinity (1867) is in E. Eng. style.

Selker, ha. on the sea-coast, pa. of Bootle (q.v.), S.W. Cumb., 5 S. of Ravenglass. Remains of vessels found in the neighbourhood are supposed by some to have been Roman galleys wrecked on this coast.

Selkirk, royal and parl. burgh (forming one of the Hawick or Border dis. of burghs), pa., mkt. to. (w.), and co. to., N.E. Selks., Sc., about 6 S. of Galashiels; ac. of pa. 22,559; soil chiefly light and dry, overlying Silurian rocks. The Ettrick and Yarrow form a junction about 1½ S.W. of Selkirk, and empty their waters into the Tweed, about 2 N. of the town. S. derives its name from a kirk established here at an early date, when the locality became distinguished as a hunting-seat of the kings. The old town hall, in the Market Place, which was the court-room presided over by Sir Walter Scott, is now used for burgh courts, etc. In 1870 buildings were completed for the business of the county. There are Established, Free, Episcopal, and United Presbyterian churches; and the Baptists, Congregationalists, and Roman Catholics have places of worship. In the Market Place is a fine monument to Sir Walter Scott, and in High Street one in remembrance of Mungo Park, the African traveller. S. was in past ages celebrated for the making of brogues (a description of single-soled shoes). Tradition carries the existence of this trade so far back as the period of the battle of Flodden, in which conflict, it is asserted, the brogue-makers (or "souters") of S. took a distinguished part. The principal manufactures now carried on consist of various descriptions of woollen goods—tweeds, Selkirkshire, small co. in the south of Scotland, and considered one of the Border cos. It is bounded on the north by Edins. and the northern part of Roxbs., east by this latter co., south by Dumfs., and west by Peebs. Its form is irregular, and its extent is 27 miles from south-west to north-east, and 17 in breadth. Its area comprehends 257 square miles, or 164,545 ac. This Border co. was formerly designated the "Sheriffdom of Ettrick Forest," from being in a great measure the vale of the Ettrick and its tributary streams, and from its being covered with wood. It was stocked with large herds of deer, and formed a favourite scene for the enjoyment of the chase by the Scottish monarchs. The Romans occupied it during their stay of 350 years, but have left few traces of their presence. A stupendous work of the Romanised Britons, called the "Catrail," once a vast fosse, having a rampart on either side, constructed during the 5th cent. as a strong line of defence against the invading Saxons, belongs to a rather later period. About 1120 David I.—at that time an Earl, and not having yet succeeded to the throne—founded a monastery at Selkirk, afterwards transferred to Kelso; but this co. contains few or no remains of ecclesiastical establishments, though it possesses a number of ruined keeps, the seats of feudal strength. With the exception of a very narrow portion on its eastern side, the co. may be said to be a continual alternation of hill and dale, and many of the eminences rise to a considerable height. The principal vales are those of the Ettrick and Yarrow, besides a portion of the vale of the Tweed and the Gala; from these valleys shoot out many "cleughs" and "hopes," that run up for some distance between the heights. Around Galashiels and Selkirk the hills are now under cultivation, and wheat is raised at a considerable elevation above the level of the sea. In the upper valleys of Ettrick and Yarrow, tillage is confined to the haughs and low grounds contiguous. Great attention is paid to sheep-farming and the improvement in the breed of sheep. Of minerals there are few in this co., it being deficient in coal, lime, and sandstone; in some parts, however, abundance of whinstone is obtained and a great deal of granite. The manufactures consist of woollens, tweeds, tartans, shawls, and hosiery, together with the tanning of leather and the dressing of sheep and lamb skins. There are also several engineering and machine-making establishments. The co. is well watered by the Ettrick, the Yarrow, and the Tweed; it also has some small lakes, the chief being St. Mary's Loch (q.v.). The mileage of railway actually within this co. is very small; but as it is in the centre of a system, there is easy access to Glasgow, Edinburgh, Berwick-on-Tweed, Newcastle, and Carlisle. The co. joins with Peebs. in returning a member to Parliament.

Sellack, pa. and vil. on the Wye, S. Herefords., 3½ N.W. of Ross; ac. 2,065; soil sandy loam, overlying red sandstone. The church of St. Teseliachus (enlarged 1841) contains monuments to the Pengethly family. A mission room, erected at The Common, was opened in 1883. The charities amount to about £28 yearly. Caradoc, a seat, occupies the site of a castle reputed to have belonged to "Caradoc Vreich Vras," prince of the country between the Severn and the Wye, and one of King Arthur's knights. Pengethly, another seat, is built on the site of an ancient mansion.

Selling, pa. and vil., N.E. Kent, 4 S.W. of Faversham; ac. 2,453; soil and subsoil various. The church of St. Mary—a flint cruciform structure—is Perp., with E. Eng. chapels. There are remains of a rood-loft, some mural monuments, and a brass effigy of a civilian (c. 1530), with figures of children of the same date. On Shottenham Hill, in the south part of the pa., are the supposed remains of a large triangular camp. About ½ N. is a large mound planted with beech-trees, and supposed to have been a Roman tumulus.

Sellinge, pa. and vil., E. Kent, 5½ N.W. of Hythe; ac. 2,063; soil clay, overlying rock. The church of St. Mary is E. Eng. and later, with some Norm. work; it contains various antiquities, including in the chancel chapel a Perp. sepulchral arch enclosing a tomb of Elizabethan date. A brass to John Bernys and Joan his wife (1440), formerly here, has been removed. In the churchyard is a yew-tree, which measures 5½ yds. in girth at 3 ft. from the ground. There is a Wesleyan chapel. Several charities exist, including £80 yearly derived principally from land in Romney Marsh.

Selly Hill, eccl. pa., pa. of Northfield (q.v.), N.W. Worcs., forming a suburb of Birmingham on the south-west. The church is dedicated to St. Stephen.

Selly Oak, eccl. pa. and manufacturing dis., pa. of Northfield (q.v.), N.W. Worcs., adjoining Birmingham on the south-west. The church of St. Mary is in Dec. style. There are also places of worship for various bodies of Nonconformists. The Institute contains a library, news and reading rooms, and a large hall for public entertainments. Evans' Cottage Homes (1868) consist of nine dwellings for ladies of reduced fortunes. Here is a pumping station of the Birmingham Corporation Waterworks. Sheathing for the bottoms and sides of vessels is manufactured here.

Selmeston, pa., S. Sussex, 7 S.E. of Lewes; ac. 1,599; soil marl and clay, overlying chiefly chalk and clay. The church (dedication unknown), rebuilt 1867, is chiefly in E. Eng. style; there are several brasses and a very ancient altar-stone.

Selsdon, ha., pa. of Sanderstead (q.v.), E. Surrey, adjoining the vil. of Sanderstead. S. Park is a seat.

Selsea Bill, the southern point of the peninsula on which the pa. of Selsey (q.v.), or Selsea, stands. It lies about 6 S. of Chichester Harbour.

Selsey, or Selsea (i.e. "Seals' Island"), pa. (once forming a peninsula) and large vil., S.W. Sussex, 8½ S. of Chichester; ac. 2,600 and 1,447 water and foreshore. S. is a very healthy place, with fine sands on its south-western coast, and affords a good view of the Isle of Wight. The vil., about a mile from the sea and consisting of three streets, is very clean, and has a considerable crab, lobster, and prawn fishery. There is a lifeboat station, and good anchorage for yachts all the year round. S., the original seat of the see of Chichester, was granted to St. Wilfrid, and here he built a cathedral. In 1072 Stigand removed the see to Chichester. The church of St. Peter, erected in 1865, wholly from the materials of the nave of the old church, on a commanding site at the entrance to the vil., is in E. Eng. style; the font is Norm. The chancel of the old church at Norton is still standing, about two miles from the vil., and is used as a chapel for burials and occasional services. There is a chapel for Bible Christians, erected in 1867. A lecture hall was built in 1885.

Selside, eccl. pa. and vil., pa. of and 4 N.W. from Kendal (q.v.), S. Westmd. The church of St. Thomas (restored 1893) is in Gothic style. The charities amount to about £10 yearly. One of the formerly-noted coach inns, called the "Plough," now little better than a farmhouse, is still standing. S. Hall (now a farmhouse) dates from the earlier part of the 15th cent.; the central portion originally contained the great dining-hall, but has been considerably altered. In the cross wall at one end of the first floor of this block is a secret chamber communicating with the roof, and also, by a narrow passage, with an opening in the floor concealed by a closet; the south wing has walls 3½ ft. thick, and the basement is divided by a wall into two barrel-vaulted chambers; the room above has trefoil-headed windows of the Dec. period. Watch Gate and See Gate were approaches to S. Hall. Ice Bridge House is a seat.

of All Saints (1862) is in E. Dec. style. There is a Primitive Methodist chapel.

Selson, ha., pa. of and ½ N.W. from Eastry (q.v.), E. Kent.

Selston, pa. and large straggling vil., W. Notts., on the borders of Derbys. (from which it is separated by the Erewash), 9 S.W. of Mansfield; ac. 3,318; soil sandy, overlying sand and limestone. The church of St. Helen is E. Eng.; the chancel is Norm. There is a monument to the Dixie family, and a tombstone with figure of a priest holding the flagon and cup. The church of St. Michael and All Angels (1889) is in Gothic style. The Baptists, Congregationalists, Primitive Methodists, and Free Church have chapels here. The inhabitants are mostly employed in the ironworks and collieries.

Selwood Forest, E. Somerset, on the borders of Wilts. It appears to have extended over a vale of about 20,000 ac., nearly all of which has been cleared and converted into arable and pasture land, with a small portion of meadow.

Selworthy, pa. and vil., W. Somerset, 4 W. of Minehead, on the road to Porlock; ac. 2,835; soil loamy, overlying gravel. The church of All Saints (restored 1874) is Perp. There are several monuments and brasses, principally to the Staynings family, former lords of the manor; in the church, secured by a chain, is a copy of Bishop Jewel's "Defence." In the churchyard is an ancient stone cross about 12 ft. in height. Part of the rectory dates from the 14th cent., and attached is a 15th-cent. tithe-barn. At S. Green are several pleasantly-situated cottages, appropriated to the use of the poor and supported by Sir T. D. Acland. S. Beacon, in this pa., is 1,014 ft., and Bossington Beacon 798 ft. above the sea-level; the latter is a landmark to vessels in the Bristol Channel. Situated on a high hill overlooking the church is an ancient encampment of an elliptical form, consisting of a rampart of stones and earth. Holnicote House has been twice destroyed by fire; it is a plain building, pleasantly situated in beautiful grounds and commanding a fine view of the surrounding country; and the woods and plantation are traversed by many pleasant walks, extending for nearly 40 miles, which by permission of the owner (Sir T. D. Acland) are open to the public. On the walls of the stables are arranged thirty stags' heads, with the dates when killed. The 15th-cent. gateway belonging to the old house still remains.

Semer, pa. and vil. on the Bret, S.E. Suff., 3 N.W. of Hadleigh; ac. 1,248; soil mixed, overlying stone, sand, gravel, and clay. The church of All Saints (restored 1873) is Norm. The annual value of the charities is 40s. The workhouse of Cosford union is in this pa. S. Lodge is a seat.

Semington, vil., pa. of Steeple Ashton (q.v.), W. Wilts., 2 S. of Melksham. The Wilts and Berks Canal here joins the Kennet and Avon Canal. The chapel of St. George (restored 1860) is E. Eng., and has a curious much-worn inscription in Norm.-French. The Wesleyans have a place of worship. Here also is situated the workhouse for Melksham.

Semley, pa. and vil., S. Wilts., 3 N. of Shaftesbury; ac. 2,945; soil clay, overlying gravel. There is a richly-wooded country in the background on the north, and the Dorsetshire hills are seen in the distance stretching along its front in the south. The old church of St. Leonard was pulled down in 1874, and the present church, in E. Dec. style, was erected in the following year. The Baptists have a chapel. The charities amount to about £10 a year.

South Porch, Semperingham Church.

Semperingham, large pa. and tp., S. Lincs., 8 N. of Bourn; ac. of pa. 4,332, of tp. 1,949; soil loam, overlying gravel and clay. The church of St. Andrew (restored 1869) stands on an eminence overlooking the Fen district and about ½ mile from any house, though it was formerly surrounded by a vil. It is principally Norm., and originally formed part of the abbey church; there is a plain Norm. doorway on the north side, and a very fine one on the south side. The pa. was the birthplace of Sir Gilbert de Sempringham, founder of the Gilbertines, an order including religious of both sexes, living in separate houses within one enclosure. Here was erected the first house of the new order. At the dissolution it was given by the king to Lord Clinton, afterwards Earl of Lincoln, who built a fine mansion out of the materials; but on the death of the second earl, in 1616, it was pulled down, and only a few irregular mounds mark the site. The moated area on which it stood can still be traced near the church. S. Fen extends 4½ E. of the church. S. House, now a farm, lies 1 E.

Senlac, the ancient name of the hill in E. Sussex on which the battle of Senlac or Hastings was fought in 1066, between Harold II. and William the Norman. According to Freeman, it is the site of the town of Battle. [BATTLE (1).]

Sennen, pa. and vil., S.W. Cornw., 9 S.W. of Penzance; ac. 2,235; soil clay-slate, overlying granite. This is the most westerly pa. in England, and contains the Lands End. The church of St. Sennen (restored 1867) is Perp.; portions of the rood-stairs remain; and there is part of a fresco, and a headless figure (probably of the Blessed Virgin). An ancient granite cross stands in the churchyard, and there are two others in the pa.

Sennen Cove, fishing ha., pa. of Sennen (q.v.), S.W. Cornw., about 9 S.W. of Penzance. Here is a mission church and a Sunday school.

Sennicotts, chap. and ha., pa. of and 3 S.E. from Funtington (q.v.), S.W. Sussex. The church of St. Mary is in E. Eng. style. S. is a seat.

Senny (1), tp., pa. of Devynnock (q.v.), W. Brecons., 8 S.W. of Brecon; ac. 7,691.

Senny (2), or Senni, stream, S.W. Brecons., runs N. to the Usk, which it joins about 7 miles (in a direct line) from its source and about 8 W. of Brecknock. Beside it formerly stood a fortress called Castell Dû (= "Black Castle"), the name of which is retained by an adjoining farm; this castle is supposed to have been the residence of the constable of the great forest (Fforest Fawr) which covered the Black Mountains.

Senwick, ancient pa., now in pa. of Borgue (q.v.), S. Kirkcuds., Sc. There is a ruined church about 5 S.W. of Kirkcudbright. S. House is a seat.

Sephton. [SEFTON.]

Serjeants' Inn, Fleet Street, pa. of Central London, E. Middx., ½ W. of St. Paul's; ac. ½. The inn is said to have been granted to the Dean and Chapter of York in 1409; it was occupied by the Judges and Serjeants-at-Law from 1627 to 1730. The buildings on its site have been converted to various other purposes. The arms of the inn remain over the gateway in Fleet Street.

Seven Churches. [GLENDALOUGH.]

Sevenhampton (1), pa. and vil. on the Coln, Mid Glouc., 7 E. of Cheltenham; ac. 3,325; soil and subsoil clay and oolite. The church of St. Andrew (restored 1892) is chiefly E. Eng.; it contains a brass to William Lawrence (1694). There are Baptist chapels. Brockhampton Park, a seat, is surrounded by a fine park.

Sevenhampton (2), chap. and vil., pa. of Highworth (q.v.), N. Wilts., 6 N.E. of Swindon. The church of St. James (1863) is in E. Eng. style. Warneford Place is a seat.

Seven Heads, cape and bay, S. co. Cork, Ir., 8 S.W. of the Old Head of Kinsale. The cape lies between the bay and Clonakilty Bay.

Sevenoaks, pa., U. and mkt. to., head of Co. Co. dis. and petty sess. div., W. Kent, 7 N.W. of Tonbridge; ac. 6,805. The town, which is built on high ground, consists of two principal streets. In the time of Queen Elizabeth the assizes for the co. used to be held in this town. The church of St. Nicholas, a spacious edifice of Kentish rag, is Perp. The chancel, which is separated from the nave by a low stone wall, has a good modern open hammer-beam roof of oak, the principals springing from bold wood brackets, some of which bear demi-figures of angels. The oaken pulpit, dated 1628, is panelled; the upper panels are separated by pilasters adorned with scroll work and enclosed arches much enriched with dental ornament. The font has an octagonal basin, with sides panelled in quatrefoils, enclosing some shields of arms and Tudor roses. In the north aisle are a number of fine and interesting mural monuments, including at the east end a very large rectangular monument of white marble, with fluted pilasters supporting an entablature and bust by Chantrey to Charles, first and only Earl Whitworth (d. 1825). Another large and elaborately-wrought marble monument displays an oval tablet with scroll work and drapery, enclosed by an arch on fluted pilasters, at the foot of which are two figures of weeping infants; there is an inscription to John Fermor (d. 1722) and to Sir Henry Fermor, Bart. (d. 1734), and above an achievement of arms, richly emblazoned in gold and colours. A third monument, also of marble, has the standing figure of a lady under a canopy with curtains held aside by angels, over which is a lozenge with arms, and below an inscription to Margaret, relict of Sir William Boswell, Knight, erected in 1692; there is another monument, of considerable interest, to Lady Margery (Clerke) of Ford-in-Wrotham (d. 1618); at the top of the monument is an achievement of arms and on either side are three impaled or quartered shields, all bearing traces of colour. At the west end of this aisle are several monuments to the Lambarde family; these include one of marble, painted and gilt, with arms and crest, to William Lambarde (d. 1601), founder, in 1588, of Queen Elizabeth's College (or Hospital) at Greenwich, and author (1576) of the "Perambulation of Kent;" and there are memorials to Sir Multon Lambarde, Knight (d. 1676), and Jane his wife, and to others of this family (1808–26). The south aisle retains a piscina at the east end, and has two monuments in white and grey marble, adorned with shields of arms and carvings of weapons of war and standards, to Field-Marshal Jeffery, first Baron Amherst, K.B. (d. 1797), and to other members of this family. In the tower is a large monument, with arms, to the Lake family (1788–1834). The eccl. pa. of St. John the Baptist has a church in Gothic style. There are also Roman Catholic and Nonconformist places of worship. A stock market is held the third Wednesday in the month. Queen Elizabeth's Grammar School (founded 1432) received a charter from Queen Elizabeth in 1560; there are some exhibitions and prizes. George Grote (b. 1794), classical historian, received his early education here. There are almshouses with weekly payments, a cottage hospital (founded in 1873), a hospital for children with hip disease, and a fever hospital. St. Michael's Orphanage was established in 1893. Between the old town and St. John's portion of the dis. is a public recreation ground, called the Vine Pleasure Ground. Near S., in 1450, Sir Humphrey Stafford, knighted at the second battle of St. Albans (1461), was defeated and slain by Jack Cade. Knole is a seat. [KNOLE (3).]

Seven Oaks, tp. and vil., pa. of Great Budworth (q.v.), N. Chesh., 5 N.W. of Northwich; ac. 631. The Society of Friends have a meeting-house here, near an old oak beneath which, tradition says, George Fox preached. Comberbatch House is a seat.

Sevenoaks (or Western) Division, one of the eight parl. divs. of Kent. It returns one member.

Sevenoaks Weald, eccl. pa. and vil., pa. of and about 2½ s. from Sevenoaks (q.v.), W. Kent. The church of St. George is in E. Eng. style. The Wesleyans have a chapel. There are almshouses for eight poor parishioners.

Seven Springs, source of the river Churn, pa. of Cubberley (q.v.), Mid Glouc., 3 s. of Cheltenham. It is one of the sources of the Thames, into which the Churn flows.

Seven Stones, reef near south-west extremity of Cornwall, 7 w. of Lands End. The reef is about a mile in length. There is a lightship on its east side, with lights visible about 10 miles.

Severn (1), river of Montgoms., Salop, Staffs., Worcs., and Glouc. It has its source in a small lake on the east side of Plinlimmon, in the south-west part of Montgoms., whence it flows E. by S. to Llanidloes, and thence E. by N. and N.E. to Llandinam. From Llandinam it winds past Caersws to Newtown, and, after passing that place, pursues its course N.E. and N.N.E. past Welshpool to the English border. At Newtown it assumes the proportions of a river, and at Welshpool it becomes navigable. On entering Salop it is joined by the Vyrnwy, near the vil. of Melverley. From Melverley to Shrewsbury the river follows a sinuous course, its general direction being E. by S. In its progress towards Shrewsbury it passes Shrawardine, Ford, and Montford. From Shrewsbury it winds S.E. and E. by S. past Atcham, Wroxeter, Leighton, and Buildwas to Broseley and Coalbrookdale. Between Atcham and Wroxeter it is joined by the Tern. After it has left Ironbridge the river runs S. by E. through S.E. Salop, the extreme south-west corner of Staffs., and N.W. Worcs. to Worcester, passing the towns of Bridgnorth in Staffs. and Bewdley and Stourport in Worcs. Apley Park (q.v.), a few miles north of Bridgnorth, is famous for the "Terrace" which crowns the steep wooded bank of the river, commanding beautiful views. At Stourport it is joined by the Stour, and just below Worcester by the Teme. From this point the river flows S. past Upton-on-Severn to Tewkesbury, which is just within the Glouc. border. In its winding course S.W. from Tewkesbury to the head of its estuary it passes through the city of Gloucester, above which its cleavage into two branches forms the fertile Isle of Alney (q.v.). Between Gloucester and Sharpness Point its course is so devious that a ship-canal about 18 miles long has been cut so as to form a more direct route. At Sharpness Point begins the noble estuary, about 18 miles long, famous for its bore, which often rises to a height of 4 or 5 ft. The length of the river is 180 miles. Its banks present a great variety of picturesque scenery. The Severn Tunnel, connecting Glouc. and Mon., is the longest in England. Its total length is 4¼ miles, and for 2¼ miles of this it is carried beneath the river. It was begun in March, 1873, and opened for traffic Jan. 1, 1886.

Severn (2), river, N.R. Yorks., rises on the moors above Rosedale, 7 S.W. by W. of Egton, and for 8 miles traverses Rosedale Valley, passing the vil. and the ruined Benedictine priory; then runs near Lastingham and by Sinnington and Normanby, joining the Rye close to Butterwick, 4½ N.N.W. of New Malton. The direction of its course is S. by E., and its length about 17 miles.

Severn Stoke, pa. and vil. on the east bank of the Severn, S. Worcs., 7 s. of Worcester, on the road to Tewkesbury; ac. 3,313; soil loam and clay, overlying clay. The church of St. Denis (restored 1890) is E. Eng., Dec., and Perp., with some traces of Norm. work at the west end. Severn Bank, surrounded by magnificent woods stretching away to the Severn, and affording delightful views of the river, S. Stoke church, and of the park-like scenery in the neighbourhood, is a seat.

Sevington (1), pa., S. Kent, 2½ S.E. of Ashford; ac. 833; soil light loam, overlying rock. The church of St. Mary is E. Eng., with two Perp. windows and some Pointed Norm. and Saxon work. There is a 14th-cent. chapel on the south side of the chancel, now partially restored. Seven stones remain, with the matrices of brasses the figures in which were all of large size; they chiefly commemorated members of the Barré family.

Sevington (2), vil., pa. of and 1 S.W. from Leigh Delamere (q.v.), N.W. Wilts.

Seward's End, ha., pa. of and 2 E. from Saffron Walden (q.v.), N. Essex. Here is a mission chapel served from Saffron Walden, and the Baptists have a school-chapel. The Tower, on a high tableland, in pleasant grounds, is a seat.

Sewardstone, ha., pa. of Waltham Abbey (q.v.), S.W. Essex, 2½ s. of Waltham Cross. S. Lodge is a seat; and Gillwell Park, also a seat, is an old hunting-lodge built in the time of Edward VI., and enlarged in the 18th cent.

Sewerby and Marton, eccl. pa. and tp. on Bridlington Bay, pa. of and 1½ N.E. from Bridlington (q.v.), E.R. Yorks.; ac. 2,116. The church of St. John was built in 1847, in Norm. style. There is a Wesleyan chapel. The school has a small endowment. Marton Hall and S. House are seats.

Sewstern, tp. and vil., pa. of and 1 s. from Buckminster (q.v.), N.E. Leics.; ac. 1,062. There is a chapel-of-ease, erected 1842.

Sexhow, tp., pa. of Rudby-in-Cleveland (q.v.), N.R. Yorks., 4 S.W. by W. of Stokesley, on the south side of the vale of the Leven; ac. 528. The ancient manor house, on the south bank of the Leven, is now occupied as a farmhouse.

Seymour Court. [MARLOW, GREAT.]

Seymour Tower, rock near south-east extremity of Jersey, Channel Islands, 5 E.S.E. of St. Helier.

Sezincote, pa., N.E. Glouc., 18 s. of Stratford-on-Avon; ac. 1,413; soil clay and gravel, overlying clay and oolite. The church was pulled down in 1712, and has not been rebuilt. S. House, a building in Oriental style, is a seat.

Shadoxhurst, pa. and vil., S. Kent, 4½ S.W. of Ashford; ac. 2,127; soil heavy, overlying clay. The church of SS. Peter and Paul is E. Eng. and Dec. The chancel contains a quantity of ancient armour, and there is a large marble monument to Admiral Molloy. The charities amount to about £5 yearly. Here is a Wesleyan chapel.

Shadwell (1), pa. of E. London, on the north bank of the Thames, E. Middx., 2 E. by S. of St. Paul's; ac. 68. The pa. comprises Upper S. and Lower S., the latter consisting mainly of the London Dock, with the adjoining warehouses and wharves, and a new fish market. The inhabitants include many sailors, sailmakers, coopers, provision merchants, ship-chandlers, and others engaged in industries connected with the sea. The church of St. Paul (rebuilt 1821) is a brick structure with an imposing tower and spire.

Shadwell (2), eccl. pa., tp., and vil., pa. of Thorner (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., 5 N.E. of Leeds; ac. 1,048. The church of St. Paul is Norm., and retains a piscina and sedilia. There is a Wesleyan chapel.

Shadwell (3), ha., pa. of and 1½ S.E. from Rushford (q.v.), S.W. Norf. S. Court, a beautiful modern mansion of Domestic Gothic architecture, in the centre of a well-wooded park, takes its name from St. Chad's Well, a celebrated spring near the house, formerly much frequented by pilgrims.

Shadycombe, ha., pa. of Marlborough (q.v.), S. Devon, 3 S.W. of Kingsbridge.

Shaftenhoe, or Shaftenhoe End. [SHAFTON (2).]

Shaftesbury, pa., mun. bor., and mkt. to. (s.), N. Dorset, on the Wilts. border, 15 E.N.E. of Sherborne; ac. of bor. 156. S. formerly contained parts of three pas. which have now lost their separate existence, and the parts within the bor. constitute the pa. of S. This is a very ancient town, said to be the Mount Palladur Caer Septon of the ancient Britons, and was a Roman settlement; Roman coins have been found here. It had Pagan temples, on the site whereof a Benedictine abbey was built by Alfred, A.D. 888. The site of the abbey is well ascertained, though scarcely any remains of its buildings are to be seen; it was a place of great resort for pilgrims, and is said to have had one of the richest endowments in England. King Edward the Martyr, murdered at Corfe Castle by his mother-in-law Elfrida, A.D. 978, was buried here. S. is situated on an eminence, the approach to which is by a steep ascent. Some of the houses are very ancient, but the upper portion of the town is modern. A little to the south and west from the Holy Trinity church is The Park, a promenade sheltered from the north winds by a row of trees, partially extending over the walk. St. Peter's, the most ancient, was built in the latter part of the 15th cent; it has not been in constant use since 1878. Holy Trinity church, in Bimport Street, was rebuilt (1842) on the old site, chiefly in E. Eng. style. The churchyard of the Holy Trinity contains three handsome avenues of lime-trees, shading most of the walks through the burying-ground and approaches to the church. The church of St. James, originally Dec., was rebuilt in 1866–67. The Congregationalists and Wesleyans have chapels, and there are meeting-houses for the Friends and Brethren. Other public buildings are the Town Hall, the Temperance Hall, and the Literary Institution. The charities of the town are numerous and valuable. In Salisbury Street are some handsome almshouses, of very ancient foundation, for men and women, who receive an allowance of six shillings a week. There are a few other minor charities. The Westminster Memorial Cottage Hospital, a handsome structure in the Park Road, was built as a memorial to the second Marquess of Westminster; it was opened on March 16, 1874. The trade of the town is derived principally from the supply of the neighbouring agricultural villages, and from the sale of cheese and butter, the produce of the superior grazing-land in the vicinity. A handsome market-house was erected at the expense of the Marquess of Westminster. The fairs are held on the Saturday before Palm Sunday, on the last Saturday in August, and Nov. 23—for sheep, cattle, cheese and agricultural produce, and pleasure.

Shalfleet, pa. and vil., I. of W., about 4 E. of Yarmouth ; ac. 6,310 and 361 water and foreshore ; soil clay and sand. The church (dedication unknown), restored 1890, is chiefly E. Eng., with some Norm. remains. The north porch contains some curious stone-carving. The Baptists, Wesleyans, and Primitive Methodists have chapels.

Shalford (1), pa. and small vil. on the Pant, N. Essex, 5 N.N.W. of Braintree ; ac. 2,455 ; soil mixed, overlying sand, gravel, and clay. The church of St. Andrew (restored 1872) is Dec. The chancel is separated from the nave by an ancient oak screen ; there are piscinæ and sedilia, a squint, and canopied recess, under which is a tomb supporting a tomb-slab once enclosing a brass. In both of the aisles are similar canopied tombs with shields of arms, but without any inscription. At the east end of the chancel is a 16th-cent. brass, also a 17th-cent. brass with Latin inscription. The upper part of the east window retains some ancient heraldic glass. The Congregationalists have a chapel. Abbots Hall is a seat.

Shalford (2), pa. and vil., S.W. Surrey, about 1 S. of Guildford ; ac. 2,590 ; soil sandy, overlying sand. The church of St. Mary the Virgin (rebuilt 1846) is in E. Eng. style. The Wesleyans have a chapel. S. Village Hall has large concert and reading rooms. A training school for domestic servants was established here in 1872. The charities are small. There are breweries, flour mills, and a tannery. S. House, now modernised and enlarged, was built in the reigns of Queen Elizabeth and James I., on the site of the ancient rectorial manor house ; of the original mansion, there still remains a panelled room with a carved oak chimney-piece, including a quartered shield of arms.

Shanklin, pa., to., and watering-place, I. of W., 9 s. of Ryde; ac. 675; soil various, overlying greensand. A small portion of the town is situated under high cliffs, but the more fashionable part is on elevated ground, having delightful views of the sea and very romantic inland scenery. There is a pier with landing-stage for steamboats at low water, and a lift in the face of the cliff connects the Esplanade with the town. The church of St. John the Baptist (restored 1859) is a cruciform Perp. building; the original part was built in the reign of King Stephen, when his brother, Henry de Blois, was Bishop of Winchester; it contains a piscina, also a very curious chest carved with the name of Thomas Silksted, once Prior of Winchester. There are eccl. pas. with modern churches. A small Catholic iron church is dedicated to the "Sacred Heart;" and various Nonconformist bodies have places of worship. The Literary and Scientific Institute (1879) is a brick building; it has a well-provided reading-room, and the large hall is licensed for dramatic and musical performances. The Conservative Club, in Palmerston Road, contains billiard and reading rooms and library. The Home of Rest, in Sandown Road, belongs to the Girls' Friendly Society. The town has good hotels, two excellent libraries, many private villas, and lodging-houses.

Shanklin Chine, a deep chasm in one of the lofty cliffs which bound the bay on which the pa. of Shanklin (q.v.) is situated. It commences about half a mile from the shore, and gradually increases in breadth and depth until it reaches the sea, where its width is about 180 ft. and its depth 270 ft. A pathway has been cut along the side of the chine, through which a rivulet flows.

230 miles in a south-west direction, through co. Leit., along the borders of cos. Roscom., Galway, Longf., Wstm., K. Co., Clare, Tip., Lim., and Kerry, separating Connaught from Leinster and Munster, to the Atlantic Ocean, which it joins at Loop Head. Its basin is 6,060 square miles. The main tributaries of the S. are, on its right bank, the Boyle Water, Suck, and Fergus; on the left bank the Rinn, Camlin, Inny, Brosna, Little Brosna, Mulkear, Maigue, and Deel. The principal loughs into which it expands are Loughs Allen, Forbes, Boffin, Ree, and Derg. It is known as the Upper S. from the source to Lough Forbes; as the Middle S., from there to Limerick; and from Limerick to its mouth as the Lower S. It falls 144 ft. in its course from Lough Allen to Limerick, the most noticeable falls being at Lough Ree, Meelick, and Castle Connell. The tide flows up to Limerick, and vessels of 1,000 tons can ascend to that point. The S. is connected with Dublin by the Royal Canal, which joins it at Richmond Harbour, near Cloondara, co. Longf., and by the Grand Canal, which joins it at S. Harbour, near Banagher, K. Co. The estuary of the S. (from Loop Head to Limerick) is 70 miles in length, and varies in breadth from 1 to 10 miles; it has lighthouses at Beeves, Tarbert, Kilcredane, and Loop Head. The S. is, owing to the canals, navigable for small vessels as far as Lough Allen, and steamers go to Athlone. The country through which it flows is on the whole flat; the stream itself is sluggish, and the soil on its banks generally extensive bog or deep clay. The estuary has a considerable number of sandbanks and islands, and the river frequently expands, throughout its course, into lakes of some size, and overflows the low-lying lands on its banks. Among the important places situated on its banks are Drumshambo, Carrick-on-Shannon, Jamestown, Roosky, Cloondara, Lanesborough, Athlone, Clonmacnoise, Shannon Bridge, Banagher, Portumna, Killaloe, Limerick, Foynes, Glin, and Kilrush.

Shannon Bridge, vil. and fortified military station on the Shannon, pa. of Clonmacnoise (q.v.), W. K. Co., Ir., 8 W. of Ferbane. The bridge here crossing the river is 400 ft. long, with sixteen arches.

Shannon Harbour, vil. and port for the Grand Canal, pa. of Gallen (q.v.), W. K. Co., Ir., 2½ N. of Banagher. Formerly this was the western terminus of the canal, and formed a ready and direct communication from east to west of Ireland by means of the canal; but since the extension of the canal through Galway to Ballinasloe and the construction of railways it is only used as a port for goods.

Shanrahan, pa., Iffa and Offa West bar., S. co. Tip., Ir., 7 S.W. of Caher; ac. 24,922. It comprises parts of the Galtee and Knockmealdown ranges of mountains, with the intervening valley. Shanbally, a seat, is beautifully situated in extensive grounds.

Shantavny, mountain (1,035 ft.), S. co. Tyr., Ir., 3 N.W. of Ballygawley.

Shap, large mountain pa. and mkt. to. (M.), N. Westmd., about 10 S.S.E. of Penrith; ac. 26,867 and 310 water. Around the town and in the valleys the land is fertile, the soil being a rich loam and the subsoil gravel. The Lowther flows through the pa. The to., from its elevated and exposed position, is bleak and cold. The church of St. Michael is chiefly Norm., with a low western tower of later date. The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have chapels. There is a parish room, and in 1872 a reading-room and library was opened. Fairs for cattle, sheep, and merchandise are held on May 4 and September 23. Granite is quarried and worked, and patent pavement is made here. The pa. school has an endowment. The charities distributed in money and bread amount to about £40 a year. The gift, in 1692, of Philip, fourth Baron Wharton, provides fifty Bibles, thirty prayer-books, and three reward books for distribution among the children of this pa. The Premonstratensian abbey of S. was originally founded at Preston in the reign of Henry II., and was afterwards transferred by the founder to a spot about 1 W. of the to., in the deep and secluded valley of the Lowther, on the left bank of which river the ruins now stand. The abbey consisted of a presbytery, with chapels on the south side, transepts with eastern chapels, and clerestoried nave of six bays, with north aisle and western tower. Nearly the whole of this was E. Eng. work; additions were made late in the 15th or early in the 16th cent., when the western tower was erected. The remains consist of this tower and fragments of the walls. The outer court of the abbey is now covered with farm-buildings; and of the gatehouse, which probably stood on the north-west, no traces are now left. In the pa. are many prehistoric remains, chiefly barrows and cairns; at Gunnerkeld, 1½ N. of the to., is a megalithic circle with an avenue; and at Karl Lofts, 2 S., are similar remains, which are often attributed to the Druids. Stone implements have been found.

Shap Fells, elevated tract, N. Westmd., to the south of the to. of Shap. This dis. is subject to the "helm wind," which, rushing down the western side of the hills, expends itself with great violence on the plain below, and is often very destructive, especially to standing corn.

Shapinshay, pa. and island, Ork., Sc., 6 S. of Kirkwall, with which there is daily communication by steamer; ac. 6,733. Fairs for horses and cattle are held here on the second Monday in March and the first Monday before Kirkwall Lammas market. Balfour Castle, in Scotch Baronial style, is a seat.

Shap Wells, mineral spa situated in a pleasant dale, pa. of Orton (q.v.), Mid Westmd., 4 S.E. of Shap. The water is said to be of service in many skin affections, and the wells are becoming a place of fashionable resort.

Shapwick (1), pa. and vil. on the Stour, E. Dors., 5 S.E. of Blandford; ac. 2,683; soil light loam, overlying chalk. The church of St. Bartholomew (restored 1879-80) is E. Eng. The Primitive Methodists have a chapel. In the time of Henry III. there was a market, and in the vil. are still the remains of a cross. A small priory was founded here in the 15th cent.

Shapwick (2), pa. and vil., Mid Somerset, 6½ E. of Bridgwater; ac. 3,322; soil clayey, overlying stone. The church of St. Mary is E. Eng. and Perp., and contains mural tablets to the Bull and Shardlow, or Shardlow-with-Wilne, pa. and vil. on the Trent, S.E. Derbys., 7 E.S.E. of Derby; ac. 1,100; soil loamy, overlying gravel. The church of St. James was built in 1838, in Perp. style. Here is a Wesleyan chapel. The charities are small. Brewing and malting are carried on. S. Hall (built 1684) and S. House (built 1726) are seats.

Shareshill, pa., tp., and vil., S.W. Staffs., 5½ N. of Wolverhampton; ac. of pa. 2,815, of tp. 887; soil gravelly. The church of St. Mary (originally St. Luke) was rebuilt (with the exception of the Perp. tower) in 1748, when the altar-tomb of Sir Humphrey Swinnerton and Cassandra his wife was broken up. The charities are small. There are vestiges of two camps, supposed to be Roman.

Shark, Lough, close to the Newry Canal, on the borders of cos. Armagh and Down, Ir., 2 N. of Poynts Pass.

Sharlstone, tp. and vil., pa. of Warmfield (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., 4½ S.E. of Wakefield; ac. 1,199. The church of St. Luke (1887) is a chapel-of-ease to Warmfield. There is a chapel attached to the colliery school. Brick-making is carried on, and there is an extensive colliery. A Roman road passes through this tp. S. Hall, an Elizabethan house, is now occupied as a farmhouse.

Sharnbrook, pa., large vil., and head of petty sess. div., on the Ouse (here crossed by a fine railway bridge of ten arches), N. Beds., 8 N.W. of Bedford; ac. 2,387 (including Colworth Farm); soil clay, overlying clay and gravel. The church of St. Peter (restored 1882) is chiefly Dec., with Perp. insertions; the chancel has a groined piscina, and a seat below the adjoining south window. In the south aisle is another piscina, and in the north chapel are three E. Dec. sedilia and a trefoiled piscina. There is a brass to William Cobbe, Knight (1525), Alys his wife, and Thomas their son. The monument to Sir Oliver Boteler, Knight, with shields of arms and a genealogical account of his family (formerly in the north chapel), has been removed to the west end of the church; there are memorials of modern date to the families of Gibbard, Antonie, Magniac, and Bullock. There are two Baptist chapels. The police station, with sessions house attached, is a building of brick with stone dressings. Colworth is a handsome stone mansion in Italian style, erected between 1720–60; Ouse Manor, S. House, and The Toft are also seats.

Sharplow Point, hill in Dovedale, S.W. Derbys., commanding a fine view of the dale in both directions.

Sharpness (1), seaport and vil. on the eastern bank of the Severn, on a ness or promontory (S. Point) formed by a bend of the stream towards the south, pa. of Berkeley (q.v.). S.W. Gloucs., 16 S. of Gloucester. S. was until 1879 the terminus of the branch line of the Gloucester and Birmingham branch of the Midland Railway, but in that year a new bridge was completed, by which the line is carried across the Severn and continued to Lydney. The bridge, opened in 1879, occupied four years in construction. It is 4,162 feet in length, including a viaduct of masonry (70 feet in height) on the north side of the river, and a swing bridge (200 feet in length) spanning the Gloucester and Berkeley Canal and the shore on the south side. The bridge proper consists of 21 openings, which comprise bows and girders carried on cast-iron cylinders sunk deeply into the rocky bed of the river and filled with concrete. This line shortens the distance from South Wales to Bristol by 30 miles, and besides affording increased facilities for shipping coal and carrying on the general trade of the district, it furnishes an improved means of communication for the extensive traffic maintained between the Forest of Dean and the south-west of England. The docks here are extensive, situated about half a mile below the old entrance to the canal; and there are timber jetties extending into the river Severn for a distance of 400 feet. The larger ships for the port of Gloucester berth here. The chief imports are grain, timber, and petroleum; the exports being mostly coal, salt, and pitch. There is a large pleasure ground laid out by the dock company. An iron church was erected here in 1877; there are also Catholic, Wesleyan, and Congregational chapels. S. Point is much frequented during the summer months. (See page 409.)

Shean, North, mountain (1,135 ft.), N.W. co. Fermanagh, Ir., 4 N.W. of Derrygonnelly. It is near Lower Lough Erne, and commands a fine view.

Shearsby, chap., tp., and vil., pa. of Knaptoft (q.v.), S. Leics., 8 N.W. of Market Harborough; ac. 1,128. The church of St. Mary Magdalen is E. Eng., and contains an ancient rood-screen of carved oak, sedilia, and a piscina. At an inn in the vil. is a mineral spring called "the Spa," in some repute for its medicinal virtues.

Shearston, pl., pa. of North Petherton (q.v.), Mid Somerset, about 2½ S.W. of Bridgwater.

Shebbear, pa. and vil. near the Torridge (over which is a bridge to Milton Damerel), N. Dev., 9 N.E. of Holsworthy; ac. 5,827; soil clay, overlying stone and clay. The church of St. Michael (restored 1872) is Perp.; the porch has a fine Norm. arch. Under an obtuse arch in the south aisle is a tomb with recumbent sandstone effigy of a female in a flowing robe, mantle, and veil, and holding a rosary, her head being supported by angels; the figure (c. 1400) is traditionally said to represent Lady Prendergast, of Ladford. Here are Wesleyan, Baptist, and Bible Christian chapels, and near the vil. is the Bible Christian Connexional College. The charities are considerable, and are applied for the relief of the poor, and the repair and maintenance of the church, church house, and almshouses.

Sheepshed, or Shepshed, pa. and vil., Mid Leics., 5 W. of Loughborough; ac. 5,280. The church of St. Botolph (erected in the 12th cent.) is Perp. In the chancel is a brass (discovered in 1844) with an inscription to Thomas Duport (d. 1592); there are also several handsome monuments to the Phillipps family, which include one to Sir Ambrose Phillipps, Knight (d. 1691). In the pa. is the Catholic chapel of St. Winefride; and there are places of worship for various Nonconformist bodies. Granite is quarried.

Sheepstor, pa., S.W. Dev., 7 S.E. of Tavistock; ac. 2,192; soil variable, overlying clay and slate. The church, dedication unknown (restored 1862), is a Perp. building, and contains two piscinæ; a squint and the rood-loft stairs remain; there are monuments to Anne Elford (d. 1641), John Elford (d. 1584), Walter Elford (d. 1648), and his wife Barbara (d. 1656). The church house (dating from the 16th cent.) is now used as a parish room. The charities are small. On the Tor is a cavern known as the "Pixies' Cave." Longstone, now a farmhouse, was the seat of the Elford family. Burrator House is a seat.

Sheepwash (1), pa. and small vil. on the Torridge (here crossed by a bridge of five arches), N.W. Dev., about 5 N.W. of Hatherleigh; ac. 1,971; soil disintegrated granite, overlying clay and stone. S. was formerly a considerable market town. The church of St. Lawrence, which was rebuilt in 1880, is in E. Eng. style. The chancel retains sedilia, and has a hammer-beam roof; the font is Norm. There are Baptist and Bible Christian chapels. The Foresters' Hall was built in 1878. A portion of the female population is employed in the silk-glove trade. Upcott Avenel is a seat.

Sheepy Magna, pa., tp., and vil. on the Sence, W. Leics., 5½ W.S.W. of Market Bosworth; ac. of pa. 4,338, of tp. 3,100; soil mixed, overlying gravel. The church of All Saints is Norm. and E. Eng. The Congregationalists have a chapel. There are some small charities.

Sheepy Parva, pa. on the Sence, W. Leics., 3½ N.E. of Atherstone; ac. 600; soil mostly strong, overlying clay. Here are extensive steam and water flour-mills.

Sheering, pa. and vil., W. Essex, 6 S. of Bishop Stortford; ac. 1,632, and 13 water; soil mixed, overlying clay and gravel. The church of St. Mary the Virgin is of various periods; its chief feature is a five-light Perp. window in the chancel, the upper tracery of which is filled with ancient stained glass. Quickbury and S. Hall are seats.

Sheerness, seaport to. and second-class naval establishment at the mouth of the Thames and Medway, Isle of Sheppey, N.W. Kent, 2 S. of Queensborough. S. in the time of Charles I. was a mere swamp, but in the reign of Charles II. a fort was built here, which on July 10, 1667, was captured by the Dutch Admiral De Ruyter, and the defensive works were in consequence strengthened and docks formed. On May 27, 1797, the mutiny of the Nore broke out here, and was not quelled till June 13, several of the ringleaders being executed. The wharf fronts the Medway; the dockyard, which is surrounded by a brick wall, has first-rate docks, a basin with 26 ft. of water, two smaller basins, storehouses, victualling storehouse, mast-house, rigging-house, sail-loft, smitheries, and navy pay-office. There are also residences for the port admiral and captain superintendent. The barracks will contain between 1,500 and 2,000 men; the dockyards give employment to between 1,500 and 2,000 artisans and mechanics. The river has been dredged to allow of large ships of war steaming to Chatham, with which town S. is associated in respect to the Royal Navy. The dockyard church, erected by the Admiralty about 1830, was totally destroyed by fire in November, 1881, but was rebuilt and opened in 1885, and is now a plain structure of brick. The town is strongly defended by fortifications, which extend for 1½ mile; they mount more than 100 guns, many of which are of large calibre and command the entrance of the Thames and Medway. Besides the dockyard business, there is some trade in supplying shipping, as well as in corn and seed. The modern part of the to. is separated from the older part by a moat, crossed by bridges leading to the pier and railway station, and is generally known as Sheerness-on-Sea. It is now a place of popular resort, and has a fine esplanade. The Thames here is about 5 miles broad, and the floating Nore light at the mouth of the river is a prominent beacon. There are several eccl. pas. with modern churches, a Catholic church, and places of worship for various bodies of Nonconformists.

Sheffield, parl., co., and mun. bor., pa., tp., and manufacturing to. on the Don, at its confluence with the Sheaf (whence the name), W.R. Yorks., about 53 s.w. of York; ac. of pa. and bor. 19,651, of tp. 3,028. It is the second largest place in Yorks., being inferior to Leeds alone. S. has from Saxon times been the capital of Hallamshire (q.v.). In the reign of Henry II. the S. manors passed by marriage to Gerard de Furnival, one of the adherents of John, who died at Jerusalem (1218-19) during the fifth Crusade, and his son Thomas was slain by the Saracens while on a pilgrimage; Gerard, the younger son, subsequently removed the relics of his father and brother, and buried them under a splendid tomb in Worksop Priory. At this early period the castle of S. was in existence and regularly garrisoned. A hospital for the sick was founded on the site still called "Spital Hill," but this foundation was abolished by Henry VIII. A bridge over the Don then existed, and a church; and a market was held in the town. A new castle was built in the 13th cent., the castle and town having been destroyed in the baronial wars. George, sixth Earl of Shrewsbury, in the reign of Henry VIII. built a magnificent manor-house in the park; and in 1529 Cardinal Wolsey lodged twelve days here. Of this structure, there are yet some interesting remains, now forming a group of rustic cottages. This nobleman had for twelve years the custody of Mary Queen of Scots, and about 1571 conveyed her to the castle of S., where she remained in captivity till 1584. During the Civil War the Howards strove, but ineffectually, to hold S. Castle for the king. After the battle of Marston Moor (July 2, 1644) Major-General Crawford was sent by the victorious army to besiege S. Castle, which surrendered on a second summons, August 11, 1644, the garrison marching out with the honours of war. In 1648 the castle was dismantled, but Castle Hill, Castle Green, and Castle Folds of the present day mark its site. On the passing of the Reform Act (1832) S. became a parl. bor. and returned two members till 1885, when five divisions were made (Attercliffe, Brightside, Central, Ecclesall, and Hallam), each with one member. The pa. church of St. Peter (restored 1876–80) was originally built by William de Lovetot, lord of the manor of Hallam, in 1110, and appropriated to the manor of Worksop; in the 14th and 15th cents. it appears to have been rebuilt as a cruciform church, and in 1530 the Shrewsbury chapel was erected on the north side of the chancel. A corresponding addition was afterwards made on the south side, and by the further rebuilding of the nave in 1805 the structure assumed its present rectangular form. The Shrewsbury chapel contains a number of fine monuments to the Talbots; the memorial to George, fourth Earl (1488), who was sent to put down the Pilgrimage of Grace (1537), bears recumbent alabaster effigies of himself (d. 1538) and his two wives, Anne (Hastings) and Elizabeth (Walden), the latter of whom survived her husband, and was buried at Erith, in Kent. Both countesses are heraldically attired. On the south side is a monument to George, sixth Earl of Shrewsbury (d. 1590), who in 1568 became the custodian of Mary Queen of Scots, first at Tutbury and afterwards at S., and was present at her execution at Fotheringay, February 8, 1586–87; his effigy, in parcel gilt armour, lies on a mattress surmounting an altar-tomb, at the sides of which are talbots supporting banners. In the centre of the chapel is a plain altar-tomb, and there are other monuments to Francis "Lord Talbot," eldest son of George, sixth Earl, who died in his father's lifetime, and was buried September 3, 1582, and to George Talbot (1577); here is likewise interred Elizabeth, wife of Charles (Stuart), fifth Earl of Lennox, and sister-in-law to Mary Queen of Scots. There are a large number of eccl. pas. with modern churches, several Catholic churches, and many places of worship for the various Nonconformist bodies. The Royal Grammar School was founded in 1603; in 1824 new buildings were erected, but in 1885 these were disposed of to the committee of the Technical School, and a large new block erected in Tudor style. The original scheme was modified by the Charity Commissioners in 1889. Firth College (1879) bears the name of its founder, and is open to persons of either sex who have attained the age of seventeen. The Technical School is said to be one of the most perfect of its kind in Great Britain. The School of Art (1875) is in Romanesque style. Besides these, there are the Church of England Educational Institute, Wesley College, Methodist New Connexion College, endowed and free schools, and many high-class private schools. The principal municipal buildings are the town hall, in Castle Street and Waingate; the Council Hall, in Surrey Street; the General Post Office, in Classic style; the Corn Exchange, in Tudor style. The Norfolk and Fitzalan Market Halls are the property of the Duke of Norfolk; there are separate markets for fruit and vegetables, fish and cattle, etc. Fairs are held on Whit Tuesday and Wednesday, and on the Tuesday and Wednesday after Christmas Day. The Cutlers' Hall contains the offices of the Company for the registration of trade marks and general business; a banqueting-hall, in Italian style, in which the Cutlers' Feast is held; and several good suites of rooms with a fine collection of paintings. The Mappin Art Gallery (1887) is in Greek Ionic style. S. was one of the first boroughs to take advantage of the Public Libraries Act. The Central Library, in Surrey Street, was established in 1855, and since then branch libraries have been opened in other parts of the bor. There are two theatres and a music-hall, and halls for public meetings and entertainments. The Corporation have opened public baths. Here are barracks for infantry and cavalry. The trade of S. had its origin in the manufacture of iron in the neighbouring districts; but its cutlery had already become known in the 14th cent., as appears from Chaucer's allusion to Sheffield "whittles," and in Queen Elizabeth's time the Earl of Shrewsbury presented a case of these to Lord Burghley. The cutlery trade was then regulated by a fellowship, and a company of cutlers and makers of knives, most likely of ancient organisation. A jury of cutlers used likewise to be named by the court leet, the cutlers' marks being then assigned by the lord's court. In 1624 the Cutlers' Company was incorporated by Act of Parliament and jurisdiction given to it within Hallamshire and six miles around it, and in 1638 the company was enabled to build a hall. however, continued to be imported till the reign of Elizabeth, in the fifth year of whose reign (1562–63) some restrictions were laid on this import trade, in order to encourage the London manufacturers. In 1742 Thomas Bolsover discovered the art of silver-plating, and at a later date that of making cast steel was discovered by Benjamin Huntsman, also of this town. The manufacture of silver plate followed these discoveries, and in 1773 an assay office was opened. The refining of the precious metals was introduced by John Read, who settled at S. in 1765. About the middle of the century the Britannia metal manufacture was established, the lead works on the Porter (one of the small streams which supply the mills and forges) were set up, and the first public brewery begun. In 1747 a person named Broadbent is said to have established a foreign trade. The first steam engine is believed to have been erected here by Messrs. Procter and Company in 1785, for the use of a grinding wheel near what has since been known as the "Old Ponds Engine." S. is justly distinguished throughout the world for its cutlery and hardware. Here are produced rails, railway-carriage tyres, axles, wheels, buffers, springs, turntables, railway waggons, bridges, girders, steam engines, steam boilers, ship and boiler plates, armour plates for ships of war, and all kinds of castings and forgings for fixed and rolling stock. In addition to the staple trade of cutlery, files, saws, machine knives, edge tools, joiners' tools, skates, engravers' tools, engineers' tools, hammers, planes, horticultural tools, sheep and garden shears, scythes, sickles and reaping-hooks, hackle and gill pins, needles, wire, cast steel, wire ropes, anvils, vices and portable forges, stove grates, fenders and fireirons, silver, plated and Britannia metal goods are manufactured, and castings are made in iron, brass, and german silver; horn, ivory, and bone are also cut and converted into their various uses. There is a very considerable trade in the heavier kinds of engineers' tools, such as lathes, planing, shaping, and other machines, and lifting-jacks. The casting of steel in large masses is also carried on, and though Herr Krupp has excelled the S. founders in the size of his castings, they have quite equalled him in the soundness and finish of the work, and have erected foundries at which they will produce castings of much greater size. The bor. has several hospitals and nursing institutions, asylums for deaf and dumb and the blind, almshouses, extensive charities, and benevolent societies of various kinds. Few towns are more liberally provided with parks and recreation grounds. Norfolk Park, south-east of the town, consists of about 40 ac. of pleasure ground, planted by Henry Charles, thirteenth Duke of Norfolk, K.G., as a place of recreation for the public. Weston Park, about 1 w. of the market-place, was opened to the public in 1875. The buildings, with additions, have been converted into a museum for the collections presented to the town by the S. Literary and Philosophical Society, and by private persons. There are also here several portraits of local celebrities; the bronze statue of Ebenezer Elliott, formerly in the market-place, has been removed to this park. An observatory containing a telescope is open to the public under certain restrictions. On the west side of the park, and connected with the museum by a corridor, is the Mappin Art Gallery. Firth Park, presented to the town in 1875 by the late Alderman Mark Firth, then Mayor, is situated north of the town; the park contains 36 ac. Meersbrook Park, in the southern suburb of the town, comprises 37 ac. of the original estate; the ground is adorned with fine forest trees, and there is a picturesque ravine at the east end of the wood, and a rose garden and avenues near the hall at the south-east end of the park. The mansion has been fitted up for the reception of the art treasures of the Ruskin Museum, consisting of a small but rich collection of precious stones; a natural history section, composed of the best illustrated works published, many containing original drawings; a botany section, composed of carefully-executed drawings, some being Mr. Ruskin's own work; a small collection of paintings and drawings; a small collection of classical literature, Greek, Latin, and English, all valuable, and some of them rare. The museum is not intended for sightseers, but as an educational institution for art students. The Endcliffe Woods are south-west of the town, and contain about 33 ac. Three reservoirs have been reserved for bathing and skating and for water-fowl. Wharncliffe Chase, about 5 w., is a wild tract of rocky woodland, extending along the steep ridge above the left bank of the river Don and covering an area of 2,000 ac.; it abounds in deer, and its beautiful woods are traversed by many pleasant walks; the natural terrace, which extends along the summit of the ridge, affords delightful views across the densely-foliaged valley of the Don, and below the terrace is a shallow recess in the rocks, encircled by ferny rocks and trees, and known as the "Dragon's Den." The Chase is open to the public on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Saturdays, and is much frequented in the summer season. The Botanical Gardens, containing about 18 ac., include a range of conservatories and a large glazed pavilion for exhibitions, promenades, and other like purposes. They are the property of a company.

Shefford, tp. and mkt. to. (F.), pa. of Campton (q.v.), E. Beds., 9 S.E. of Bedford; ac. 142. The Ivel, an affluent of the Ouse, runs through the to., and affords water communication with Lynn. S. is situated on the road from Hitchin to Bedford, and is remarkably clean and healthy, having its streets very wide and well paved and lighted. The church of St. Michael (restored 1850), a chapel-of-ease to Campton, is a plain edifice of stone, with an ancient Perp. western tower. St. Francis's Home (1869) is a Catholic orphanage for boys; the seminary of St. Thomas Aquinas now forms part of the work at S. The church, dedicated to St. Francis (opened 1884), occupies the site of the former church of St. George the Martyr; it is designed in Perp. style. There are Baptist and Wesleyan chapels. A fair is held on October 11. Gresham's charity (1855), of the value of £30 yearly, is for distribution in money to six poor widows. In a field adjoining the town a great number of beautiful Roman relics have been found, from which a fine collection was formed and purchased for the Fitzwilliam Museum, Cambridge. A Roman encampment, about 1 N., at Stanford Bury, has also furnished some of the finest specimens of Roman glass extant.

Shefford, East, pa. on the Lambourn, S. Berks., 7½ N.W. of Newbury; ac. 1,053; soil gravel and chalk, overlying chalk. The church of the Holy Innocents (1868–70) is in E. Eng. style. The old church (repaired 1887) is a perfect specimen of the Late Perp. period, and was originally the private chapel of the manor-house of the Fettyplace family. In the reparations an interesting stone coffin-lid was found; at the same time there was found in the north-east wall of the nave a stone staircase leading to the rood-loft, lighted by an E. Eng. window. The church is now used only as a mortuary chapel; within the building is an alabaster monument, with the figures of a man in armour and a lady, believed to represent Sir Thomas Fetyplace, of Childrey, and Beatrice his wife. On the north side of the chancel is a very fine Purbeck marble tomb with brass effigies to John Fetyplace (d. 1524) and Dorathye his wife; hanging over the chancel was a helmet, supposed to have belonged to one of the Fettyplaces, but, an attempt having been made to steal it, it is now for security kept at the rectory-house. There is a Norm. font of stone, originally standing on a round pillar or stem; a consecration cross was found incised into the stonework of the north pier of the chancel-arch. Until a few years since the great hall of the old moated manor-house existed as a barn.

Shefford Hardwick, pa., E. Beds., 8½ S.E. of Bedford; ac. 342. It is mostly comprised in one farm.

Shefford, West, pa. and vil. on the Lambourn, S. Berks., 7 N.W. of Newbury; ac. 2,243; soil clay and chalk, overlying chalk. The church of St. Mary (restored 1870), approached through a fine avenue of lime-trees, is of various periods. The lower part of the tower is Late Norm., the upper part is Perp.; the tower arch is Trans. Norm., as are also the south doorway and the font, which has a cylindrical basin richly carved with scrolls of foliage. There is a piscina in the south wall of the nave. During the restoration the plaster on the exterior of the east wall was removed, and the outlines of a series of Trans. Norm. windows disclosed. In the church are two ancient metal flagons and a pewter paten, with foot ornamented with shields of arms and various devices, and inscribed with a legend dated 1621. A curious ancient cross stands near the church on the south side. There are Wesleyan Methodist and Primitive Methodist chapels. The charities are small.

Shefford Woodlands, ha., pa. of Great Shefford (q.v.), S. Berks., about 4 N.E. of Hungerford. There is a Wesleyan Methodist chapel.

Sheinton, or Shineton, pa. and vil. on the Severn, Mid Salop, 10 S.E. of Shrewsbury; ac. 940; soil loam and clay, overlying gravel. The church of SS. Peter and Paul (restored 1854) is Dec., with a wooden west tower; a stone figure, supposed to represent the foundress and belonging to the 13th cent., was discovered during the restoration. The charities are small.

Shelburne, bar., S.W. co. Wex., Ir., bounded on the north by Bantry bar., on the east by Shelmalière West and Bargy bars., on the south by the Atlantic Ocean, and on the west by Waterford Harbour and co. Kilk.; ac. 51,103. It contains Arthurstown, Ramsgrange, and Duncannon, and is bordered by the rivers Barrow and Owenduff on the west and east respectively.

Sheldon (1), pa. and vil., N. Warws., 6 S.E. of Birmingham; ac. 2,514; soil loamy, overlying marl. The vil. is small and but little frequented. The church of St. Giles (restored 1867) is Dec., with a fine Perp. tower; in the north aisle is a beautiful piece of tabernacle work, consisting of three canopied niches. An excellent library is available to parishioners gratuitously; there is also a collection of old divinity folios, first collected by Thomas Bray, D.D., of Hart Hall, Oxford, rector here in 1690, and founder of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel; he died February 15, 1730, being then rector of St. Botolph's, Aldgate, London.

Sheldon (2), pa. and vil., E. Dev., 6 N. of Honiton; ac. 1,681; soil various, overlying clay and sand. The church of St. Mary was (with the exception of the tower) rebuilt in 1871, in E. Eng. style. There are some small charities.

of St. Michael and All Angels (1865) is in Gothic style. There is a Primitive Methodist chapel.

Sheldwich, pa. and vil., N.E. Kent, 3 s. of Faversham; ac. 1,948; soil light loam and chalk, overlying chalk. The church of St. James is Dec. and Perp., with Norm. remains. In the north chapel is an E. Dec. piscina, a canopied brass (with effigies of a knight and a lady) to Richard atte Leese (d. 1394) and his wife Dionisia; and another with half-effigy in shroud to Johanna, wife of William Mareys (d. 1431); and in the south chapel is a third, also with effigies, to John Cely, Esq. (d. 1426), and Isabella his wife. The charities are £2 yearly, derived from the rent of Bell Horns Farm, and £3 each yearly from bequests of H. H. Read, Esq., and the late Hon. George Watson. Lees Court is a seat.

Shelf, tp. and vil., pa. of Bradford (q.v.), and eccl. pa. extending into the pa. of Halifax (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., 3½ N.E. of Halifax, on the road to Bradford; ac. 1,302. The church of St. Michael is a modern building. There are also Wesleyan, Primitive Methodist, and Free Methodist chapels. Coal, ironstone, and freestone of excellent quality abound in the tp., and there are also manufactories of worsted and damask, and extensive chemical works.

Shelfanger, pa. and vil., S. Norf., 3½ N.W. of Diss; ac. 1,678; soil heavy, overlying clay. All Saints' Church (restored 1865) is Perp., and has a curious wooden north porch and an embattled western tower. The Baptists and Wesleyans have each a chapel. The charities amount to about £20 yearly. Two valuable mineral springs have been discovered here.

Shelford, pa., tp., and vil. on the Trent, S. Notts., 6 N.E. of Nottingham; ac. of pa. 3,877, of tp. 684; soil and subsoil clay. The church of St. Peter (restored 1876) is partly Perp., and contains a number of monuments to members of the Stanhope family, including an altar-tomb to Sir Michael Stanhope (1587). There is a Primitive Methodist chapel. The almshouses (founded in 1694 by Sir William Stanhope) have been closed. Here was formerly a priory of the Augustinians.

Shelford, Great, pa. and vil. on the Cam, W. Cambs., 4 s. by E. of Cambridge; ac. 2,172; soil clay and chalky, overlying clay and chalk. The church of the Virgin Mary (erected in 1387, at the sole cost of Thomas Patesley, then vicar, who is buried in the nave) is a handsome Perp. edifice (restored 1890); it retains a very fine Perp. rood-screen and a curiously-carved Jacobean pulpit. The chancel has a piscina, sedilia, and an aumbry, and on the north wall are six stone panels, enclosing carved shields of arms; in the south aisle is an E. Eng. trefoil-headed piscina. There are several altar-tombs of the 17th cent. and some brasses; these include a fine effigy, under a canopy with shields, of a priest in a cope, commemorating Thomas Patesley, rector (d. 1418); there is also part of a brass to Henry Rysley (d. 1511), an inscription to John Redman, and a solitary shield of arms. The Baptists have a chapel. The charities amount to about £80 a year. In this pa. are nine contiguous wells, which supply Hobson's Conduit, Cambridge, with water. At Granham's Farm are traces of a Roman encampment.

Shelford, Little, pa. and vil. on the Cam, W. Cambs., 5 s. by E. of Cambridge; ac. 1,200; soil gravelly and chalky, overlying gravel and clay. The church of All Saints (restored 1878-79) is Dec. and Perp., with some Norm. portions in the nave; the south chapel, which is on a higher level than the rest of the building, is entered by several steps, and has an elaborate niche, piscina, bracket, and a singular squint. In the chapel are memorials to the Ingle family, and on the floor are two small but beautiful brasses, with effigies to Robert de Fréville (d. 1393) and Claricia his wife; and his son Thomas de Fréville (d. 1405) and Margaret his wife (d. 1410). In the chancel, under a richly-moulded ogee canopy, with crockets and flanked by pinnacled buttresses, is a large and very beautiful Late Dec. altar-tomb, with recumbent effigy in armour and inscription in Norman-French, to Sir John Fréville, and near it a recessed monumental Dec. arch, enclosing a Perp. doorway leading into the sacristy; the chancel stalls have traceried panels and a cresting, the panels being enriched with the ermine spots and crescents of the Fréville arms. In the nave is a small brass effigy of a priest, assumed to represent John Cate, rector (d. 1445). There are two tombs of late date, one of which is to Francis Wasley, and bears his arms; the other displays the coat of Manning. Near the porch are a number of coffin-slabs. In the churchyard is a cross, which has been restored. There is a Congregational chapel. The charities are £4 6s. 8d. yearly. Shelford Hall is a seat.

Shelland, pa., Mid Suff., 3½ W.N.W. of Stowmarket; ac. 540; soil mixed clay and sand. The church (dedication unknown) is a small building in E. Eng. style, supposed to have been rebuilt in 1767.

Shelley (1), pa. and vil., S. Suff., 3 s. of Hadleigh; ac. 883; soil clay, overlying gravel. The church of All Saints (restored 1882-83) is E. Eng.; most of the windows in the chancel have been stopped up; the east window is Perp. In the north wall of the chancel are the remains of an old tomb bearing no date, and in the chancel a kind of high pew with a canopy of wood, composed of good panelling. In the north chapel are some Elizabethan monuments. Some very fine bench-ends still remain. In the nave is a monument of the Tilney family, bearing the date 1598. The benches in the chancel retain the old griffins supporting shields bearing the arms of the Tilney family and backed by the old oak poppy-heads. The ancient hall, built in the reign of Edward II., is now a farmhouse.

Shelley (2), pa. and ancient vil., W. Essex, 1 N. of Ongar; ac. 604; soil marl, overlying clay. The church of St. Peter (rebuilt 1888) is in E. Eng. style. There is a brass, with effigies to John Green, his wife and sixteen children; according to tradition, seven of these were sons, to each of whom he left a manor, and he and his wife lived to see 111 descendants. The interest of about £400 is distributed yearly to the poor. S. Hall is an ancient and picturesque pile; over the doorway is the date 1587.

Shelley (3), eccl. pa., tp., and scattered vil. on an acclivity near the Dearne, pa. of Kirkburton (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., 6 S.E. of Huddersfield; ac. 1,568. The church of Emmanuel is in E. Eng. style. There are also Congregational, Methodist New Connexion, and Baptist chapels.

Shellingford, pa. and vil., N.W. Berks., 7 E. of Highworth; ac. 1,718; soil sandy loam, stonebrash, and clay, overlying clay, sand, and gravel. The Norm. church of St. Faith contains a reredos of oak, handsomely carved; in the south wall of the chancel is a piscina. The church contains a number of 17th- and 18th-cent. memorials and brasses. There is a small Congregational chapel. Kitemore is a seat.

Shell, Loch, sea-loch on the east coast of the island of Lewis, pa. of Lochs (q.v.), Ross and Crom., Sc., about 15 S.W. of Stornoway. It is about 3 miles wide at the entrance, and runs inland in a westerly direction for nearly 7 miles.

The church of All Saints, rebuilt 1846 (with the exception of the tower) and restored 1859, is in E. Eng. and Dec. styles. The communion table is wholly of stone, and above it is an arcaded reredos; the hourglass-stand, formerly on the old pulpit, is now in the possession of the Diocesan Architectural Society. In the churchyard are the remains of a cross. The national school has an endowment. Woodbury Hill Reformatory for boys is in this pa.

Shelsley Kings, tp., pa. of Shelsley Beauchamp (q.v.), W. Worcs., about 9 S.W. of Stourport; ac. 1,034.

Shelsley Walsh, or Little Shelsley, pa. on the west bank of the Teme, W. Worcs., about 10 N.W. of Worcester; ac. 468; soil light loam and clay, overlying loam and gravel. The church of St. Andrew (restored 1859) is E. Eng. The north doorway and a small window opposite are Norm.; the chancel is separated from the nave by a very fine Perp. screen of oak. The rood-beam and cornice are richly wrought with grapes and vine-leaves, and the latter has a cresting of the Tudor flower; the screen is returned so as to enclose a small screen at the south-east angle. On the south side of the chancel is a slab (incised), and opposite a panelled wooden altar-tomb (with arms) to Francis Wallsh (1596) and Anne his wife. There is also a marble tablet with a singular inscription to Elizabeth Plampin (1732). Court House, a timber structure, is a 17th-cent. seat still retaining many features of interest; the garden at the back slopes up the side of a green wooded hill, from which descends a rippling stream, and contains a magnificent specimen of Abies Morinda, a native of the Himalayas.

A very fine Norm. arch (formerly connecting the nave and chancel) now leads to the vestry on the north side of the chancel, which retains a canopied sedile and piscina; the rood-loft stairs are entire. In the exterior wall of the south aisle is the figure of an ecclesiastic, within a Dec. niche. There are some small charities.

Shenley (1), pa. and vil., N. Bucks., 6 s.w. of Newport Pagnell; ac. 3,321; soil alluvial and clay, overlying stone and clay. The E. Eng. and Perp. church of St. Mary (restored 1888–90) contains a fine marble monument to Thomas Stafford of Tattenhoe (d. 1607), who founded the almshouses here. S. House is a seat.

Shenley (2), pa. and vil., S. Herts., 5 N.W. of Barnet; ac. 4,090; soil clay, gravel, and sand. The church of St. Botolph (rebuilt 1753) is in E. Eng. style. In the centre of the vil. is a chapel (1841) in connection with the pa. church. There is also a Wesleyan chapel. S. Hall is a seat.

Shenley Church End, tp., pa. of Shenley (q.v.), N. Bucks., 6 s.w. of Newport Pagnell; ac. 1,662.

Shenstone, pa. and vil., S.E. Staffs., 3½ s. of Lichfield; ac. 8,110; soil various. The church of St. John the Baptist was taken down in 1852, and a new church erected the next year in Dec. style; among the old monuments replaced in the new building is one to Mary Jolliffe (1663). There is a Wesleyan chapel. The charities amount to £2[illegible] yearly. The wake is held on the Sunday after St. John's Day. Footherley Hall, S. Court, and S. Lodge are seats.

Shenton, chap., tp., and vil., pa. of Market Bosworth (q.v.), W. Leics., 5 N. by W. of Nuneaton; ac. 1,515. The church (not dedicated) is in Gothic style. There is a small charity for the poor. S. Hall, an Elizabethan mansion in a pleasant park, is a seat.

Shephall, pa. and vil., Mid Herts., 8 N.W. of Hertford; ac. 1,142; soil clay, overlying chalk. The church of St. Mary the Virgin is E. Eng., and contains numerous memorials, including brasses to George Nodes (d. 1564) and Margaret Nodes (d. 1582). The churchyard is approached from the vil. on the west side by a picturesque lich-gate. The charities for distribution amount to about £30 yearly. S. Bury is a seat.

Shepherdine, ha., pa. of Thornbury (q.v.), S. Gloucs., 3 N. of Oldbury-upon-Severn.

Shepherds Bush, eccl. pa. and residential dis., pa. of Hammersmith (q.v.), S. Middx., about 5 W. of St. Paul's. The church of St. Thomas is modern.

Shepherd's Chine, chasm, S.W. I. of W., near Atherfield. It is a picturesque ravine in the midst of fine coast scenery.

Shepherd's Crag, cliff in Borrowdale, S.W. Cumb., rising to a considerable height. Between this crag and Gowder Crag are the celebrated Lodore Falls.

Shepherd's Well, a local form of Sibertswold (q.v.).

The Wesleyans and Methodist New Connexion have chapels. There are several woollen manufactories and stone quarries.

Shepperton (in Domesday "Scepertone"), pa. and vil. on the Thames, S.W. Middx., 2 E. of Chertsey; ac. 1,433 and 59 water; soil light loam, overlying gravel. Here is a lock on the Thames. Some of the cottages are of ancient and substantial timber work, dating probably from the Tudor period. The church of St. Nicholas, situated close to the water's edge, is Dec., with the exception of the tower, which dates only from 1710. The rectory house is an old-fashioned and picturesque wood mansion, with projecting wings, and adjoins the churchyard on the north. Good fishing may be had here—roach, barbel, perch, and pike being Shepperton Green, ha., pa. of and about 1 N.W. from Shepperton (q.v.), S. Middx. Here is a chapel-of-ease. The inhabitants depend chiefly on agriculture.

Sheppey (= "the Isle of Sheep"), island (formerly divided into the three islands of Sheppey, Elmley, and Harty, which are now joined), 11 miles long from east to west and 4 miles in breadth from north to south, lies on the north coast of Kent, bounded by the Thames and the Medway on the west, the Swale (capable of receiving vessels of 200 tons burthen) on the south, and the ocean on the north and east; ac. 22,322 and 87 water. A navigable creek, called Windmill Creek, runs up to the island between Elmley and Sheppey proper. All the southern coasts are defended by strong sea-walls and dikes, and the town of Sheerness is also strongly fortified both by sea and land; the cliffs are about 6 miles in length, and rise to a great height at the centre. The London Clay is here 500 ft. thick; the fossil remains are very numerous, upwards of 700 different species having from time to time been discovered and enumerated, thus throwing considerable light on the nature of the London Clay formation. Fossil fruits have been found in great abundance and many varieties of shells. Large quantities of pyrites, which were once used at Queenborough in the manufacture of copperas, may still be found, as well as septaria, from which Roman cement is made. Iron pyrites were first turned to account in 1579, when Matthias Falconer, a Brabanter, set up a factory at Queenborough for making brimstone and copperas. Oysters are also an article of commercial value to the island. The corn crops are abundant, but of wood and trees there is a dearth. The island still retains its fame for the excellence of its breed of sheep, and "Sheppey mutton" is distinguished for its quality. The means of communication with the island was formerly by water conveyances between Sheerness and the mainland and by three primitive ferries—two for foot-passengers, and one (King's ferry) free for travellers and horses, but not for carriages. The London, Chatham and Dover Railway now affords communication with the mainland, and is carried over the Swale by means of a movable iron viaduct (with a toll bridge for foot-passengers and vehicles), so that the island has now railway communication with London, Gravesend, Rochester, and other places. The climate is salubrious and the land fertile.

Shepreth, pa. and vil., W. Cambs., 8 S.W. of Cambridge; ac. 1,260; soil chalky, clayey, and gravelly, overlying clay and chalk. The church of All Saints (restored 1870) is E. Eng.; it contains some 18th-cent. monuments to the Layer family. There is a Congregational chapel.

Shepton Beauchamp, pa. and vil., S. Somerset, 5½ N.W. of Crewkerne; ac. 824; soil sandy loam, overlying limestone. The church of St. Michael is Perp. and Dec. There is a Wesleyan chapel, and a home and penitentiary for girls. The charities amount to £60 a year, and there are almshouses for seven aged people.

Shepton Mallet, pa., U. and mkt. to. (F.), E. Somerset, 5 S.E. of Wells; ac. 3,600. The place is very ancient. A Roman road from Ilchester to Bath passes through, and during the construction of the railway many interesting remains were discovered. Before the Conquest it was known as Sepeton, and had been in the possession of the abbots of Glastonbury for 400 years. The manor afterwards passed to a baron of the name of Malet or Mallet, and his family retained possession till the time of King John (in whose reign William Mallet joined the barons against the king and forfeited his estates to the Crown); it is now held by the Prince of Wales as Duke of Cornwall. In 1685 the Duke of Monmouth and his troops paid two visits to the town; twelve persons who had joined his cause were executed in the market-place by order of Judge Jeffreys. The church of SS. Peter and Paul (restored 1888) is Trans. and Perp., and has a fine panelled 13th-cent. oak roof. In the chancel is a double piscina, and the pulpit is of 15th-cent. work. There are brasses (with effigies) to William Strode (d. 1649), the figure being in armour, and to Joan (Barnard) his wife and nine children; two recumbent stone figures of Knight Templars; and monuments to the Strode and Barnard families and others. Over the western doorway are three niches containing figures of Our Lord, St. Peter and St. Paul. There is a Catholic church dedicated to St. Michael, and the Congregationalists, Wesleyans, Baptists, and Unitarians have places of worship. The grammar school, near the church, was founded 1627. The Public Offices, with other premises for technical instruction, are in the Market Place. The court-house, in Commercial Road, is in Elizabethan style, and dates from 1837; and the prison for the eastern part of the county is in Cornhill. There is a Constitutional and a Liberal club-house. The District Hospital (1879), in Gothic style, has an endowment. Strode's almshouses were founded in 1699, and four others were built in 1861. The total income of the charities is about £500, of which about £200 is distributed in money and kind. The Market Place extends over a considerable area, and constitutes an important feature of the town. The Market Cross, a fine structure, originally erected in 1500, was restored and modified in 1841. So early as the 14th cent. S. M. was a place of considerable commercial importance. In 1790 more than 4,000 hands were employed in the cloth trade, and the place was noted for the manufacture of West of England cloth. The introduction also of another source of employment in the manufacture of knitted stockings, in which there are now above 400 hands employed, added considerably to the industry of the place. There is a small manufacture carried on in silk, velvet, and crape; but the chief trade of the town is brewing. Rope-making and brick and tile making are also carried on.

Sherborne (1), pa., U. and mkt. to. (TH. & S.) on the Yeo, N. Dors., 6 E. of Yeovil; ac. 6,446, of which half is meadow and orchard land. S. was for nearly four hundred years a cathedral city, but the see was transferred to Old Sarum about 1075. In the 12th cent. Bishop Roger of Salisbury amalgamated the Benedictine priory of Horton with S., which then became an abbey, and was rebuilt. The abbey, which was mitred, was surrendered in 1539, in the time of the twenty-third abbot, there being then eighteen monks, with a revenue of £682 yearly. After the Dissolution the church was sold to the inhabitants by Sir John Horsey, Knight, of Clifton Maybank, the grantee of the Crown, for £200, in place of the dilapidated pa. church of All Hallows, subsequently taken down. The existing church consists of choir and presbytery of three bays, with aisles and clerestory and five chapels, nave of five bays with clerestory, aisles, transepts, south porch, and a central tower of two stages; the choir and presbytery (Perp.) have peculiar fan-traceried vaulting, richly gilt and decorated with shields of arms and foliage work. Portions of stone traceried screens divide the choir from its aisles, and under the south tower arch are remains of a canopied chantry. On the floor of the presbytery is a brass with inscription, placed over the grave of Ethelbald and Ethelbert, brothers of King Alfred the Great. The north choir aisle contains a fragment of the tomb of Abbot Clement (1163), dug up in the churchyard about 1860. In the north transept, which is boldly groined, and displays the finest bosses in the church, is placed the organ; the south transept has a roof of Irish oak, with gilt bosses. The nave, five bays in length (Perp.), has a very fine vaulted roof; the north aisle retains four Dec. windows. The piers and arches of the tower (restored 1885–86) are Norm.; the tower itself is Perp. The nave and transepts were restored in 1851, and the choir in 1858. The remains of the abbey buildings now form part of the S.School (founded by Edward VI.). In 1884 a monument was erected to the memory of George Digby Wingfield-Digby, of S. Castle; it is in the form of an Eleanor cross, and is placed in the abbey yard, on the site of the old town hall, and stands on octagonal steps. There are Congregational, Baptist, and Wesleyan chapels, and the Brethren have a meeting-room. The charities distributed in money and kind amount to £190 yearly. The Macready Literary Institution was established in 1850; there is also a reading-room, a Wesleyan Institute, a club for young women, and a laundry and training home for girls. The Yeatman Memorial Hospital (1865) was built by a general subscription, and is supported principally by voluntary contributions. The Hospital of SS. John the Baptist and Evangelist was founded by the Benedictines on the site of an earlier Augustinian house in 1405–6, and re-founded by Robert Nevill, Bishop of Salisbury, in 1436–37. The oldest portions are the chapel, with its antechapel, the hall, and dormitories; the chapel has a south window of ancient glass. There are twenty-seven inmates, eighteen men and nine women. S. was formerly a place of note for the woollen manufacture, on the decay of which button and lace making were carried on, which have been succeeded by silk mills; these are now in a flourishing state, are furnished with improved machinery, and employ a large number of hands. Fairs are held on May 8, July 18 and 26, for cattle and sheep, and a large fair, well known as Pack Monday Fair.

on the first Monday after October 10. S. Castle was originally built by Sir Walter Raleigh, who erected the body of the house, on which, over one of the windows, appear his arms and the date 1594. The two wings were added by George Digby, second Earl of Bristol, K.G., after the Restoration; it is in Elizabethan style, and in plan resembles the letter H. The apartments are decorated with some fine paintings, among which may be particularly mentioned the famous picture, on canvas, representing the procession of Queen Elizabeth to St. Paul's after the destruction of the Spanish Armada; there are also several fine portraits of the great Sir Kenelm Digby, and many other family portraits. The dairy has a tessellated Roman pavement, discovered at Lenthay Common. A fine lake, bordered with trees and shrubs, separates the house from the castle ruins; there are numerous swans and other birds. In the upper park there are fine herds of deer, numbering over 2,000. The park extends over an area of 470 ac. and has five lodges—at S., Castleton, Crackmore, Haydon, and Gainsborough Hill. The surrounding country is very fertile, and is varied with woods and hills. A splendid view is obtained from the hill known as "Jerusalem," the summit of which is covered with pines and other trees planted by Pope.

Sherborne (2), pa. on the Avon, S.W. Warws., 2½ S.W. of Warwick; ac. 1,088; soil marl and gravel, overlying marl. Here was formerly a church belonging to the Templars. The present church of All Saints (rebuilt 1864) is in Dec. style. The chancel of the old church, for some time preserved, appears to have been of the Dec. period. South of the chancel is a mortuary chapel belonging to the Ryland family, containing a raised tomb of Caen stone and coloured marbles to the memory of Samuel Ryland, Esq., from a design by Pugin; in the south aisle is a brass (1624) to John Smith, schoolmaster. The churchyard contains a fine old yew-tree, near which, on an octagonal base, remains the shaft of an ancient cross. S. House, a handsome building in a well-wooded park and commanding a fine view of the surrounding country, is a seat.

Sherborne (3), pa. and vil. on the Windrush, E. Gloucs., 3½ E. of Northleach; ac. 4,567; soil and subsoil oolite. The place gives the title of Baron to the Dutton family. The church of St. Mary Magdalene (rebuilt 1850) contains some handsome monuments to the Duttons. S. Park is a magnificent enclosure of upwards of 300 ac.; there is also a well-wooded deer-park, with a fine herd of deer. The mansion is a modern building in Classic style.

Sherborne, St. John, pa. and vil., N. Hants, 2 N. of Basingstoke; ac. 3,960 and 12 water; soil part clay and part chalk. The church of St. Andrew (restored) is Norm. and E. Eng.; there are brasses of the 14th cent. to Rawlin Brocas, Bernard Brocas, and to Thomas Brocas. The font is of the 12th cent. The mansion known as The Vyne is said to have derived its name from vines planted here or from the Roman Vindomis; it was for many years the principal residence of the Sandys family. The building is of considerable dimensions; there is a gallery panelled with the arms of distinguished families of the time of Henry VIII. Attached to the house is an ancient domestic chapel, containing curiously-carved stalls; adjoining the chapel is the mausoleum erected by J. Chute, Esq., the friend of Gray and Horace Walpole, in which there is a recumbent marble monument (by Banks) of his ancestor, Chaloner Chute, Esq., in his robes as Speaker of the House of Commons. Beaurepaire Park, an ancient moated mansion in a well-timbered park, is also a seat.

Sherburn (1), or Sherburn-in-Elmet, pa., tp., and small to., W.R. Yorks., 8 W. of Selby; ac. of pa. 13,270, of tp. 4,639; soil alluvial and limestone, overlying clay and limestone rock. The church of All Saints, on high ground, is an ancient building (restored 1857), and is now a very fine specimen of ecclesiastical architecture, said to have been built out of the ruins of a palace which the Archbishops of York formerly had here. The chancel and clerestoried nave are Norm. In the mortuary chapel is a curious old monument, bearing no date, representing the Crucifixion. Here is a Wesleyan chapel. The grammar school was founded and endowed about 1608 by Robert Hungate, Esq.; the schoolhouse is an ancient building in the main street of the town. The interest of £100 is distributed to the poor on St. Thomas's Day. The town and its vicinity are famed for the growth of a plum, called wine-sours, of a peculiarly fine flavour and in much request for preserving. In a field called The Hall Garth are the foundations of an old palace of King Athelstan. Near the railway station are large brick and tile works.

Sherburn (2), pa. and vil. near the Derwent, E.R. Yorks., 12 E. of Malton; ac. 4,739; soil peat, sand, and clay. The church of St. Hilda is of mixed periods; the chancel arch is a fine example of Norm. work; of the two chantries, only a doorway and a piscina remain. There are Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist chapels. The charities are small. A fair for hiring is held the second week in November, and a cattle market every alternate Monday. Brewing and malting are carried on.

Sherburn (3), eccl. pa., tp., and vil., pa. of Pittington (q.v.), Mid Dur., about 3 E. of Durham; ac. 1,310. The church of St. Mary is in Dec. style. There are also Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist chapels, and a public reading-room. S. Hall, an ancient castellated mansion, pleasantly situated in the centre of the vil., is a seat.

originally founded in 1184 for lepers, was converted into almshouses in 1429. In the reign of Elizabeth, Dr. Chandler, Bishop of Durham, drew up new ordinances, providing for a master and for the maintenance of fifteen indoor and fifteen outdoor brethren. The Hospital was enlarged in 1819 by the erection of fifteen additional houses or lodgings. The original building was almost entirely destroyed during an irruption of the Scots in 1300, the only portions spared being the chapel and a Norm. tower, but the latter was taken down about 1830. The existing buildings surround an oblong quadrangle, with an entrance lodge on the side next the road and on the opposite side the chapel, the remaining portion being occupied by the master's residence and the houses of the brethren; of the chapel the tower is Norm., and all the rest E. Eng. The chancel is fitted with sixteen stalls, dating from the latter part of the 16th cent., and the bench-ends are ornamented with tracery of the same period; in the chancel is a monument to Thomas Leaver, a former master and preacher to King Edward VI. In connection with the hospital is a dispensary, open every day to the sick poor of the diocese of Durham.

Sheringham, Lower, vil., pa. of Sheringham (q.v.), N. Norf., 4 N.W. of Cromer. It is situated between cliffs, about 100 ft. above the beach, and is much frequented as a seaside resort. There are excellent golf links. The place is also a considerable fishing station, having about 250 boats employed in the herring, cod, skate, plaice, crab, lobster, and whelk fisheries: great quantities of the produce are sent to the Norwich and London markets. A few of the boats are large and fitted for deep-sea fishing. The cliffs in this neighbourhood are constantly being undermined, and large portions of land have been carried away by the action of the sea. The coastguard stationed here consists of an officer and four men. Here are lifeboats, with rocket apparatus. The church mission chapel is a plain square building; there are also Free Methodist and Primitive Methodist chapels.

Sherington, pa. and vil. by the Ouse, N. Bucks., 10½ W. by S. of Bedford; ac. 1,780; soil various, overlying limestone and clay. The Dec. church of St. Laud the Martyr (restored 1870) stands on an eminence; the tower is Perp. In the church is a shield of white metal with the arms of Catesby—the remnant of a brass dating from c. 1510; there are other brasses dated 1491 and 1517. The Congregationalists and Wesleyans have chapels. The charities are small.

Sherrington, pa. and vil. on the Wiley, S. Wilts., 7½ S.E. of Warminster; ac. 1,240; soil light chalk, overlying chalk and flint. The church of St. Michael has over the porch the date of its restoration in 1624; it is partly E. Eng.; the east and west windows are Dec. The Wesleyans have a mission room. The pumping station of the Boyton waterworks is here.

Sherston Magna, pa. and vil. on the Avon, N.W. Wilts., about 5½ S.W. of Tetbury; ac. 3,773; soil brashy, overlying gravel. The church of the Holy Trinity is a fine old stone structure of the E. Eng. period, and contains a few memorials. There are Congregational, Baptist, and Primitive Methodist chapels. The pa. has charities of about £13 annual value for the benefit of the poor. Here is a silk-ribbon manufactory.

Sherston Pinkney, pa. and vil., N.W. Wilts., 9 N.W. of Chippenham; ac. 949; soil brashy, overlying gravel. There is no church. Pinkney House is a seat, and stands in a deer-park of about 100 ac., through which the Avon flows.

Sherwell, or Sherwill, pa. and vil., N. Dev., 4 N.E. of Barnstaple; ac. 4,762; soil loam, overlying rock. The church of St. Peter is Perp.; the chancel contains a piscina and a monument with a recumbent effigy, believed to represent Blanche, daughter of William Bourchier, Lord Fitzwarren, and wife of Bartholomew St. Leger (d. 1483); there is an ancient oak screen. Youlston Park is a seat.

Sherwood Forest, an ancient royal forest, W. Notts., formerly extending from Nottingham to the vicinity of Worksop (q.v.), in length about 25 miles, and varying in breadth from 7 to upwards of 9 miles. Several smaller tracts of land, particularly in the northern part of the co., as far as Rossington Bridge, have been usually called forest; but, from the survey made in the year 1609, they appear either not to have belonged to the forest, or to have been disafforested before that period. In S. Forest are now included several large parks, which have been taken in at different times, as those of Welbeck, Clumber, Thoresby, Bestwood, Newstead, Clipstone, and several villages or lands belonging to them. The whole soil of the forest is understood to have been granted by the Crown to different lords of manors, reserving only what is called in forest language the "vert and venison," or trees and deer; the latter, which were all of the red kind, though formerly very numerous, are now, in consequence of the advance of cultivation, entirely extirpated. The principal remains of the ancient woods are the hays of Birkland and Bilhagh, in the pa. of Worksop (q.v.). That part of the forest lying within the pa. of Mansfield was enclosed in 1852–53, the part east of the to. having been previously enclosed. The forest is said to have been the retreat of Robin Hood; and here in the Wars of the Roses many encounters took place.

Shetland, insular co. of Scotland, called also the "Shetland (or Zetland) Isles," above 100 in number, of which twenty-eight only are inhabited. They lie in the Northern Ocean, about 50 N.E. of Orkney. There are three principal islands in the group—namely, Mainland, Yell (on the north), and (still further north-east) Unst. On the east of Yell lies Fetlar, which is the largest of the inferior islands. The next island in point of size is Bressay; the smaller ones are Whalsay, Out Skerries, Samphray, Big Island, Mickle Roe, Papa Stour, House, Barray, Trondray, besides a great number of islets, holms, and skerries. The highest land in these islands is Ronas Hill (q.v.). The Hill of Foula is next in altitude, being about 1,300 ft. above sea-level. The aggregate area is 551 square miles, or 352,889 ac., of which 283,883 ac. are mountain or heath land. It seems probable that the Romans visited the coasts of S., from the coins of that people which have been discovered; and the remains of a small Roman camp are to be traced on the island of Fetlar. There seems to be little doubt these islands were first inhabited by the Scandinavians. In 875 Harold Harfager, or "The Fair-haired," subdued these islands, and gave them to Count Sigurd, the first Earl of Orkney. On the cession of the Shetland Isles to the Scottish Crown, the laws of the former were gradually encroached upon by the endeavours of the Scotch earls to introduce feudal subjection and seniorage in place of the ancient udal tenures. Lord Robert Stuart, natural brother to Queen Mary, had a grant of the islands in 1565, and in 1581 was made Justiciar; and in 1612 the islands were erected into a stewartry as Crown property. The general aspect is bleak and barren; and although there is but little to attract in the form of landscape in what may be called the interior of the islands—the whole of them being destitute of wood—their coast scenery presents views of a highly interesting character, and the tourist may see wild scenery of diversified appearance and picturesque grandeur in the coast of S. The peculiar race of S. ponies are bred for exportation, and these small ponies (or "shelties," as they are called) traverse their way across the wastes without much difficulty. The cattle of S. are of a very diminutive breed, a cow weighing from 2 to 3 cwt. upon an average—an ox from 3 to 4 cwt., but seldom exceeding 5 cwt. A great abundance of poultry is kept on almost every farm, and small swine are numerous. The sheep are very small, but produce wool of an excellent quality, which is knitted into shawls, veils, stockings, gloves, and mitts. Little attention is paid to agriculture, and the system of cultivation adopted is poor, the principal crops grown being oats, potatoes, and turnips, the latter introduced early in the 19th cent. The fuel in general use is peat, the cutting and drying of which occupies diligent attention. Lerwick (q.v.) is the only town; but there are a few villages, of which Scalloway (q.v.) is the largest. The chief support of the Shetlander is the white fishery—herring, cod, and ling abounding on the coasts; besides which many men and boys are employed every season in the Davis Straits whale-fishing. A profitable fishery of the coal-fish takes place in deep tideways, the takes supplying the inhabitants with a portion of food and oil (from the livers) for light and other purposes. S. is represented in Parliament in connection with Orkney.

Shettleston, q.s. pa. and to., pa. of Barony (q.v.), N.W. Lanarks., Sc., forming an eastern suburb of Glasgow. In addition to the Established church, there are United Presbyterian and Free churches. Here are coal mines, and a considerable proportion of the population are miners.

Sheviock, pa. and vil. on Whitesand Bay, S.E. Cornw., 3½ S.S.E. of St. Germans railway station; ac. 2,282; soil clay and slate, overlying clay-slate. The church of St. Mary (restored 1871) is Dec. The north transept was removed to make way for a Perp. aisle. In the south transept is a 14th-cent. monument, with effigies representing Sir Edward Courtenay, of Godlington, and Emmeline his wife; the canopy is groined, and the lower portion is enriched with shields of arms. In the north wall is the effigy of a knight, said to represent a brother of Lady Emmeline. The chancel contains three plain sedilia, a credence, and good piscina; and there is another piscina in the transept. In the church are 15th- and 16th-cent. monuments. There is a Wesleyan chapel, with school attached. In the pa. are two ancient crosses.

Shevock, The, stream, Mid Abers., Sc., rises near Insch, and flows east to the Ury, which it joins at Old Rayne.

Shields, North, tp. and seaport on the northern bank and near the mouth of the Tyne (which separates it from South Shields), forming part of the municipal and parliamentary bor. of Tynemouth (q.v.), S.E. Northumb., 8 E.N.E. of Newcastle-upon-Tyne; ac. 36. The town has risen to its present importance and extent since 1800. The earliest notice of it as an inhabited place is in an account of certain proceedings which occurred during the reign of Edward I. in consequence of the trade which the Prior of Tynemouth was encouraging in this part of his territory and of the claim of the burgesses of Newcastle to the exclusive trade of the Tyne. The harbour is very commodious, and is capable of containing a large number of vessels, many of those arriving at Shields being destined for the Newcastle trade. The Tyne mouth now forms a safe haven of sufficient depth to admit vessels of any tonnage, having of late years undergone many important and extensive improvements. The North and South Piers, at Tynemouth and South Shields respectively, start at a distance of 1 mile apart, gradually approaching each other, so that the interval between the pier-heads is a quarter of a mile only. On the north side of the harbour there are many dangerous rocks, rendering three lighthouses necessary; and three lifeboats are always ready for immediate service. A very extensive dock with two lock entrances, constructed at Coble Dene, south of the town, was opened by the Prince and Princess of Wales on Aug. 21, 1884, and named the "Albert Edward Dock." At the west side of the dock a warehouse capable of storing 40,000 quarters of grain has been erected, and is fitted with hydraulic appliances, the gates being opened and closed by the same power. If required, the dock can be enlarged. Further west, in the tp. of Chirton, is another dock, the Northumberland, with a deep-water timber quay. Steam vessels ply between North Shields and Newcastle every half-hour, and across the river to South Shields every few minutes. The steam ferry to South Shields was opened in July, 1830, and the direct ferry for passengers in

THE FISH PIER, NORTH SHIELDS.

1847. The coal trade has contributed greatly to the wealth, importance, and population of the town. There are marine-engine works and iron foundries. Shipbuilding and repairing are carried on to some extent, there being floating, dry, and graving docks. There are also salt-works, a tannery, a brewery, and an earthenware manufactory. The exports consist entirely of coal and coke; the imports are corn, timber, and esparto grass. Christ Church, the pa. church of Tynemouth, is a plain stone building. There are also eccl. pas. with modern churches; Scandinavian, Lutheran, and Catholic churches; a Jewish synagogue; and places of worship for various Nonconformist bodies. The town hall (1844), in Saville Street, is a building of stone in Elizabethan style. The town has a good Free Library. The North Shields Club (1877–78), in Northumberland Square, is an edifice of brick with stone facings. The Custom House is situated on the New Quay. The Tyne Sailors' Home, also situated on the New Quay, is a building of stone, erected at the sole expense of the Duke of Northumberland, and opened by him in 1856; the home includes a library and a reading-room, furnished with newspapers and periodicals. Part of the building is occupied as a shipping office, money-order office, and savings bank for sailors. The Master Mariners' Asylum (1837–38), on the Tynemouth Road, is an edifice of stone, in the Tudor style; a statue of the Duke of Northumberland has been erected in front of the building. The House of Correction, in Tynemouth Road, is now used only as a place of temporary confinement for remanded prisoners previous to their removal to Newcastle-on-Tyne. The Baths and Washhouses, in Saville Street, were erected in 1854. Shields, South, co., mun. and parl. bor., tp., mkt. and U. to., on the south bank of the Tyne, pa. of Jarrow (q.v.), N.E. Dur., 9 E. of Newcastle; ac. 90. On the opposite side of the river are North Shields and Tynemouth. The to., which extends about 3 miles from east to west, is populous and thriving; the streets in the modern part are wide and well lighted, but those in the older part, on the river-side, are narrow. South S. (anciently written "Le Sheels") originated with the fishermen of the Tyne, who built here, along the southern shore, sheds (provincially termed "sheelds" or "shields") to defend themselves from the weather. For some few centuries the place was famous for its salt works, but the salt manufacture having become nearly extinct, its place has been supplied by other industries of greater importance. So recently, however, as 1740, only four vessels belonged to South S. In 1782 three small docks only were in existence here, but the Tyne Dock, constructed in 1854, has a water area of 50 ac.; there are 22 miles of sidings, and in the grain warehouses the storage capacity is 80,000 quarters. The numerous railways and branches intersecting the town and surrounding country, all giving access to the river-side, and communicating with the coal mines for many miles south and west, afford great facilities for the export of coals and coke, which are shipped in large quantities from this port. There are several eccl. pas. with modern churches, two Catholic churches, and places of worship for various Nonconformist bodies. The town hall (1768), in the centre of the market-place, is a building of stone supported on pillars; it is also used for public meetings. The New Police Buildings date from 1893. The Custom House and Mercantile Marine Office (1864), on the Corporation Quay, is in Italian style; the principal façade displays eight Corinthian columns, standing upon a rusticated basement. The South Pier, at the end of Ocean Road, is solidly constructed of stone, forming the southern breakwater for the protection of the entrance to the river Tyne; it is intended, in conjunction with the North Pier at Tynemouth, to protect vessels from the prevalent and destructive gales varying from north-east to south-east, as well as to facilitate the removal of the bar. The South Pier (finished in 1892) forms a magnificent promenade upwards of a mile in length, and is much used by the inhabitants and by visitors to the town. On the Pier Parade is a monument to the originators of the lifeboat system, and at the base is a drinking-fountain. At the mouth of the Tyne are lighthouses and landmarks for the guidance of ships entering the river, which the largest vessels can do now at almost any state of the tide, the bar of sand which formerly obstructed the entrance of the river having, by the operation of powerful dredging machines, been almost entirely removed. The Theatre Royal, in a central position, is a fine building in Italian style. The Public Library, Reading Room, and Museum, erected in 1859 as the new premises of the Mechanics' Institution, was in 1872 transferred to the Corporation. A branch of this library, with a free reading-room, has been established at the suburb Tyne Dock. The museum is rich in specimens of local sea-birds and Roman remains; it contains also the original model of the lifeboat invented by William Wouldhave, of South S. There is a large hall, in which public meetings are held. Spacious class-rooms adjoin this hall. The Infirmary and Dispensary (1873) is a building in Elizabethan style; the Freemasons' Hall (1884) is a fine building. The Public Baths and Washhouses, situated in Derby Street, were erected by the Corporation in 1854, and there are salt-water baths (the property of a company) near the South Pier. The Fever Hospital, also erected by the Corporation, was opened in 1882. The Master Mariners' Asylum and Annuity Society was established in 1839; the twenty-two cottages first erected are pleasantly situated near the coast, and the remaining portions have since been completed from the accumulated funds of the society. £5,000 in Consols are vested in trustees for paying to fifteen widows, natives of and residing within this borough, an annuity of £10 each. The Marine School (1868) is in Elizabethan style; this institution is intended for the instruction of seamen and sea-going engineers, and the training of masters and officers of the merchant service. The "Missions to Seamen" Church and Institute, Commercial Road, Mill Dam, was completed in 1885, in place of the Tyne Mission ship, which had become inadequate for the purpose. Both the town and neighbourhood are celebrated for the manufacture of chemicals and glass. The first works for the production of window glass were established at the Ouseburn, near Newcastle-on-Tyne, in 1630. There are also ship and boat yards, sail, block, and rope yards, oil, paint, and varnish manufactories, ironworks, breweries, and spirit and provision stores. Markets for the sale of general provisions are held every Saturday in the market-place. Fairs are held here on the Wednesday before and after May 1, and on the Wednesday before and after November 11. The North and South Marine Parks are situated on the east side of the town, and occupy an excellent position contiguous to the sea, near the estuary of the river Tyne, and have an area of 45 ac. The parks are divided only by Pier Parade, a thoroughfare leading to the South Pier. In the South Park there is an artificial lake 2½ ac. in extent, used in the summer-time for model-yacht sailing and in winter for skating. The sands fronting the parks are broad and clean, and being also easily accessible are, like the parks and the South Pier, a favourite resort of the inhabitants, and bring a large influx of visitors to the town during the summer months. The "Lawe," an elevated position near the old town of South S., now included in the more modern town, is traditionally the site of an entrenched Roman camp, first mentioned by Leland, who says that in his time foundations of a place called "Burgh" remained on the "Lawe," and since the year 1770 many objects of interest to the antiquary have been unearthed on this spot. A portion of the site, containing the remains of the principal buildings of a Roman settlement, has been securely railed in, leaving the foundations and the remains Shifford, tp. on the Isis, pa. of Bampton (q.v.), W. Oxon, 2½ S.E. of Bampton Aston; ac. 775. The chapel (erected 1863) is in Gothic style. Near the chapel is a piece of ground called "Court Close," where, it is believed, Alfred the Great held a council.

Shifnal, or Shiffnal (anciently "Idesall"), pa., U. and mkt. to. (T.), N. Salop, 10 N. of Bridgnorth; ac. 11,443; soil light gravel, subsoil mineral formation. Sandstone abounds in parts of the pa. S. is supposed to have been a place of considerable importance previous to the very destructive fire in 1591, on which occasion Queen Elizabeth granted a brief authorising a collection throughout the cos. of Salop, Staffs., Flints., and Montgoms., on behalf of the town of Idesall. The church of St. Andrew (restored) is Trans. Norm., Dec., and Perp.; the interior of the south porch is E. Eng., and has a parvise. The pulpit is of oak richly carved and illuminated; there are 16th-, 17th-, and 18th-cent. memorials, including one to Mary, wife of Joseph Yates (d. 1776), aged 127, and who is stated to have married a third husband at the age of ninety-two. In the north wall of the chancel is a recumbent effigy of Thomas Forster (d. 1526), sometime prior of the Augustinian monastery of SS. Mary and Leonard at Wambridge, and vicar of Idsall; on the south side is a marble tablet, with figure, to Magdalen (d. 1698), wife of Sir Humphrey Briggs. In the Moreton chantry is an altar-tomb with recumbent effigy to Oliver Briggs (1596); another altar-tomb bears recumbent effigies of Humphrey Briggs and Ann his wife (1626); there are other monuments to various members of this family from 1691 to 1734. The Catholic church, dedicated to St. Mary (1860), is in E. Eng. style. There are Baptist, Wesleyan, and Primitive Methodist chapels. The public buildings include the Mechanics' Institute, Library, and Newsrooms (1849), in the market-place; and the Market Hall (1868), a red-brick building in Dec. style. Fairs are held on the last Saturday in June, and Nov. 22, principally for cattle. There are several charities, amounting to about £20 yearly; and the national school has an endowment. Aston Hall is a seat.

Shilbottle, pa., tp., and vil., E. Northumb., 3 S. of Alnwick; ac. of pa. 7,904, of tp. 2,999; soil clayey, overlying lime and freestone. The church of St. James, built in 1885 on the site of the old church, is in E. Eng. style. There are endowments for the vicar and clerk of £4 10s. yearly, and the interest of £1,000 is yearly distributed at Christmas among the poor of the tp. of S. There is an excellent coal mine; also a freestone quarry and a tile manufactory.

is a Wesleyan chapel. In the centre of the vil. are the remains of an old cross, another in the churchyard, and the base of a third on the Blandford road.

Shillingthorpe, ha., pa. of and 1 S.W. from Braceborough (q.v.), S. Lincs. S. Hall is a seat.

Shillington, pa. and vil., S. Beds., on the border of Herts., 5½ N.W. of Hitchin; ac. 5,102; soil strong clay, overlying clay. The church of All Saints is Trans. Dec. and Perp. Beneath the chancel is an E. Eng. crypt, with groined vaulting resting on a central pillar. There is some good wood screenwork, and a large slab with fine brass effigy of Matthew de Asscheton; there is also another with effigy of Thomas Partington. Here is a Wesleyan chapel, a chapel for Congregationalists and Baptists, and a Primitive Methodist chapel. "Pilsworth's Charity" amounts to £12 14s. yearly, and there is another charity for four poor widows.

Shilstone, ha., pa. of and 1 S.E. from Brendon (q.v.), N. Dev.

Shilton (1), pa. and vil., S. Oxon, 6 S.W. of Witney; ac. 1,579; soil principally stone-brash, overlying soft stone and clay. The church (dedication unknown) is of various periods. The chancel is E. Eng., with a good three-light east window and on the south side a low side window, beneath which is an aumbry; on the same side are an E. Eng. piscina and priest's door, whilst on the north side there is a locker. The nave is separated from the aisles by three plain Norm. arches on round pillars. In the aisle is a squint, and near it a good E. Eng. piscina. The porch is plain Norm., with a Perp. doorway inserted in a Norm. opening. The font is a fine example of Dec. work, consisting of a massive square pedestal of the same form, with shafts at the angles, and is enriched with sculptures of the Passion on each side, together with niches containing figures of the four Evangelists. There is a Primitive Methodist chapel.

Shilton (2), pa. and vil., N.W. Warws., 6 N.E. of Coventry; ac. 1,075; soil and subsoil clay. The church of St. Andrew, dating from the 14th cent., contains the tomb of Sir Henry St. Germain and Anne his wife, daughter of Thomas Tindale, whose son Christopher (d. 1540), author of "Doctor and Student," was born here.

Shilton, Earl. [EARL SHILTON.]

Shilvington (2), ha., pa. of and 2 S.E. from Portesham (q.v.), S. Dors.

Shilvodan, Grange of, pa., Upper Toome bar., W. co. Antr., Ir., 4 N.E. of Randalstown; ac. 3,547.

Shimna, river, S. co. Down, Ir., rises in the Mourne Mountains, and flows in a N.E. and E. direction for about 9 miles to the coast at Newcastle. Not far from this latter place it flows in a series of cascades through Tollymore Park, amid beautiful scenery.

Shimpling (1), or Shimplingthorne, pa. and vil., S.W. Suff., 7½ N. of Sudbury; ac. 2,699; soil and subsoil clay. The church of St. George (restored 1868) is Dec. The school has an endowment. Cadacre Hall (a modern mansion in a park of 95 ac.) and Thorne Court are seats.

Shimpling (2), pa. and scattered vil., S. Norf., 3½ N.E. of Diss; ac. 769; soil heavy, overlying clay. The church of St. George is Perp.; the windows retain many fragments of ancient stained glass.

Shincliffe, eccl. pa. and tp., pa. of St. Oswald, Durham (q.v.), S. Dur., about 2 S. of the city of Durham; ac. 1,379. The church of St. Mary is in E. Eng. style, and there are chapels for Methodists. Here is an extensive colliery vil. Bricks and tiles are made.

Shindilla, Lough, W. co. Galway, Ir., about 10 W. of Oughterard, on the road to Clifden. It is about a mile and a half long.

Shineton. [SHEINTON.]

Shiney Row, vil., pa. of and about 2 N.W. from Houghton-le-Spring (q.v.), N.E. Dur. There are Primitive Methodist, Wesleyan, and Wesleyan Reform chapels, and a good news- and reading-room.

Shinfield, pa. and vil. by the Loddon, S. Berks., 3½ S. of Reading; ac. 4,538; soil gravel and clay, overlying gravel. The church of St. Mary (restored 1857) is E. Eng. The Wesleyan Methodists and Congregationalists have chapels. There are some small charities.

Shingay, pa. on the Cam, S.W. Cambs., 7 N.W. of Royston; ac. 754; soil of a rich loamy character, overlying clay. This was formerly a place of importance, having been the seat of a preceptory of the Knights Hospitaller of St. John of Jerusalem, to whom the land belonged at the Dissolution; the revenues of the preceptory amounted to £175 4s. 6d. There was formerly a small chapel here, occupying a site still called "Chapel Yard" and dedicated to St. Mary; it became ruinous many years since, and the materials have been used for secular purposes.

Shingham, pa., S.W. Norf., 4½ S.W. of Swaffham; ac. 935; soil light and sandy, overlying chalk and gravel. The church of St. Botolph is an ancient building of flint and stone. The south doorway is a good and well-preserved specimen of Early Norm. work. There is a curious piscina. The church, now disused, is rapidly falling into decay.

Shingles, The, sandbank off south-west coast of Hants, on the north-west side of I. of W., between the Needles and Hurst Castle. The shoal is about 2¼ miles long and ¾ mile wide, and has a channel at either end.

Shin, Loch, a lake, pa. of Lairg (q.v.), S. Suths., Sc. It is about 16½ miles long by 1 mile broad, and lies 270 ft. above the sea. It abounds in fish, but the surrounding scenery is somewhat tame.

Shinnel Water, river, pa. of Tynron (q.v.), W. Dumfs., Sc., rises at a height of 1,500 ft., and flows nearly 13 S.E. to Scar Water, which it joins about ½ S.W. of Penpont. It is fished for trout.

Shinny Lough, Balrothery bar., N.E. co. Dub., Ir., 2 N. of Rush.

Shinrone, pa. and vil., Clonlisk bar., S.W. K. Co., Ir., 5½ N.W. of Roscrea; ac. 4,868. Lough Nahinch lies in the north-west of the pa. Cangort Park, a seat, has some fine old timber.

Shin, The, river, S. Suths., Sc., flows from the south-east end of Loch Shin (q.v.), and runs for nearly 8 s. to the Oykell, which it joins at Invershin. Two miles above this point is the Linn of Shin, a picturesque waterfall; and the stream abounds in salmon.

Shipbourne, pa. and vil., S.W. Kent, 6½ S.E. of Sevenoaks; ac. 1,922; soil loam, overlying clay. The church of St. Giles is in E. Eng. style. In the chancel is a white alabaster reredos representing the Lord's Supper. The charities amount to £4 10s. yearly, and are distributed in bread. Fairhill is a seat.

Shipbrook, or Shipbrooke, tp., pa. of Davenham (q.v.), Mid Chesh., 2½ S.E. of Northwich. According to Ormerod, the historian of Cheshire, this place was formerly the seat of the Barons Vernon. S. Hall is now a farmhouse.

Shipden. [CROMER (1).]

Shipdham, pa. and large and well-built vil., Mid Norf., 5 S. by W. of East Dereham; ac. 4,560; soil loam and clay, overlying gravel and clay. All Saints' Church (restored 1884–90) is a spacious E. Eng. edifice. Over the porch is a parvise containing a collection of rare books, chiefly on theology, bequeathed by a former rector. This church possesses one of the finest original wooden lecterns in the county, of unusual design and great beauty. A copy of it may be seen in Thorndon church, near Ely; in Mattishall church; and in St. Mark's, New Lakenham. There are Congregational, Wesleyan, and Primitive Methodist chapels. The Temperance Hall, built in 1875, has been converted into a Town Hall. The town estate produces about £30 yearly, which is distributed among the poor. The fuel allotments produce £100 a year, which is distributed among the poor in coals. There is also £4 5s. for the poor from other charities. The school is endowed. There was anciently a market established by one of the Bishops of Ely, who built a hall here in the reign of Henry III.; but the market has long been obsolete. A stock fair is held on the last Monday in June.

Shipham, pa. and vil. on the Mendip Hills, N.E. Somerset, 3 N.E. of Axbridge; ac. 759; soil light, overlying clay resting on sandstone and conglomerate. The church of St. Leonard (1843) is in Gothic style. The Wesleyans have a chapel. There is a club for women, endowed by Mrs. Hannah More. Mines of calamine exist in this pa. Two fairs for cattle are held yearly—one in April and one in November.

Shiplake, extensive pa. and vil. pleasantly situated on the Thames, S. Oxon, 4½ N.E. of Reading; ac. 2,692; soil gravel, overlying chalk. The Loddon, celebrated by Pope under the name of Lodona, enters the Thames near S. Lock. The church of SS. Peter and Paul (rebuilt 1869) is chiefly Dec., but the arches of the nave arcades are Trans. Norm. and the south aisle is E. Eng. There is an E. Eng. piscina in the south aisle, and many ancient floor-tiles remain; the font is Dec. Two brasses date from 1540; seven stained windows are filled with ancient glass brought from the church of the abbey of St. Bertin at St. Omer. Lord Tennyson was married in the church (1850). Crowsley Park is a handsome red-brick mansion dating from the reign of James II., and stands in a fine deer-park of 250 ac. Holmwood, S. House, and The Coppice are seats.

Shipledge, reef off the south-west coast of I. of W., S. Hants, near Brixton.

Shiplett, or Shipslade, ha., pa. of and 1 E. from Bleadon (q.v.), N. Somerset.

Shipley (1), large pa. and vil. on the Adur, N.W. Sussex, 6 S. of Horsham; ac. 7,640; soil clay and sand, overlying clay. The church of St. Mary (restored 1893) was founded by the Templars; it is chiefly Norm., with later insertions. There is a marble monument of Elizabethan date to the Caryll family; and a reliquary of Byzantine workmanship is preserved in the church chest. There are two friendly societies, a subscription library, and a charity of £1 10s. yearly for bread. Knepp Castle is a seat, with a fine collection of pictures by Holbein. Of the old castle, only a fragment of the keep is now standing, but traces of the extent of the building may be seen in the area enclosed by the moat.

Shipley (2), eccl. pa. and tp., pa. of Bradford (q.v.), of which it is practically a northern suburb, W.R. Yorks.; ac. 1,300. The land is in general rich, and the landscape in some parts very picturesque, opening into the well-wooded and beautiful district of Lower Airedale. The church of St. Paul (1825) is a large building in Gothic style; the Catholic church is dedicated to St. Walburga; and there are places of worship for various Nonconformist bodies. In the tp. are works for the manufacture of worsted, and several quarries.

Shipley (3), tp. and vil. on the Erewash, pa. of Heanor (q.v.), E. Derbys., 2½ N. of Ilkeston; ac. 2,010. There are several collieries in the neighbourhood. S. Hall is a seat.

Shipley (4). tp., pa. of and 3 S.E. from Eglingham (q.v.), N.E. Northumb.; ac. 2,037.

Shipley Division, one of the nineteen parl. divs. of the W.R. Yorks. It is in the northern part of the Riding, contains the mun. bor. of Bradford, and returns one member.

Shipley Hill, large barrow, pa. of Ratcliffe-on-the-Wreake (q.v.), N. Leics. It is 40 ft. high, and measures 350 ft. across.

Shipman Head, promontory on Bryher (q.v.), Scilly Islands. The rock scenery round this point, which lies in the north of the island, is very fine.

Bungay; ac. 794; soil mixed, subsoil sandy. The church of St. Bartholomew is Dec., and till 1856 retained a thatched roof. The workhouse for the union of Wangford is situated in this pa.

Shippon, eccl. pa., bor. of and 1 N.W. from Abingdon (q.v.), N. Berks. The church of St. Mary Magdalene is modern.

Shipslade. [SHIPLETT.]

Shipston-on-Stour, pa. and mkt. to. (s.), and head of U. and Co. Co. dis., on the Stour, S. Worcs., 7 N.E. of Moreton-in-the-Marsh; ac. 1,555; soil clayey, overlying blue lias. The church of St. Edmund was rebuilt (with the exception of the tower) in 1855, in E. Eng. style. Here are Baptist and Wesleyan chapels, and a meeting-house for the Friends. Charities of about £115 a year are applied mainly in providing scholarships at the Board schools; part of the fund provides religious teaching for the children attending the Board schools. There are several small bequests distributed among the poor of the town. The police station comprises a magistrates' room and superintendent's house. There is a monthly cattle fair, but the principal fairs in the year are held on the third Tuesday in April, June 22, the Tuesday after October 10, and the first Tuesday in December. The October fair is called "bull roast," from an ox being roasted in the market-place at that time; and at this fair servants are hired.

Shipton (1), pa., E. Glouc., 7 S.E. of Cheltenham, formed by the union of Shipton Oliffe and Shipton Sollars for civil purposes; ac. 2,816; soil clayey, with a stony subsoil. The church of St. Oswald is E. Eng. and Perp.; in the chancel are portions of sedilia and a piscina. The church of St. Mary the Virgin (restored 1884) is Perp. Limestone is abundant.

Shipton (2), or Shipton Bellinger, pa. and vil., W. Hants, 13 N.E. of Salisbury; ac. 2,560; soil very light (except on the top of the hills, where it is clay), subsoil chalk. The church of St. Peter (restored 1879) is E. Eng.; it retains a stone chancel screen, and two pre-Reformation bells with Latin invocations to St. John and St. Nicholas respectively. Shipton Manor is a seat.

Shipton (3), pa. and small vil. on the Corve, S. Salop, 14 S.E. of Shrewsbury; ac. 1,685; soil loam, subsoil various. The church of St. James is a Gothic building. There is an old encampment, probably British, in the pa. Larden Hall and S. Hall are seats.

Shipton (4), tp. and vil. near the Ouse and on the Great North Road, pa. of Overton (q.v.), N.R. Yorks., 6 N.W. of York; ac. 2,009. The church of the Holy Evangelists (1849), held with Overton, is in Gothic style.

Shipton (5), tp. and vil., pa. of and 2 N.W. from Market Weighton (q.v.), E.R. Yorks.; ac. 1,474.

Shipton Bellinger. [SHIPTON (2).]

Shipton George, pa. and vil., W. Dors., about 3 S.E. of Bridport; ac. 1,528; soil and subsoil chiefly limestone and clay. The church of St. Martin was rebuilt in 1862, in Perp. style; the tower (Perp.) is the only remaining part of the old structure. On Shipton Hill are the remains of an ancient camp.

Shipton Lee, formerly a tp. (now amalgamated for civil purposes with Quainton), pa. of and 1 N.W. from Quainton (q.v.), Mid Bucks.

Shipton Moyne, pa. and vil., S. Glouc., 2½ S. of Tetbury; ac. 2,252; soil loam and clay, overlying clay and oolite. The church of St. John the Baptist (rebuilt 1864) is E. Eng. and Dec., and contains several monuments to the Estcourt family. The charities are small, and the school has a small endowment. Estcourt House is a seat.

Shipton Oliffe and Shipton Sollars. [SHIPTON (1).]

Shipton-on-Cherwell, pa., Mid Oxon, 2½ E. of Woodstock; ac. 1,028; soil mixed, overlying clay. The church of the Holy Cross (rebuilt 1831) anciently contained a chantry dedicated to St. Mary the Virgin. In the north wall of the Dec. chancel is a sepulchral recess enclosing a stone coffin with coped lid bearing a Calvary cross; it was opened about the beginning of the 18th cent., when the skeleton of a little man holding a pewter chalice and paten was found. The basin of the font (restored 1879) is E. Norm. In the chancel is a very small stone coffin, which was found built into the wall of the bell-turret of the old church. In the churchyard is the shaft of an ancient cross.

Shipton-under-Wychwood, pa., tp., and vil., Mid Oxon, 7 S.S.E. of Chipping Norton; ac. of pa. 8,667, of tp. 2,520; soil various, with stonebrash, overlying rock. The church of St. Mary (restored 1859) is of various periods. On the south side of the chancel are restored sedilia and piscina of Perp. period, and above the latter is an ancient niche containing small male and female kneeling effigies in Tudor costume. The vestry also contains a piscina. An E. Eng. arch separates the nave and chancel. The north aisle is E. Perp. The opposite aisle and piers are of later date, as are also the clerestory and porch, which has groined vaulting, above which is a parvise, and in front two good Perp. niches with mutilated figures, one of which represents the Annunciation. The tower is E. Eng., and the west doorway Late Norm. In the north aisle and north bay of the chancel are two Dec. recesses or Easter sepulchres. The pulpit and font, both Perp., are octagonal and panelled. The church contains a number of interesting mural and other monuments. There is a Baptist chapel. The charities amount to £58 annually. There are remains of an ancient ecclesiastical building, probably a prebendal house. A memorial cross was erected in 1878 to the natives of this pa. who perished by the burning of the emigrant ship Cospatrick (1874). S. Court and S. Lodge are seats.

Shirehall Yard, pa., bor. of Ipswich (q.v.), S. Suff.; ac. 7½.

Shirehampton, eccl. pa., tp., and vil. on the Avon, pa. of Westbury-on-Trym (q.v.), S.W. Gloucs., 5 N.W. of Bristol; ac. 1,442. The church of St. Mary is a Perp. building; Captain Shaw, the "bold privateer, is buried in the churchyard. There is a Wesleyan chapel, and several small charities. A convalescent home was opened in 1860.

Shirenewton, pa. and vil., S.E. Mon., 4½ S.W. of Chepstow; ac. 3,598; soil clayey loam, overlying mountain limestone, with some red sandstone. The church of St. Thomas à Becket was founded by Humphry de Bohun, Earl of Hereford, about the middle of the 13th cent., the tower being a good example of the fortified church towers of this part of the country. The Calvinistic Methodists, Wesleyans, and Bible Christians have chapels. There is a cromlech close to the vil., and in Llanmelin Wood a large British encampment. Close to S. Hall, a seat, there was formerly an ancient house belonging to the Blethyn family; and Bishop Bleythyn died here in 1590. The Coombe is also a seat.

Shirecoaks, eccl. pa. and vil. on the Chesterfield Canal, pas. of Worksop (q.v.), N.W. Notts., and Anston-cum-Membris, W.R. Yorks., 2½ W.N.W. of Worksop. The church of St. Luke is in E. Eng. style, the expense of building and endowment being borne by the fifth Duke of Newcastle (d. 1864); the chancel is adorned with a reredos of alabaster, inlaid with marble and glass mosaic, finely gilded, which includes a sculptured group of the Crucifixion. The old chapel has been converted into a school. Here are large collieries worked by a company.

Shireshead, eccl. pa., pas. of Cockerham and Garstang (q.v.), N.W. Lancs., 8 S. of Lancaster. The church is dedicated to St. Paul.

Shirestones, or Threeshirestone, at the point where Lancs., Westmd., and Cumb. meet, in Wrynose Pass, near the source of the Duddon, about 5 N.W. of Hawkshead. The Shire Stone is an upright pillar inscribed "Lancashire, W. F., 1816."

Shirland, pa. and vil. on the Amber, E. Derbys., 2 N.W. of Alfreton; ac. 2,712; soil and subsoil clayey. The church of St. Leonard (restored 1848) is Perp.; in the north chancel is a monumental recess, formerly containing an effigy believed to have been that of Sir Henry de Grey, fifth Baron Grey de Wilton (d. 1396), also a slab to Reginald, first Baron Grey de Wilton (d. 1308); under the east window is a table tomb to John Revell of S. (d. 1537), and there was formerly a chantry founded by this family. The Free Methodists, Primitive Methodists, Baptists, and Methodist New Connexion have chapels. The charities amount to about £40 yearly.

Shirley (1), pa., tp., and vil., W. Derbys., 10 N.W. of Derby; ac. of pa. 3,008, of tp. 1,630; soil light, overlying gravel and sand. The church of St. Michael is Dec., with remains of Norm. work in the chancel-arch; there are three piscinæ and an aumbry; the font dates from the 15th cent., and the communion plate is old. In the churchyard are some fine yew-trees. Here is a Wesleyan chapel. The charities are small.

Shirley (2), suburb of Southampton (q.v.), S. Hants, extending about 2 W. on the Romsey road. The church of the eccl. pa. of St. James is in Trans. style; and there are places of worship for the various Nonconformist bodies. Here are homes for aged women, a children's hospital, and a home of industry for destitute children.

Shitlington, High, formerly a separate tp., now amalgamated for civil purposes with Wark (q.v.), S. Northumb., 3 N.W. of Wark.

Snitlington, Low, formerly a separate tp., now amalgamated for civil purposes with Wark (q.v.), S. Northumb., 2½ N.W. of Wark. S. Hall, once a seat, is now a farmhouse.

Shiven, river, N.E. co. Galway, Ir., rises about 2 N. of Newtown Bellew, and flows about 13 E. to the Suck, which it joins 2 S.E. of Ballygar.

Shivering Sand, shoal in estuary of the Thames, 5 N. of Herne Bay. This sandbank, with those immediately adjacent to it, has a length of about 7½ miles.

Shobdon, pa. and vil., N. Herefords., 8 N.W. of Leominster; ac. 3,639; soil and subsoil various. The church of St. John the Evangelist (1753) was built on the site of an ancient and much more important church dating from the reign of Stephen ; the remains are erected in S. Park, and the tower and Norm. font are attached to the modern structure. In the churchyard are several fine old cedars. The charities amount to about £45 yearly. The Lugg affords good trout and grayling fishing. S. Court is a seat standing in a fine park.

Shobrooke, pa. and vil., Mid Dev., 2 E. of Crediton ; ac. 4,253 ; soil red loam, overlying red rock. The church of St. Swithin (restored and enlarged 1879) is E. Eng., with some Norm. portions. The charities are small. S. Park is a seat ; it stands in an undulating deer-park, in which many species of rare birds are acclimatised. The Sanctuary also is a seat.

Shoby, pa., N. Leics., 5 W. by N. of Melton Mowbray ; ac. 969 ; soil clay, subsoil sandy.

Shochie Burn, streamlet, E. Perths., Sc., rises near Glenshee, and flows 6 S.E. to the Tay, which it joins just above Luncarty railway station.

Shoeburyness, a point of land, pa. of South Shoebury (q.v.), S.E. Essex, to which the railway is now extended. Here is H.M.'s School of Gunnery, at which officers and non-commissioned officers are trained in theoretical and practical gunnery ; experiments are also made here with new patterns of ordnance and warlike projectiles ; and the sands, being of great extent, afford the required space for artillery practice. The National Artillery Association holds its meetings here annually in August, when detachments from various corps of volunteer artillery compete for prizes.

Shoebury, North, pa. on the Thames, S.E. Essex, 4 E. of Southend ; ac. 1,086 and 1,002 water ; soil variable, overlying clay and gravel. The E. Eng. church of St. Mary the Virgin retains a piscina and an ancient font.

Shoebury, South, pa. at the mouth of the Thames, S.E. Essex, 5 E. of Southend ; ac. 1,037 and 3,426 water. A road runs across the Maplin Sand at low water to Foulness Island, and nearly opposite is the Nore light, about the centre of the estuary of the Thames, which is here 6 miles broad to the Kentish shore. The church of St. Andrew (formerly a chapel attached to the Cluniac priory of Prittlewell) was originally Norm. ; subsequent restorations have left it almost wholly Perp. ; it has a low side window and a squint now built up. The Wesleyans have a chapel. In the pa. are extensive brickworks, where malm bricks are manufactured. There are some remains of an ancient camp.

Shona, island, pa. of Ardnamurchan (q.v.), S.W. Invs., Sc. It lies at the entrance to Moidart Loch (q.v.), breaking up the waterway into two channels —north and south.

Shooters' Hill, residential dis. and hill (446 ft.), pas. of Eltham, Woolwich, and Plumstead (q.v.), N.W. Kent, 2 S. of Woolwich. There are two eccl. pas. with modern churches. The hill is supposed to have derived its name from the outlaws by whom it was formerly infested. A Roman road and a good modern road run over it. It is crowned by the Severndroog Tower, a triangular structure erected as a memorial of the capture of Severndroog, on the Malabar coast, by Sir William James in 1755. On the west slope of the hill stands the Herbert Hospital, opened in 1865. The hill commands good views on all sides, that towards London (described by Byron in "Don Juan") being very impressive.

Shooting Common (formerly part of Bromley Common), pa. of Bromley (q.v.), W. Kent. It lies in the south of the pa., and is on the road to Sevenoaks.

Shopland, pa., S.E. Essex, 3 N.E. of Southend ; ac. 1,039 ; soil mixed and London Clay, overlying gravel and clay. The church of St. Mary is Norm., with E. Eng. and Dec. additions, and retains sedilia and a piscina niche in the chancel. The font is E. Eng. There is a brass (dated 1371) to Thomas Stapel, with effigy in armour and an inscription in French.

London, E. Middx., 1¼ N.E. of St. Paul's; ac. 648. S. lies between the Regent's Canal on the north, Hackney Road on the east, the City Road on the west, and Finsbury Circus on the south. The parl. bor. comprises the two divs. of Haggerston and Hoxton, each returning one member. There is a current tradition that S. is so called because Jane Shore, mistress of Edward IV., ended her life in a ditch here; whilst others have supposed that it is named after the great common sewer or ditch by which it was traversed. In reality the name appears to be due to the family of De Sordig, who were lords of the manor. Vestiges of a Roman camp have been found here. The church of St. Leonard (rebuilt 1740) displays several orders of Classical architecture, the most interesting feature being the tower with its turret encircled by Corinthian columns, above which rises a dome surmounted by an elegant spire. The town hall (1867) is a spacious edifice in Classical style. The new workhouse (a red-brick structure erected in 1868) and the lunatic asylum are situated at Hoxton. The other public buildings include public libraries, theatres, music-halls, and several sets of almshouses. The industries include furniture-making, dry-salting, and the manufacture of boots and shoes.

Shoreham (1), or Shoreham, New, pa. and seaport to. at the mouth of the Adur, Mid Sussex, 6 W. of Brighton; ac. 115 and 101 tidal water and foreshore. S. formerly returned two members to Parliament, but in 1885 the representation was merged in the co. An elegant suspension bridge, carrying the road to Worthing over the Adur, was erected in 1832 by the Duke of Norfolk. Old and New S. are both on the eastern bank. Ella, the first king of the South Saxons, landed here to complete the conquest of England; and Charles II. made his escape from S. to Fécamp after the battle of Worcester. The church of St. Mary the Virgin (restored 1876) is part only of an ancient and beautiful cruciform structure, of which nearly the whole of the nave has been destroyed, and is an extremely interesting specimen of Trans. architecture of flint and stone. The roofs are groined, and the inside walls are beautifully ornamented with the dog-tooth and zigzag patterns. There are piscinæ in both transepts. The only remaining bay of the nave has a three-light Perp. window. The main entrance, underneath the tower, is through a beautiful Trans. arch profusely decorated with the carving peculiar to that period. On the chancel floor are brass effigies of a man and woman, each with the hands crossed upon the breast. The Catholic church is dedicated to St. Peter, and various Nonconformist bodies have places of worship. The trade of the port is chiefly in coals, corn, and timber; shipbuilding is also carried on. A fair is held on July 25. The Swiss Gardens were opened in 1838, and contain a large theatre, a ball-room, a refreshment-room, a museum, and a conservatory; in the grounds is a lake for boating and fishing.

Shoreham (2), pa. and vil. on the Darent, W. Kent, about 5 N. of Sevenoaks; ac. 5,599; soil chalk and hazel mould, overlying chalk. The church of SS. Peter and Paul (restored) is Dec. and Perp.; a carved oak screen divides the chancel from the nave. In the vil. are Wesleyan and Baptist chapels. The paper-mills here employ about seventy hands. Terry's charity of £13 yearly, left in 1628 by Thomas Terry, is for distribution. Three almshouses are for aged widows. S. Place is a seat.

Shoreham Gap, a name locally applied to a break in South Downs, S. Sussex, a little N. of Shoreham, near Bramber.

Shoreham, New. [SHOREHAM (1).]

Shoreham, Old, pa., Mid Sussex, 1 N. of Shoreham; ac. 1,919 and 51 tidal water and foreshore. The church of St. Nicholas is a cruciform building of flint with stone dressings, the fine arches in the tower and other features being of Norm. date.

CHURCH AND BRIDGE, OLD SHOREHAM.

Under a canopy in the south wall of the chancel is a brass inscribed to Captain Richard Poole (d. 1652) and to Thomas his only son (d. 1652); around is a decorated border, and at the top are the Poole arms; near this is a piscina. Buckingham House is a seat.

Shoreston, tp. on the sea-coast, pa. of Bamburgh (q.v.), N.E. Northumb., 6½ S.E. of Belford; ac. 681. S. Hall, standing in well-wooded grounds, is a seat.

Shoreswood, tp., pa. of Norham (q.v.), N. Northumb., 5½ S.W. of Berwick; ac. 1,188.

Shorncliffe Camp, on the north side of Sandgate (q.v.), S.E. Kent, is one of the most important military stations in the kingdom. The camp, permanently re-established in 1854 on an elevated plateau above the town, overlooking the sea, forms three sides of a square and will hold above 5,000 troops.

Shorncote, pa., N. Wilts. and on the borders of Glouc., 3 S. of Cirencester; ac. about 464; soil gravel, overlying gravel and clay. All Saints' Church (restored 1883) is Norm.; it has a nave and small north chapel, south porch, and a beautiful belfry at the intersection of the nave and chancel. The interest of £500 is divided among the poor at Christmas. For civil purposes this pa. is amalgamated with Somerford Keynes.

Kent, 3½ S.W. of Gravesend; ac. 3,218; soil gravel and clay, overlying chalk. The church of SS. Peter and Paul is E. Eng. and later, with some original Norm. work; it contains a fine monument with effigy to Henry de Cobham, of the time of Edward II., and a brass incised with the figure of a chalice and the letters "I. H. S.," and inscribed to Sir Thomas Elys (1569), a former vicar. There are other brasses to John Smith (1437); John and Marian Smith (1457); William Pepys, vicar (1468); Edmund Page (1550); and Elynor Allen (1583). Here is a Catholic church, and Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist chapels. The charities are about £100 yearly.

Shortflatt, tp., pa. of and 1½ S. from Bolam (q.v.), S. Northumb.; ac. 762. S. Tower, dating from the reign of Stephen, is a seat; the old keep now forms the drawing-room.

Shorthampton, chap. and tp., pa. of Charlbury (q.v.), N. Oxon, 5 S. of Chipping Norton; ac. 1,617. The church of All Saints is of mixed periods; the chancel-arch, on the south side of which is a large blocked squint, is E. Eng., and the nave has a Norm. north wall, while the south doorway and windows are Perp. Pudlicot House is a seat.

Short Heath, eccl. pa., pa. of Wolverhampton (q.v.), S. Staffs., about 2 N.E. of Willenhall and within the parl. bor. of Wolverhampton. Holy Trinity Church is a modern building in Gothic style. Lock-making is an important industry.

Shortlands, eccl. pa. and dis., pa. of Beckenham (q.v.), W. Kent, forming a suburb of Bromley. The church of St. Mary is in E. Eng. style. The Kent Waterworks Company has a pumping station here.

Shortwood (1), ha., pa. of and 1 N.W. from Horsley (q.v.), W. Glouc. There is a small chapel-of-ease (1866).

Shortwood (2), ha., pa. of and 2 W. from Pucklechurch (q.v.), S. Glouc.

Shorwell, pa. and vil., I. of W., 5 S.W. of Newport; ac. 3,611; soil various, chiefly sand, loam, and clay. The church of St. Peter is Perp., except an E. Eng. south door from an earlier chapelry and a Late Dec. window; there is a stone mediæval pulpit, a fine wall-painting of St. Christopher (c. 1440), an hourglass-stand to the pulpit, two remarkable brasses (1515 and 1619), numerous fine monuments of the 17th cent. with effigies, and the original opening for the cannon which used to be kept in the present vestry; chained in a glass case is a valuable Cranmer Bible of 1541. The font cover dates from c. 1600, the pulpit canopy from 1620, the altar-table from 1661, and the chalice from 1569. Here is a Wesleyan chapel. The charities amount to about £80 yearly. Northcourt (1615), situated in beautiful grounds, Westcourt (1579), and Wolverton (1600) are seats.

Shoscombe, ha., pa. of and 1½ S.W. from Wellow (q.v.), N.E. Somerset. There is a chapel-of-ease or school church, and a mixed school.

Shotesham All Saints, pa. and vil. (High Shotesham), S. Norf., 6 S. of Norwich; ac. 1,642; soil sand and clay, overlying sand, gravel, and clay. The church of All Saints is Perp. The Free Methodists have a chapel. The charities amount to about £115 a year. This pa., together with that of S. St. Mary, had formerly the privilege of sending eight poor people to the East Greenwich Hospital, under the charity of Henry Howard, Earl of Northampton, in the reign of James I., but a new scheme for the administration of this charity has been framed by the Charity Commissioners, and a hospital erected here in 1885 for eight poor men, each of whom receives 12s. a week, with some allowances, and six others residing in the pa. receive 10s. weekly.

Shotesham St. Mary, pa. and vil. (Low Shotesham), S. Norf., 6 S. of Norwich; ac. 1,905; soil of a good mixed description, overlying clay and loam. The church of St. Mary (restored 1881) is a small Perp. building. St. Martin's and St. Botolph's churches have been in ruins for several centuries; their benefices, with the vicarage of St. Mary, are now consolidated with S. All Saints. The poor share some of the charities left for S. All Saints. Shotesham Park, in a well-wooded park of about 400 ac., is a seat; the old hall, still standing, is used as a farmhouse.

Shothaugh, ha., pa. of and 1½ W. from Felton (q.v.), E. Northumb. [THIRSTON, EAST AND WEST, WITH SHOTHAUGH.]

Shotley (1), pa. and scattered vil., S.E. Suff., at the termination of the peninsula formed by the estuaries of the Orwell and Stour, opposite Harwich, 10 S.E. of Ipswich; ac. 2,041 and 1,081 of tidal water and foreshore; soil and subsoil various. A fortification, mounting 14 heavy Armstrong guns, commands the entrance of Harwich harbour. The church of St. Mary is principally Dec., but the clerestory is a fine specimen of Perp. work. The Primitive Methodists have a chapel. The poor have the proceeds of 5 ac. of land, now let in allotments for £8 12s. 6d. yearly. Here is a Village Club and Reading Room, connected with the County Society at Ipswich. In the pa. are extensive brick and tile works.

Shotley (2), pa. and vil. on the Derwent, S. Northumb., 13 S.E. of Hexham; ac. of pa. 15,115, of tp. 7,132; soil and subsoil clay and sand. The church of St. John was erected 1835, in E. Perp. style. The ancient church of St. Andrew (formerly a chapel to Bywell St. Andrew), having sunk in through the working of a coal-mine beneath, was restored and reopened January, 1893, and is now used as a chapel-of-ease to St. John's. There is a Baptist chapel.

Shotley Bridge, vil. on the Derwent, pa. of Lanchester (q.v.), N. Dur., 14 N.W. of Durham. S. Bridge was formerly only a ha., where swords, knife-blades, and other trifling articles were made, but since the establishment of some paper-mills it has become a populous district. S. Spa is a celebrated spring noted for its efficacy in curing scrofulous complaints. S. Park is a seat.

Shottesbrook, pa., N.E. Berks., 10 E. of Reading; ac. 1,395; soil light and gravel. The Dec. church of St. John the Baptist (interior restored 1852) is noted for its symmetry and beauty, being especially remarkable for the uniformity of its design. During the progress of the restoration some fragments of Norm. mouldings and arches were discovered. The founder's tomb, a beautiful specimen of E. Gothic, has been restored to its ancient form. Near the church is a venerable yew-tree measuring 20 ft. in girth. In 1337 Sir William Trussell founded here a small religious house, consisting of a college and chantry, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, for a warden and five priests; this college he afterwards endowed with the church of S., but, on its sustaining much injury by fire, it was deserted by the entire establishment except the warden, who obtained a licence in 1380 to impropriate it to the church of Battlesden. The remains have been converted into a dairy. S. Park is a seat.

Shotteswell, pa. and vil., S. Warws., 8 S.E. of Kineton; ac. 1,860; soil clay, overlying rock. The church of St. Lawrence (restored 1875) is Norm. The Wesleyans have a chapel. There are some small charities.

Shottisham, pa. and vil. on the Deben, S.E. Suff., 6 S.E. of Woodbridge; ac. 1,134; soil light, overlying crag. The church of St. Margaret (restored 1868) is E. Eng.; the staircase to the rood-loft still remains. There is a brass (1620) and a trefoil piscina in the chancel. The charities, of the yearly value of £2, are payable on New Year's Day. Certain lands devised for the repair of the church yield £6 annually.

Shotwick, pa., tp., and vil. on the Dee, W. Chesh., 7 N.W. of Chester; ac. of pa. 3,650, of tp. 566; soil clay, subsoil rocky. The church of St. Michael (partly restored about 1857) was originally Norm., and contains memorials to members of the Doe family.

Shotwick Park, pa., W. Chesh., 5 N.W. of Chester, ac. 914; soil clay. There was formerly a castle here, of which a large mound and entrenchments are the only remains.

Shoulden, or Sholden, pa. and vil., E. Kent, 1½ W. of Deal; ac. 1,814; soil loam, overlying clay and chalk. The church of St. Nicholas is E. Eng., containing in the chancel several memorials of the Wyborn and Hooper families.

Shouldham, pa. and pleasant vil., S.W. Norf., 9 S. of Lynn; ac. 3,888; soil loam and clay, overlying chalk. The church of All Saints (restored 1870) is E. Eng., Dec., and Perp. There are chapels for Wesleyans, Methodist Reformers, and Primitive Methodists. The charities are of £35 yearly value, derived from poor's land and fuel allotment; this sum has been absorbed in a drainage scheme, and the tax on the land is so high that no rent will be available till 1940. Two fairs for cattle are held yearly, on September 19 and October 11.

Shouldham Thorpe, pa. and straggling vil., S.W. Norf., 9 S. of Lynn; ac. 1,430; soil rich loam, overlying clay and sand. The church of the Virgin Mary is Norm., Dec., and Perp. The Wesleyans, Primitive Methodists, and Methodist New Connexion have chapels. Here are some brick and tile works. The charities are of £30 yearly value.

Shoulton, or Showton, ha., pa. of and 1 w. from North Hallow (q.v.), W. Worcs.

Shraley Brook, ha., pa. of Audley (q.v.), N.W. Staffs., about 3½ N.W. of Newcastle-under-Lyme. There is a Wesleyan chapel.

Shrawardine, pa. and vil. on the Severn, W. Salop, 6½ W.N.W. of Shrewsbury; ac. 1,951; soil loam, overlying clay. The church of St. Mary (rebuilt 1649 and restored 1893) is Gothic; there is a brass to Martha Botevyle (d. 1781). The charities are small. The castle, of which there are remains, was destroyed during the Civil War.

Shrawley, pa. and vil. on the Severn, W. Worcs., 8 N.W. of Worcester; ac. 1,877; soil loam, overlying clay and marl. The church of St. Mary is chiefly E. Eng., but has some traces of Norm. work; there are monuments of the families of Vernon, Cliffes, Piercys, Tolleys, and Bournes, and a curious coffin-lid. Several mounds are supposed to have formed a defence to the ford across the river. Wood House is a seat.

Shrewley, tp. and vil., pa. of and 2½ N. from Hatton (q.v.), Mid Warws.; ac. 1,268. There is a Congregational chapel.

Shrewsbury, mun. and parl. bor., assize and mkt. to. (W. & S.), and head of Co. Co. dis., N. Salop, 10 W. of Wellington. S. stands on a peninsula formed by the Severn and its tributaries; the river is spanned by several bridges, and there are also ferry boats. Here was a British settlement, which was afterwards occupied by the Saxons and named "Scrobbesbyrig." In the Domesday Book it is styled a "city." S., like most of the western border towns, is very rich in remnants of antiquity, and especially in old black timber houses; among the finest is Ireland's Mansion, a black-timbered house with gables, in High Street, near Pride Hill. It returned two members to Parliament till 1885, when the representation was reduced to one. S. is the seat of a suffragan bishop, and the head of a Catholic diocese comprising the whole of Salop, Cheshire, and North Wales. There are five pas. in the to.—Holy Cross and St. Giles, St. Alkmond, St. Chad, St. Julian, and St. Mary. The church of the Holy Cross (restored 1894) was the conventual church of the Benedictine mitred abbey founded here in 1087 by Roger, Earl of Montgomery. The fabric was originally Norm., but there are later additions, and the present chancel was built in 1887. In the south aisle is an arcaded tomb, with the recumbent effigy of a knight in armour, conjectured to represent the founder of the abbey (d. 1094); there are other altar-tombs and effigies, including one of a knight in plate armour brought from the church of St. Alkmond, and one of a judge of the reign of Edward I. brought from the church of St. Chad. South of the church still stands the stone pulpit of the E. Eng. refectory. There were once cloisters, 84 ft. square, and a chapter-house, in which the first English Parliament was held in 1283. The church of St. Alkmond, rebuilt (with the exception of the Perp. tower) in 1795, in semi-classic style, contains some ancient heraldic and some 17th-cent. monuments. The only portion of the old church of St. Chad (which fell in 1788) is a chantry chapel, exhibiting Norm., E. Eng., and Dec. features; it is not now used. The present church is in Classic style. The only part of the old church of St. Julian remaining is the tower, the base of which is E. Eng. and the upper part Perp.; the chancel, in Classic style, dates from 1750. The church of St. Mary (restored 1889) is a large cruciform structure of Norm., E. Eng., and later periods. The Jesse window, originally in the church of the Grey Friars, is 14th-cent. work. There is a Dec. altar-tomb with recumbent effigy of a knight in ringed mail, supposed to represent the Leyburns, Lords of Berwick and Cheswardyne. On February 11, 1894, about 50 ft. of the spire was blown down during a gale of wind, doing great damage to the roof of the nave; it has since been rebuilt, and the necessary repairs have been effected. There are several eccl. pas., mostly with modern churches, and places of worship for various Nonconformist bodies. The Catholic cathedral is in Dec. style, from the designs of Welby Pugin. The grammar school (founded by Edward VI. in 1551, and enlarged by Elizabeth in 1572) is one of the great schools of the kingdom. From its foundation till 1572 it occupied the fine Elizabethan building now used as the Free Library and Museum. The present school building was erected in 1765, and has been successively used as a foundling hospital, a place of confinement for prisoners of war, and a workhouse; it was purchased by the governors in 1878, and adapted for the purposes of the school. The Shire Hall and Guildhall is a fine building in Italian style, containing assize courts (in which also the town and county councillors meet) and the usual offices. The Free Library and Museum occupies the old grammar school buildings, and was opened in 1885. The museum contains a large number of objects discovered at Wroxeter (q.v.). The theatre, with shops on the ground floor, is in Classic style. The Market Hall, built by the Corporation, is a fine stone building, and also contains the Corn Exchange. The old market hall is now used as a police court and borough offices. Markets for cattle are held in the Smithfield, near the railway station, every Tuesday, and for horses on the first Tuesday in the month; the great annual horse fair takes place the first week in March. H.M.'s Prison is a late 18th-cent. building; the Barracks (1877–79) are the headquarters of a regimental district. S. has an Infirmary (1830), in Classic style; an Eye, Ear, and Throat Hospital (1881), in Domestic Gothic style; and a Dispensary. Malting is carried on to a large extent; there are also breweries, an iron foundry, agricultural implement works, tannery, timber yards and saw-mills, and glass-staining works. The charities produce about £2,000 a year, applied in starting young men in business (by loans free of interest), in apprenticing boys, and distributed in money and kind. There are several almshouses and homes. The Drapers' Hall is a half-timbered gabled building, dating from about 1560; on the east side of the wall is a curious portrait of Edward IV. with some quaint lines commemorative of his patronage. In the square is a statue to Lord Clive, conqueror of India and member for the bor. 1761–74, and at the entrance to the town from London is a column commemorating the achievement of Lord Hill in the Peninsular War. On a spot still called Battlefield, about 3 miles distant, the battle of Shrewsbury was fought in 1403, between the forces of Henry IV. and those of Hotspur, resulting in victory for the Royalist army. The Castle, on an eminence near the railway station, was built in the 11th cent. on the site of a Saxon stronghold. During the Civil War the castle was strengthened, but was treacherously handed over to the Parliament. It was partially dismantled in the reign of James II., and the principal portions remaining are two drum towers connected by a curtain, and the wall enclosing the inner court. The castle has been modernised, and is now occupied as a private residence.

Shrewton, pa. and vil., S. Wilts., 6 w. of Amesbury, on the road to Devizes; ac. 2,130; soil loam on chalk. The church of St. Mary (rebuilt 1854–55) was originally Norm. and E. Eng.; the chancel and north aisle each has a canopied piscina. Here are chapels for Wesleyans and Baptists. There is a rent-charge of £55 for apprenticing boys of the pas. of Newnton, Rollstone, and S. At the enclosure of the pa. 10 ac., producing £15 a year, were appropriated for the repairs of the church.

Shrivenham, pa., tp., and vil. on the Cole, W. Berks., 5½ S.W. of Faringdon; ac. of pa. 8,382, of tp. 2,695; soil sand and stonebrash, overlying gravel. The church of St. Andrew, a Jacobean building, contains monuments to Sir John Wildman (d. 1693), John Shute, first Viscount Barrington (d. 1734), Admiral Samuel Barrington (d. 1800), and brasses to William Keppel, sixth Viscount (d. 1867), and Lord Beaconsfield. In the churchyard is a mutilated stone effigy. The Wesleyans have a chapel. There are some small charities and ten almshouses founded by Sir H. Martin; the school has a small endowment. Beckett House, an Elizabethan mansion, and Elm Tree House are seats.

Shronell, pa., Clanwilliam bar., S. co. Tip., Ir., 3 N.W. of Tipperary; ac. 2,805.

Shropham, pa. and vil., Mid Norf., 10 N. of Thetford; ac. 2,678; soil and subsoil various. The church of St. Peter (restored 1867) is Perp. There is a Primitive Methodist chapel. The rent of 35 ac. of land is now applied in relief of the poor rates, and the proceeds of the fuel allotment of 58 ac. are distributed annually among the poor in coals. S. Hall, a modern mansion in a park of 50 ac., is a seat.

Shropshire, or Salop, a western inland co. of England, in the basin of the Severn and on the Welsh border; on the north it is bounded by Chesh. and part of Flints., on the east by Staffs., on the south-east by Worcs., on the south and south-west by Herefords. and Radnors., and on the north-west by Montgoms. and Denbighs. The area of the co. is 859,516 ac. The soil in the valleys is good; on the right bank of the Severn it is a red clay and gravel—débris of the New Red Sandstone. Wenlock Edge and the neighbouring hills admit of tillage, and so does Clun Forest; but some of the hills on the Welsh borders are too high and bare even for sheep-feeding. The lofty Clee Hills are almost wholly cultivated or depastured, but the alluvial nature of the soil will account for their fertility. On the Severn are many water meadows. The chief crops are wheat, barley, oats, peas, hay, and orchard fruit. Cattle-breeding and dairy-farming are carried on, and the shire gives its name to a modern breed of sheep, now in much favour. The principal minerals are coal, ironstone of various kinds, lead, freestone, and limestone. There are large ironworks in different parts of the co.; earthenware and china, bricks, tiles, and tobacco-pipes are manufactured; malting is carried on on a large scale. There are also small manufactures of carpets and rugs, linen yarn and thread, paper, and agricultural implements. Much of S. is hill land, being a continuation of the Welsh hills; on the east are other chains. Among the S. hills are Wenlock Edge, the Wrekin, Breidden Hill, and the Clee Hills (which will be found under their respective names). Most of the hills and dales exhibit beautiful scenery. With regard to the physical structure of the co., the Severn forms a fair boundary line between the older and the newer rocks. This difference in structure is accompanied by corresponding differences in scenery, cultivation, population, and industrial occupations. The south-west region is hilly, and in parts even of a wild character, with, on the whole, a poor soil; the mines of lead, iron, and coal, and the abundance of limestone, however, compensate for this to some extent. The north and east are comparatively flat and undulating, with a richer soil, much more arable land, and an agricultural population. The Pre-Cambrian beds occupy the centre of the co., forming the Wrekin range and some hills to the southward. Above these rest a series of thin-bedded micaceous green sandstones of Cambrian age, as are the Longmynd rocks, west of Church Stretton. The Silurian system in the south and south-west of this co. is associated with Sir R. Murchison's work, the old name "grauwacke" having given place to its present name since the publication of his book in 1839. In the Ludlow beds fish remains occur. The junction of the Old Red Sandstone with the Silurian is well shown near Ludlow. The Carboniferous beds form an irregular disconnected band, curving across the co. from the north-west to the Forest of Wyre. On the Coal Measures rest Permian beds, and form a similar band about 2 miles wide. The north and east of the co., comparatively flat, are formed of rocks of the Triassic series; and in the extreme north is an outlying patch of Rhætic and Liassic beds. The north and east of S. are thickly covered with drift. Few traces of prehistoric man have been found. The principal rivers are the Severn with its tributaries, and the Teme. The systems of the Great Western and London and North Western Companies afford the chief railway communication. Among the antiquities are many camps and barrows, Roman roads and stations; and Offa's Dyke forms part of the boundary of the co. [WROXETER.] There are also many historic buildings, which are treated under their respective pas. Besides the mun. and parl. bor. of Shrewsbury, the co. contains the mun. bors. of Bishops Castle, Bridgnorth, Ludlow, Oswestry, and Wenlock. For parl. purposes the co. has four divisions—Ludlow, Newport, Oswestry, and Wellington.

Sibsey, pa. and vil., E. Lincs., 5 N.E. of Boston; ac. 6,280; soil rich loam, overlying heavy clay. The church of St. Margaret (restored 1854–56) is of Norm., E. Eng., and later periods, and is said to have been originally built A.D. 1087. There is a Wesleyan chapel in the vil., with a Sunday school, and a Primitive Methodist chapel.

Sibson (1), pa., tp., and vil., W. Leics., 4 S.W. of Market Bosworth; ac. of pa. 3,929, of tp. 2,602; soil and subsoil clay. The church of St. Botolph (restored 1872) has a Dec. chancel, containing sedilia, a piscina, an ancient effigy (said to be that of the founder), and a brass to John Moore (d. 1520); there are some curious traditions connected with the bells.

Sibson (2), ha., pa. of Stibbington (q.v.), N. Hunts., 8½ W. of Peterborough.

Sibthorpe, pa. and vil., S.E. Notts., 7 S.S.W. of Newark; ac. 951; soil clay and loam, overlying clay. The church of St. Peter is E. Eng., and contains, beside some old glass, an altar-tomb with effigy to Edward Burrell (1589) and the remains of an ancient monument. There is a Wesleyan chapel. The college was founded temp. Edward III. by Thomas, rector of Beckingham. Archbishop Secker was born here in 1693.

Sibthorpe Place, ha., pa. of and 1 W. from East Markham (q.v.), Mid Notts.

Sibton, pa., E. Suff., 5 N.W. of Saxmundham; ac. 2,717; soil chiefly heavy, subsoil clay. The church of St. Peter (restored 1872) is a handsome Gothic building; it contains a richly-carved oak roof and pulpit. The font is ancient; the south doorway is Norm. The Primitive Methodists have a chapel. Here are the remains of a Cistercian abbey, founded about 1149 and dedicated to the Blessed Virgin; at the Dissolution its revenues were valued at £250. Abbey House and S. Park are seats.

Sicklesmere, ha. on the Lark, pas. of Great and Little Whelnetham (q.v.), W. Suff., about 3 S.E. of Bury St. Edmunds.

Sicklinghall, tp., pa. of Kirkby Overblow (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., 1½ S. of Spofforth; ac. 1,494. The church of St. Peter is in Gothic style. Here is a Catholic church with monastery attached. There is a small Wesleyan chapel. Wood Hall is a seat.

Sid, stream, S.E. Dev., rises about 4 S. of Honiton, and runs by Sidbury and Sidford to the English Channel at Sidmouth. Its length is 6 miles.

Sidbury (1), pa. and vil. on the Sid, E. Dev., 6 S. of Honiton; ac. 6,827; soil marl, clay, and sand, overlying marl and clay. The church of St. Giles (restored 1886) is partly Norm. There is a Congregational chapel, and a reading-room. Near the vil., to the west, is a Roman camp, known as S. Castle, in which are two ancient wells. The manufacture of Honiton lace is carried on here. A fair is held on the Wednesday before September 20 yearly for cattle and cheese. There are several seats in the neighbourhood.

Sidbury (2), pa., S.E. Salop, 6 S.W. by S. of Bridgnorth; ac. 1,272; soil loam, overlying stiff clay. Holy Trinity Church (restored 1881) is E. Eng., and contains several ancient frescoes.

Sidbury Hill, eminence (735 ft.), pa. of Ludgershall (q.v.), E. Wilts., about 16 N.E. of Salisbury. On the summit is a large space of ground in the form of a heart, surrounded by tumuli.

Sidcot, ha., pa. of and 1 N.E. from Winscombe (q.v.), N. Somerset.

Sidcup, residential dis. with two eccl. pas., pas. of Chislehurst and Foots Cray, W. Kent, about 5 S. of Bromley. The church of St. John the Evangelist is in Byzantine style; the pulpit is a Flemish work of ancient carved oak and bears the inscription "Antwerp, 1651." Christ Church is a modern building. There are Congregational, Wesleyan, and Baptist chapels, and a place of worship for Plymouth Brethren. The St. Ursula Lodges (1840) are for six unmarried ladies above the age of forty-five, each of whom has a house and garden free for life and £30 yearly; they must themselves be possessed of at least £50 per annum, and be of good birth and education and members of the Church of England. A cottage hospital was established here in 1882.

Siddan, pa., Lower Slane bar., N. co. Meath, Ir., 4½ S.E. of Nobber; ac. 5,162.

Siddick, vil., pa. of Camerton (q.v.), W. Cumb., about 1½ N. of Workington. There are collieries and firebrick works, and the vil. is chiefly inhabited by miners.

Siddington (1), pa. and vil. on the Churn, S.E. Gloucs., 1½ S.E. of Cirencester; ac. 2,173; soil oolite and clay, subsoil rocky, partly marl. The church of St. Peter (restored 1875) is of mixed periods; in the chancel there are sedilia, a piscina, and an aumbry. The south doorway and the chancel-arch are fine specimens of Norm. work; there is a monument to the Hon. Benjamin Bathurst (d. 1767). The charities are small. S. House is a seat.

Siddington (2), tp. and vil., pa. of Prestbury (q.v.), E. Chesh., 5 S.W. of Macclesfield; ac. 2,159. The chapel of All Saints (restored 1853–55) was built about 1474. Here is a Wesleyan chapel. The charities are small, and the school has a slight endowment. On Reeds Mere there is a floating island of nearly 2 ac. Thornycroft Hall is a seat.

Side, pa. on the Cotswolds, Mid Gloucs., 7½ N.W. of Cirencester: ac. 609; soil in some places very shallow, consisting of stonebrash and gravel, with a rocky subsoil. The church of St. Mary is Norm. and E. Eng., and has a saddle-backed tower. There is a small charity.

Sidestrand, coast pa. and vil., N. Norf., 3 S.E. of Cromer; ac. 445; soil light heath, overlying brick-earth and gravel. The church of St. Michael is in E. Eng. style, constructed in part with the materials of the old church, and contains monuments to the Hoare family. The tower of the old church still stands near the edge of the cliff, over which part of the churchyard wall has fallen, owing to the slipping-down of the face of the cliff.

Sidford, ha., pa. of and 1 S. from Sidbury (q.v.), S.E. Dev. Here is a chapel-of-ease (1865) and a Wesleyan chapel.

Sidlaw Hills, range of hills (1,399 ft.) running from Kinnoul Hill, in E. Perths., to the coast at Redhead, E. Forfs., and Stonehaven, E. Kincs., Sc. They are mainly formed of Old Red Sandstone.

Sidlesham, large pa. and vil., S.W. Sussex, 5 S. of Chichester, on the road to Selsea; ac. 4,187; soil loam, overlying clay. The church of St. Mary (restored 1890) is E. Eng. There is a charity of £145 yearly, applied to the support of five poor widows and to apprenticing fatherless children.

Sidley Green, ha., pa. of Bexhill (q.v.), S.E. Sussex, 4 N.W. of St. Leonards.

Sidlow Bridge, eccl. pa. on the Mole, pas. of Buckland, Charlwood, Horley, Leigh, and Reigate (q.v.), S.E. Surrey, 2½ S. of Reigate. Emmanuel Church is in E. Eng. style. Hartswood is a seat.

Sidmonton. [SYDMONTON.]

Sidmouth, pa., mkt. to., and fashionable watering-place at the mouth of the Sid, S. Dev., 15 E.S.E. of Exeter; ac. 1,540 and 60 water. The to. is pleasantly situated at the lower end of a beautiful vale, and is sheltered on the east, west, and north by ranges of hills, which are cultivated to their summits. On the south it commands an extensive view of the sea, and lies at the bottom of a deep and almost semicircular hollow on the coast, sometimes called the "Western Bay." The picturesque scenery of the neighbourhood and the facilities afforded for sea-bathing have rendered this a fashionable and much-frequented watering-place. There are excellent hotels, inns, and boarding-houses, an assembly and ball-room, subscription reading-rooms, and circulating libraries. S. was formerly a place of great importance, and in the 13th cent. was a borough governed by a portreeve. Long subsequent to that period it had an important fishery and a good harbour, but the latter does not now exist. The sea-wall affords an agreeable promenade of nearly ½ mile in length. S. gives the title of Viscount to the Addington family. The church of St. Nicholas, originally Perp., was rebuilt (with the exception of the tower) in 1860; the stained west window was presented by Queen Victoria in 1866, as a memorial to her father, the Duke of Kent, who died here Jan. 23, 1820. The church of the eccl. pa. of All Saints is in E. Eng. style; there are also places of worship for various bodies of Nonconformists and a Catholic convent. The market-house dates from 1843; the lower part is used as a market and the upper room for public meetings. Markets are held on Thursday and Saturday, and fairs for cattle on Easter Monday and the third Monday in September. The Manor Hall is a concert hall and theatre. The Mechanics' Hall has a good reading-room and a lending library. There are fine cricket and tennis grounds, and golf links have been recently laid out. The charities, amounting to £200 yearly, are distributed to the schools for educating poor children, and to poor householders not receiving parish relief. There is a cottage hospital and a dispensary. Woolbrook Glen, near the western extremity of the town, was in 1820 the residence of the Duke and Duchess of Kent and the Princess Victoria. The neighbourhood is studded with numerous villa residences.

Sidon Hill, eminence (940 ft.), N. Hants, in Highclere Park, is the highest ground in the co. of Hants. It is covered with timber, and commands fine views.

13 N.E. of Hull; ac. of pa. 6,327, of tp. 1,031; soil loam and clay, overlying clay. The church of St. Lawrence (repaired 1848) is E. Eng.; there are inscriptions to the Constable family, and a monument to John Garnett, Bishop of Clogher (d. 1782); fragments of the chantry chapel remain in the churchyard. There is a small charity, and the school has an endowment. S. Lodge is a seat.

Sighill. [SEDGHILL.]

Signet, pl., pa. of and 1 W. from Burford (q.v.), W. Oxon. [UPTON AND SIGNET.]

Sigston, pa. and tp., N.R. Yorks., 4 E. of Northallerton; ac. of pa. 5,473, of tp. 1,242; soil and subsoil clay. The church of St. Lawrence (restored 1890) is Norm. and later; the chancel retains a piscina, and some portions of ancient glass remain in the north aisle, representing the arms of the families of Wassand, Colville, and Sigston.

Silbury Hill, a large mound in the Kennet valley, pa. of Avebury (q.v.), N. Wilts., about 7 W. of Marlborough. Its purpose is unknown; some authorities maintain that it was sepulchral, like so many of the tumuli scattered over the neighbouring downs, while others regard it as memorial. About 1847 an excavation was made through its side, on the original level, to the centre, but nothing whatever was found. Many years later excavations were made from the top, and in the surface mould pieces of pottery, Roman nails, and metal parts of harness, etc., were found, but nothing to uphold the theory that it was a burial mound. In the Welsh triads it is mentioned as Moel Efwr (= "the Mount of Assemblies"), and was one of the three great works of Britain.

Silchester, pa. and vil., N. Hants, 8 N.W. of Basingstoke; ac. 1,945; soil clay and gravel, overlying clay. The church of St. Mary (restored 1878) is Norm. and E. Eng.; the chancel is divided from the nave by a finely-carved oak screen; there are two piscinæ—one in the south aisle and one in the chancel. Here is a Primitive Methodist chapel. Hyde's charity consists of £14, distributed in money twice yearly. Within the pa. are the ruins of the Roman city of Calleva; these remains are 1¼ mile in circumference. The walls on the south-east are the most perfect, being in some places nearly 12 ft. high. At the present time the only buildings within its boundaries are a farmhouse with its appurtenances, and a small but ancient pa. church, the remainder being divided into five fields, the surface of which, in dry weather, points out plainly the direction of the ancient streets. Extensive excavations, disclosing the remains of the ancient city, have been carried out, and the relics discovered are deposited in the museum at Reading. Numerous wells have been found, and a number of stone hand-mills supposed to have been used for grinding dyes, twelve buildings apparently devoted to this industry, together with twenty-one stone furnaces, also used in the trade. An old earthenware pot has been found containing upwards of 250 silver denarii, ranging in date from Mark Antony (B.C. 40) to Severus (A.D. 211), besides many objects in gold, bronze metal, bone, and glass, much pottery, and a fine slab of Purbeck marble. S. Hall stands in its own grounds of about 90 ac., which are undulating and tastefully laid out, commanding park-like views.

THE FIRST CHRISTIAN CHURCH, SILCHESTER.

Silian, pa., E. Cardigs., 2 N. of Aberayron; ac. 2,179; soil various. The church of St. Sulien is a plain modern edifice, restored 1873. The Baptists have a chapel.

Silkstone, pa., tp., and vil., W.R. Yorks.; ac. of pa. 13,598, of tp. 1,497; soil clay and loam, overlying sandstone. In this pa. is the bor. of Barnsley (q.v.), from which the vil. of S., comprising one long street, is 4 W. The church of All Saints was originally cruciform; the whole structure is embattled and surrounded by buttresses of very Late Dec. work, with exceedingly quaint gargoyles. On the north side of the chancel is a Norm. arch; on the south side a Perp. arcade opens into a chapel formerly belonging to the Wentworth family, of Bretton Hall, in which are two altar-tombs of marble, with recumbent effigies, to Sir Thomas Wentworth (d. 1675) and to Grace (Popeley) his widow. The roofs of nave and aisles afford excellent examples of Perp. timber work, and there is a richly-carved rood-screen of oak of the same period. In the church is a memorial to Joseph Bramah (born here 1749, d. 1814), the mechanician and inventor of the lock named after him. In the churchyard is a monument recording the names of twenty-six persons drowned in 1838 by a sudden irruption of water into a coalpit. The Reformed Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have chapels. Some small charities (about £12) are distributed among the poor. Coal of excellent quality abounds in the pa., and there are extensive collieries, some of which have a special interest in connection with the Coal Strike Riots of 1893. It was in the yard here represented that the mob, collected from three other districts, first assembled and commenced their work of destruction; from that time in August till the end of the strike the colliery had to be guarded day and night by police, while a company of soldiers was quartered in the neighbourhood. Nobletthorpe Hall, a rectangular building in Classic style, in a park of 52 ac., is a seat.

Silksworth, eccl. pa., tp., and vil., pa. of Bishop Wearmouth (q.v.), N.E. Dur., 3 S. of Sunderland; ac. 1,988. The church of St. Matthew was erected 1871, in E. Eng. style. There are Wesleyan Methodist and Primitive Methodist chapels, and a lay mission room. S. Hall and S. House are seats.

Silk Willoughby, or Silkby-cum-Willoughby, pa., S. Lincs., 2 S. of Sleaford; ac. 2,505; soil light loam and clay, overlying blue clay. The church of St. Denis (chancel rebuilt 1878) is Norm., Late Dec., and Perp.; with the exception of the chancel, which is Perp., the building belongs mainly to the Late Dec. period. There are groined sedilia, a piscina, and a very good E. Perp. traceried rood-screen; the east end of the south aisle has an aumbry, and on the floor a slab with three incised roundels. In the nave are some excellent oak benches with panelled ends and poppy heads. In rebuilding the chancel, fragments of the tomb of William Armyn (1361) were found; the font is a beautiful piece of Norm. work. There is a small charity. At the junction of Silkby and Willoughby stands an ancient cross. The Manor House, once a seat, is now a farmhouse.

Sillan, Lough, E. co. Cav., Ir., about ½ N.W. of Shercock. It is nearly 2 miles long by about ½ mile broad.

Sillees, river, Mid co. Fermanagh, Ir., issues from Lough Bunnahone, and flows in a S. and S.E. direction for about 15 miles to the Erne, which it joins 1 mile below Enniskillen. Derrygonnelly is on its banks.

Sillery Bank, or Celery Bank, shoal in Lynmouth Bay, off north-east coast of Dev., 1 E. by N. of Lynton.

Silloth, seaport and watering-place, pa. of Holme Cultram (q.v.), N.W. Cumb., 21 W. of Carlisle. Till 1837 S. consisted of a few scattered houses, but since the opening of the railway and the formation of docks and a harbour it has become the port of Carlisle. There is steam communication daily with Liverpool, and twice a week with Dublin. A fair amount of trade is done with home and foreign ports. S. has two eccl. pas. with modern churches, and places of worship for various bodies of Non-conformists. The climate is salubrious, and on this account S. is a favourite seaside resort. There are good golf links, and the hotels have tennis grounds.

Silpho, tp., pa. of and 1 N. from Hackness (q.v.), N.R. Yorks.; ac. 1,447.

Silsden, eccl. pa., tp., and vil., pa. of Kildwick (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., 4 N. of Keighley; ac. 6,950. The church of St. James (restored and enlarged 1876) is in Dec. style. There are Wesleyan, Primitive Methodist, and Free Methodist chapels. Nail-making is carried on extensively. Fairs are held here on the first Tuesday after April 23 and the first Tuesday after September 16.

Silsoe, eccl. pa., tp., and vil., pa. of Flitton (q.v.), S. Beds., 4 S.E. of Ampthill; ac. 2,158. The church of St. James (rebuilt 1831) is of local red sandstone. A cattle fair is held here on May 13. Wrest Park is a seat; the mansion, situated in a fine domain, is in Italian style.

Silton, pa. and vil. on the Stour, N. Dors., on the Somerset border of the co., 7 N.W. of Shaftesbury; ac. 1,257; soil loam, overlying marl. The church of St. Nicholas is Gothic, and contains a fine monument of Judge Wyndham, a Justice of the Common Pleas in the reign of Charles II.

Silton, Nether, tp., pa. of Leake (q.v.), N.R. Yorks., 8 E. of Northallerton; ac. 1,480. The church of All Saints (annexed to Leake) was restored 1878. The altar-rails formerly belonged to the old Dreadnought training-ship. The Hall is a seat.

Silton, Over, pa. and tp. on the Hambleton Hills, N.R. Yorks., 8 N. of Thirsk; ac. of pa. 3,977, of tp. 1,235; soil clay and gravel, overlying stone. The church of St. Mary is E. Eng., with some remains of Norm. work. The south entrance has a good Norm. arch with zigzag mouldings; there is a finely-carved screen of black oak, and ancient benches of the same material; on the oak roof of the nave are the arms of Neville and Scrope, Archbishops of York in the 14th cent.

Silverdale (1), eccl. pa., tp., and vil. on Morecambe Bay, pa. of Warton (q.v.), N. Lancs., 11 N.N.W. of Lancaster; ac. 1,168. The church of St. John was built 1886, in Dec. style, in place of a previous building, the old church being used as a mortuary chapel. Here is a Wesleyan Methodist chapel. The charities are small. There are lime works and stone quarries, and valuable ores are found in the neighbourhood.

Silverdale (2), eccl. pa. and vil., pas. of Keele, Trentham, and Wolstanton (q.v.), N.W. Staffs., about 1½ W. of Newcastle-under-Lyme. The church of St. Luke is in Gothic style, and there are places of worship for various Nonconformist bodies. The Conservative Club (1876) comprises reading and billiard rooms. Here are extensive iron and coal works.

Silverhill (1), vil., pa. of Walwyns Castle (q.v.), S.W. Pembs., 4 N.W. of Milford.

Silverhill (2), mountain (1,967 ft.), W. co. Don., Ir., about 9 N.W. of Donegal.

Silver How, hill (about 1,300 ft.), S. Westmd., overlooking Grasmere Lake. It is easy of ascent, and commands a delightful view.

Silverley. [ASHLEY-CUM-SILVERLEY.]

Silvermines, vil., pa. of Kilmore (q.v.), N. co. Tip., Ir., 5 N. of Nenagh. It lies to the north of the S. Mountains, from which it takes its name.

Silvermines Mountains, range of hills (2,278 ft.), N. co. Tip., Ir., near Nenagh. They were in the 17th cent. worked for silver and lead, but the works were destroyed in the rebellion of 1641; of recent years they have again been worked.

Silver River, N. K. Co., Ir., rises in a small lough nearly 5 N.E. of Tullamore, and flows in a W. direction for about 10 miles to the Clodiagh, which it joins near the Rahan Roman Catholic college.

Silverstone, pa. and vil., S. Northants, 4 S.W. of Towcester; ac. 1,818; soil clay, overlying stone. The church of St. Michael (restored 1884) is in E. Eng. style. There is a Wesleyan chapel. The vil., on account of its proximity to the extensive forest of Whittlebury, has become the centre of a flourishing trade in timber. A charity of £1 yearly, derived from land, is for distribution to the poor; there is a further benefaction producing £22 yearly.

Silverton, pa. and vil. near the Exe and Culme, Mid Dev., 8 N.E. of Exeter; ac. 4,714; soil loamy, overlying gravel. The church of St. Mary is Perp. In the churchyard are the mutilated remains of a cross. There is a Wesleyan Reform chapel. The charities amount to £125 yearly. The paper mills afford employment for about 170 persons. Two fairs are held yearly—on the second Thursday in February and the first Thursday in July. S. Park is a seat.

Silvertown, eccl. pa., pa. of West Ham, E. London, S.W. Essex, about 4 E. of St. Paul's. The church of St. Mark (1863) is in Dec. style. There are Roman Catholic, Presbyterian, and Baptist chapels. The dis. takes its name from some extensive india-rubber, gutta-percha, and telegraph works originally founded by the firm of Silver. Sugar-refining is also carried on, and chemicals, soap, and jam are manufactured. The pa. embraces a considerable portion of the Victoria Docks, which were constructed 1851–56, and extend over 600 ac. (including a water area of 100 ac.), and the Royal Albert Dock (1880), 615 ac. in extent, with a water area of about 185 ac.

of the warden of Tynedale. In the wooded gorge of Tecket, about 1 W. of the vil., is a fine waterfall and a curious grotto. The ancient holy well of St. Mungo, to whom it is supposed the church was once dedicated, lies in the rector's dene. At Carraburgh, in this pa., is the site of the Roman station Procolitia. In 1876, about 100 yds. south of the Roman wall, several underground structures, originally built as wells, were discovered; and in these were found a great variety of articles dating, in part, from A.D. 140. The farm of Tecket belongs to the trustees of Giles Heron's charity (yearly value £170) for educational purposes and distribution in money; the proceeds of another charity are appropriated to an almshouse for aged women and doles to the sick poor of the pa. Nunwick Hall and Park End are seats.

Simonsbath, vil., pa. of Exmoor (q.v.), W. Somerset, about 15 N.W. of Dulverton.

Simon's Fell, mountain (2,088 ft.), W.R. Yorks., close to Ingleborough, about 8 N.W. of Settle.

Simonside, hill (about 1,000 ft.), pa. of Rothbury (q.v.), Mid Northumb., about 3 S.W. of Rothbury.

Simon's Seat, mountain (1,593 ft.), pa. of and about 7 N.E. from Skipton (q.v.), W.R. Yorks.

Simonstone (1), tp., pa. of Whalley (q.v.), N.E. Lancs., 4½ N.W. of Burnley; ac. 1,026. Huntroyde Hall and S. Hall are seats.

Simonstone (2), ha., pa. of Aysgarth (q.v.), N.R. Yorks., about 1 N. of Hawes.

Simonswood, tp., pa. of Walton-on-the-Hill (q.v.), S.W. Lancs., 6 S. of Ormskirk; ac. 2,626.

Simon Weir, pa., S.E. Lincs., about 3 S.W. of Kirton-in-Holland; ac. 4.

Simpson, pa., tp., and vil., N. Bucks. The pa. contains part of the to. of Fenny Stratford (q.v.), from which it extends northwards; ac. 1,307; soil light, overlying clay and gravel. The church of St. Thomas (restored 1873) is Perp. and Dec., and contains monuments to the Hanmer family. Here is a Wesleyan chapel. A charity of about £15 a year is distributed in coals to the poor.

Sinclair's Bay, on the east coast of Caithness., Sc., is about 5 miles across, and has on its south shores Castle Sinclair and Girnigo Castle, while on the north extremity is Castle Keiss.

Sinclairstown, ha., pa. of and nearly 5 S.W. from Ochiltree (q.v.), Mid Ayrs., Sc.

Sinclairtown, vil. with railway station, pa. of Dysart (q.v.), S. Fifes., Sc., within the limits of Kirkcaldy royal burgh. Here are three earthenware manufactories.

Sinderby, tp. and vil., pa. of Pickhill (q.v.), N.R. Yorks., 6 W. of Thirsk; ac. 542. Here is a Wesleyan chapel.

Sinderhope, ha., pa. of Allendale (q.v.), S. Northumb., about 10 S.W. of Hexham. There is a Primitive Methodist chapel.

Sinderland, ha., pa. of Dunham Massey (q.v.), N. Ches., 2 W.N.W. of Altrincham. The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel. Market-gardening is carried on here to a great extent.

Singleton (1), large pa. in a valley of the Downs, S.W. Sussex, 6 N.E. of Chichester, on the road to Midhurst; ac. 4,063; soil chalky, overlying chalk. The church (supposed to have been originally dedicated to St. John the Evangelist) is chiefly Perp. There was anciently a rood-loft over the chancel, of which only the stone staircase, now leading to the pulpit, remains. In the church is a tablet with a quaint inscription to Thomas Johnson, huntsman to the Duke of Richmond (d. 1744). In 1628 Henry Smith, merchant, of Wandsworth, and alderman of London, left (by will) £70 yearly, out of which about ten old people received 2s. 6d. a week, the balance being distributed in food and clothing. Molecombe House is a seat. Goodwood race-stand is in this pa. On the boundary of the pa., towards East Lavant, rises the Trundle Hill (about 900 ft.), upon which are traces of an extensive circular encampment of British origin, occupied during the Civil War in 1645 by 1,000 club men, who obstructed the levying of soldiers and money for the Parliament, and were guilty of "divers outrageous proceedings."

Singleton (2). [Singleton, Great.]

Singleton, Great, eccl. pa., tp. (Singleton), and vil. on the Wyre, pa. of Kirkham (q.v.), N.W. Lancs., 6 E. of Blackpool; ac. 2,923. The church of St. Anne was built 1861, in Gothic style. In the chancel is an ancient chair bearing the name of John Milton and the date 1671. S. Park is a seat.

Singlewell, ha., pas. of Ifield and Northfleet (q.v.), N.W. Kent, about 1¼ S. of Gravesend.

Sinnington, pa., tp., and vil., N.R. Yorks.; ac. of pa. 3,063, of tp. 2,174; soil chiefly strong clay, overlying limestone rock. The church of All Saints, originally Norm., has been extensively modernised in a very debased manner. The Norm. south and west doorways, however, remain in a nearly perfect condition, but all the original windows have been replaced by square ones. The interior is partially seated with pews, apparently of Jacobean date, and having some carving; the chancel-arch has been cut away. Built into the exterior walls are a number of fragments of very early carved work; the south wall contains two heads of crosses, one covered with bold scroll moulding and interlaced work, the other bearing a rude figure of Our Lord with extended arms and traces of a corona over the head, and of a dragon or serpent below the arms. At the east end are two other bits of carving, and on the north side (now forming part of a window jamb) is part of the head of a coffin-slab of later date, and in the wall two other remnants, one exhibiting bold interlaced ornament. Close to the church, on the north-east, is a large rectangular E. Eng. building, with inserted Perp. windows. The interior, used as a barn, contains the framework of an oak screen, still in situ, and portions of Norm. zigzag work are built into the walls of the adjoining farm buildings. On the Green, in the centre of the vil., is the school, in Gothic style. Near it stands the maypole, about 70 ft. in height. The Wesleyans have a chapel. There are some almshouses in the pa. of Thornton Dale for old people of this pa. S. Hall is a seat.

Sinodun Hill, eminence, Mid Berks., about 1 N.W. of Wallingford, almost covered with earthworks.

Sion Mills, vil. on the Mourne, pa. of Urney (q.v.), N. co. Tyr., Ir., 3 S. of Strabane. There is a Protestant church (chapel-of-ease); also a Presbyterian church and national schools, and an Institute. The vil. is chiefly inhabited by workpeople employed in a large flax-spinning mill, which was established here in 1835 and enlarged in 1888.

Sipson, or Shepiston, ha., pa. of and 1 E. from Harmondsworth (q.v.), W. Middx.

Sipthorpe Place, ha., pa. of East Markham (q.v.), N. Notts., 3 W. of Tuxford.

Sirhowy (1), vil. on the Sirhowy, pa. of Bedwelty (q.v.), N.W. Mon., near the Brecons. border, ½ N. of Tredegar. There are extensive ironworks.

Sirhowy (2), river, rises in the pa. of Llangynidr, S.E. Brecons., and, soon entering Mon., flows S. by E. through that co. to a distance of 15 miles from its source, and then 3 miles to the Ebwy at Risca. The valley, which runs parallel to that of the Ebwy, between two lofty mountain ridges, presents the same wild and picturesque character. The stream is now fringed by innumerable ironworks, owing to the abundance of iron and coal in the neighbourhood.

Sisland, pa. and vil., S. Norf., 1¼ W. of Loddon; ac. 466; soil light mixed, overlying sand, gravel, and clay. The church of St. Mary is a small Norm. edifice, with thatched roof and a square wooden tower; adjoining are some ruins of a chapel formerly attached to the church.

Sissinghurst, eccl. pa. and vil., pa. of Cranbrook (q.v.), Mid Kent, 4½ S. of Staplehurst. The church of the Holy Trinity dates from 1838. There is a Wesleyan chapel. S. Castle and S. Place are seats. About 1 E. from the first-named are the ruins of an older castle, once the residence of Sir John Baker, Privy Councillor to Henry VIII. and Queen Mary.

Siston, pa. and vil., S.W. Gloucs., 6 N.E. of Bristol; ac. 1,827; soil loamy, overlying lias rock and coal. The church of St. Anne is chiefly E. Eng., but possesses a Norm. doorway; the leaden font is Norm. S. Court, an Elizabethan mansion, is a seat.

Sithney, pa. and vil., S.W. Cornw., situated near the highroad from Penzance to Helston, from which it is 2 N.W.; ac. 5,898; soil partly loamy and sandy, subsoil marl, resting on granite. The church of St. Sithney, a building of granite, is E. Eng.; there are mural monuments to Richard Hoblyn and Anne (Carew) his wife (1692); John Arundel (1671); and also a monumental inscription to John Oliver, of Trevarno. Some fragments remain of a brass to Roger Trewythynnyk, one of the King's Justices (c. 1410); these include the inscription and portions of a stepped floriated cross, with the legend "Ihu mercy" on each limb; the Penrose arms are inserted in the window. The Wesleyans and Free Methodists have chapels. Here is a reservoir of the Helston Waterworks Company. A small charity of £2 15s. yearly is for poor widows. Lomax silver-lead mine is in this pa., and there are traces of ancient earthworks, a logan-stone, and a fallen cromlech. Trevarno, a mansion of considerable antiquity with modern additions, is a seat; the grounds include gardens, pasture, and wood, and contain a tropical garden. Some historic interest attaches to the house from the fact that Alexander Pope visited here.

Sittaford Tor, eminence (1,764 ft.) on Dartmoor, S. Dev., about 4½ S.W. of Chagford. It has a square rocking-stone.

Sittingbourne, pa., seaport, and mkt. to., N. Kent, 9 S.E. of Rochester; ac. 1,004 and 19 water. S. principally consists of one long street, and is approached on the north side by a navigable creek of the Swale, leading up to the quay, from which corn, wool, bricks, and large quantities of material for the repair of the metropolitan roads are exported. There is a level wide road through the marshes to Sheerness. The to. received from Elizabeth two charters, by which it was incorporated and acquired the right of sending representatives to Parliament, as well as that of holding a weekly market and two fairs. The market, after being discontinued for many years, has been revived; a corn market is held on Friday in the town hall, and cattle sales take place every Monday. The church of St. Michael (restored 1873) is of the E. Eng. and later periods, and consists of chancel with north (or Bayford) and south (or Chilton) chapel, nave of five bays, with aisles, south transept (attached to the Fulston estate), and south porch with groined roof and busts of Edward I. and Queen Eleanor. The church formerly contained many fine windows, as well as monuments to members of the Cromer, Lushington, and Bannister families; but a serious fire in July, 1762, besides doing much other structural damage, destroyed the whole of these except a very fine "cross bones" window in the Chilton chapel and an effigy of a lady reclining under a canopy in the north wall of the Bayford chapel. The octagonal font bears the arms of Archbishop Arundel (1396–1414), in whose time it was placed in the church. The register contains some curious entries made by Mr. Hurst, who was vicar from 1562; and, amongst others, of three marriages celebrated during the Commonwealth period before Sir Michael Lovesey, Knight, a magistrate and one of the members of Parliament who signed King Charles's death warrant. The church of the eccl. pa. of Holy Trinity is in E. Eng. style. The to. has a Catholic chapel, and places of worship for various Nonconformist bodies. The town hall (1859) was built for a corn exchange. The free library was established in 1888; the Masonic Hall dates from 1889, and the Foresters' Hall from 1892. The trade here is derived chiefly from the manufacture and transit of bricks and cement (nearly 6,000 hands being employed in these two industries), the market, the supply of the neighbouring district, the shipping of corn, and import of coals. There are also corn mills. The poor have £4 10s. yearly, arising from land; and five seames (10 bushels) of boiling peas, in value about £12, are given yearly by the churchwardens to the poor on Christmas Day. A public recreation ground of 10 ac. was laid out in 1880.

Six Ashes, ha., pa. of Bobbington (q.v.), S. Staffs., on the borders of Salop, 6 S.E. of Bridgnorth. There is a Primitive Methodist chapel.

Sixhills, pa., N. Lincs., 4½ E. of Market Rasen, on the road to Wragby; ac. 1,941; soil strong clay and sand, overlying sand. The church of All Saints was rebuilt in 1869, in E. Eng. style. A Gilbertine priory was founded here in the reign of Stephen; at the dissolution it was granted to the Heneage family.

Six Hills, pl., pa. of Dalby-on-the-Wolds (q.v.), N. Leics., 5 E. of Loughborough. It is near the Fossway, and here are many barrows and high hills.

Skeffington, pa. and pleasant vil., E. Leics., 10 E. by S. of Leicester, on the road to Uppingham; ac. 2,132; soil clay and gravel, overlying clay. The church of St. Thomas à Becket (restored 1860) is Norm. and E. Eng.; the chancel retains a piscina, and the rood-loft remains in a good state of preservation. The monuments include several to the Skeffingtons, created baronets in 1627, and afterwards Barons Loughneagh and Viscounts Massareene and Ferrard. S. Hall, a large mansion, is a seat.

Skeffling, pa. and vil. on the Humber, E.R. Yorks., 14 S.E. of Hedon; ac. 1,834; soil mixed, overlying clay and marl. The church of St. Helen is E. Eng.; it contains a stone to the Baylith family (dated 1554), and a tablet to Edward and Elizabeth Bee (both d. 1762). There is a Wesleyan Methodist chapel, and a small charity.

Skegby (1), pa. and vil., Notts., 2½ N.W. of Sutton-in-Ashfield; ac. 1,456; soil sandy, overlying limestone (which is quarried). The church (dedication unknown) is Norm., and was formerly a chapel-of-ease to Mansfield; it retains a piscina and two ancient stone effigies. A charity of about £6 a year is divided between the poor and the church Sunday school (girls).

Protestant and Evangelical church. The national school has an endowment. The Pleasure Gardens, near the North Parade, are about 6 ac. in extent; and there are cricket and lawn tennis grounds near the station, and adjoining, on the south side, are the Camp and Recreation Grounds, in which several volunteer regiments usually encamp every summer. The Marine Gardens extend from the pier to the top of Lumley Road. There are hotels (fitted with warm, cold, and shower baths), numerous lodging-houses, and public baths. The pier, which has a large saloon at the end, was opened in 1881. Here are convalescent homes for men, women, and children, and coastguard and lifeboat stations. S. has of late years become a popular place of resort for the inhabitants of the Midland Counties, and is largely visited by invalids; the sands are firm and broad (extending for miles north and south of the town) and the bathing safe. The "mirage"—or "sod bank," as the fishermen call it—may be seen on the sea here in calm weather; the phosphorescence of the sea is very beautiful, and may be frequently observed in the summer.

Skeir Maoile. [IRON ROCK.]

Skelbrooke, eccl. pa. and tp., pa. of Kirkby South (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., 7 N.W. of Doncaster; ac. 1,147. The church of St. Michael (restored 1872) is Norm. A chapel on the north side of the nave was discovered during restoration, and now contains the marble mausoleum of the Neville family; on the south side of the chancel are the ancient steps leading to what was once the rood-loft. S. Hall is a seat.

Skeldale, valley traversed by the Skell Beck (q.v.), W.R. Yorks.

Skelden, or Skelding, tp., pa. of Winksley-with-Grantley (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., 6½ W. of Ripon; ac. 990.

Skelfleet Drain, artificial cut in connection with the Humber Navigation, E.R. Yorks., 2½ W. of South Cave.

Skell Beck, stream, W.R. Yorks., rises about 2 N. of Pateley Bridge, and flows E., S.E., and N.E., joining the Ure at Ripon after a course of 10 miles. The beck passes Skelden, Grantley Hall, and the sulphur spring of Aldfield (which is romantically situated), and traverses the picturesque grounds of Studley Royal.

Skelligs, The, two rocks off the south coast of co. Kerry, Ir., about 10 S.W. of Valentia. The larger, known as the Great Skellig, rises to 714 ft. above the sea, and contains on its summit the ruins of the monastery of St. Finian and the station of St. Michael, to which devotees annually make a pilgrimage to perform a difficult penance, part of which consists in ascending a lofty rock known as St. Michael's Pillar. On this rock are two lighthouses, with lights visible for 25 and 18 miles respectively. Here is a breeding-place of the gannet.

Skellingthorpe, pa. and vil., W. Lincs., 6 W. of Lincoln; ac. 6,220; soil light sandy, overlying gravel and fenland. The church of St. Lawrence (rebuilt 1855) is E. Eng. Here are Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist chapels. Hartsholme Hall and S. Hall are seats.

Skellow, tp., pa. of Owston (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., 5½ N.W. of Doncaster; ac. 932. A part of Skellow Grange and Robin Hood's Well are in this tp.

Skelly Nab, promontory on the west side of Ullswater Lake, W. Westmd., almost at the midmost point of the lake, opposite Howtown.

Skelmanthorpe, tp. and large vil., pas. of Elmley and High Hoyland (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., 8 S.E. of Huddersfield; ac. 1,185. Various Nonconformist bodies have chapels here. The charities amount to about £12 yearly, of which one-half is devoted to buying prizes for the school. The fancy woollen trade is carried on to a considerable extent.

Skelmersdale, eccl. pa. and tp., pa. of and 4 E.S.E. from Ormskirk (q.v.), S.W. Lancs.; ac. 1,941. The church of St. Paul dates from the end of the 18th cent. S. has also a mission church and a Catholic church (both in E. Eng. style) and Nonconformist places of worship. The poor have £11 10s. distributed yearly in bread. There are some extensive collieries, and brick-making is carried on. S. gives the title of Baron to the Bootle-Wilbraham family.

Skelmorlie, q.s. pa., vil., and watering-place, on the Firth of Clyde, pa. of and 4½ N. by W. from Largs (q.v.), N. Ayrs., Sc. The q.s. pa. is partly in Inverkip pa., Renfs. S. consists of two portions; Lower S. forming a retired but fashionable watering-place with many handsome villas, whilst Upper S. is inhabited mainly by labourers. The Established church was rebuilt 1895, and has a tower of 100 ft. There is also a United Presbyterian church. The hydropathic establishment, in Scottish Baronial style (built 1868 and enlarged 1875), commands a very fine view. Knock Castle, the ancient seat of the Frasers, is an interesting ruin. S. Castle, a short distance inland, has portions dating from 1502.

Skelsmergh, eccl. pa. and tp., pa. of and 4 S.E. from Kendal (q.v.), S. Westmd.; ac. 2,093. The church of St. John the Baptist (1871) is in E. Eng. style. The Catholic chapel at Dodding Green originated in 1723, when Dodding Green House was left with its chapel and sufficient land for the maintenance of a resident priest; the house probably dates from before 1682. S. Hall, now occupied as a farmhouse, was at an early period a seat, the oldest portion (the remains of a rectangular tower) being erected towards the close of the 14th cent.; the rest of the house mainly comprises a wing of two floors built on to the south-east face of the tower in the 16th cent., and added to probably about 1630. Gilthwaiterigg Manor House, now a farmhouse, was originally an Elizabethan seat.

Skelton (1), or Skelton-in-Cleveland, pa., tp., and vil., N.R. Yorks., 5 S.E. of Redcar; ac. of pa. 5,333, of tp. 4,263; soil strong clay, overlying clay and ironstone. The church of All Saints, a small and plain building of stone, was rebuilt in 1785, and contains a memorial to Robert Trotter, of S. Castle (1611). The original edifice, founded by Adam de Skelton, dates from 1323, and was subsequently attached to the priory of Guisborough by Robert de Brus. There are Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist chapels. The charities amount to about £25 yearly, which are distributed twice during the year. Here was formerly a castle, built about the year 1140 by Robert de Brus, a Norman baron who accompanied William the Conqueror to England; it was rebuilt in 1794. Rigwood and Rushpool Hall are also seats.

Skelton (2), pa., tp. (extending into the pa. of Overton), and vil. in a vale near the Ouse, N.R.Yorks., 4 N.W. of York; ac. of pa. 704, of tp. 2,470; soil strong clay, overlying gravel and sand. The church of All Saints, situated on rising ground at the north of the vil., is E. Eng.; it is, however, usually called St. Peter's, from a tradition prevalent in the pa. that it was built with the stones that remained after the south transept of York Minster was finished. Near the communion table is an ancient piscina of great beauty and in excellent preservation; both the chapels retain a piscina. S. Manor, dating from the time of the Stuarts, contains some fine oak carving. Fairfield House, S. Grange, and S. Hall are also seats.

Skelton (3), pa. and vil., Mid Cumb., 6½ N.W. of Penrith; ac. 7,415; soil firm but cold, overlying clay. The church of St. Michael (restored 1879) is an ancient edifice of stone, containing several 18th-cent. marble monuments. There are some small charities. Ellonby Hall and Scales Hall, once seats, are now occupied as farmhouses. Hardrigg Hall is a seat.

Skelton (4), tp. and vil. on the Ouse, pa. of and 2 S.E. from Howden (q.v.), E.R. Yorks.; ac. 1,544. There is a Wesleyan chapel. Sand Hall is a seat.

Skelton (5), or Skelton-on-Ure, tp. and vil., pa. of and 4½ miles from Ripon, W.R. Yorks.; ac. 296.

Skelton-with-Newby, eccl. pa., pa. of and 4 S.E. from Ripon (q.v.), W.R. Yorks. The chapel of St. Helen (1811) was erected on the site of a more ancient building. The church of Christ the Consoler (1871–72) was built as a memorial to Mr. Vyner, who was murdered by brigands in Greece (1870). Here is a Wesleyan chapel.

Skelwith, ha., pa. of and 4 N. from Hawkshead (q.v.), N. Lancs., on the border of Westmd. S. Fold is a seat. [HAWKSHEAD AND MONK CONISTON WITH SKELWITH.]

Skelwith Brow, eminence (925 ft.), N. Lancs., about 4 N.W. of Hawkshead.

Skelwith Force, waterfall close to Skelwith (q.v.), N. Lancs. It is a small fall, the water descending about 15 ft. only; after wet weather the volume of water is considerable.

Skendleby, pa. and vil., E. Lincs., 4 N.E. of Spilsby; ac. 1,524; soil clay, overlying limestone. The church of St. Peter (restored 1875), appropriated to the abbey of Bardney by Gilbert de Gaunt before 1094, is E. Eng.; the chancel retains a piscina. The font is octangular, and consists of a moulded basin supported on a panelled pedestal, surrounded with buttresses, and resting on a graduated base; in the chancel are the arms of the Raffords, and near the porch is an altar-tomb to the family of Fowler. There are monuments to the Brackenbury, Pilkington, and Thory families. The Wesleyans have a chapel. S. Hall is a seat.

Skene, pa. and ha., N.E. Abers., Sc., 8 W. of Aberdeen; ac. 10,246. There is an extensive spinning and carding mill, which employs a large number of persons. A fair is held on the Tuesday before Easter. S. House is a seat.

Skene, Loch, a wild and solitary loch under Loch Craig Head, pa. of and 11 N.E. from Moffat (q.v.). N. Dumfs., Sc. It is about 1,700 ft. above the sea-level, and is about ¾ mile long by ¼ mile broad. Trout are plentiful.

Skenfrith, pa. and vil. on the Monnow, N.E. Mon., 7 N.N.W. of Monmouth; ac. 4,885; soil loam, overlying clay. The church of St. Bridget is E. Eng. and Perp., and contains an ancient tomb dated 1557. There are Wesleyan, Baptist, and Roman Catholic chapels. A reading-room was opened in 1888. Of S. Castle, a pre-Norman building, nothing remains but a portion of the keep and outer wall. Paving-stones are quarried here. The principal seats are Blackbrooke and Glen Monow.

Sker, pa. on the Bristol Channel, W. Glamorgs., 7 W. of Bridgend; ac. 361; soil sandy. S. has become widely known through the "Maid of Sker," a novel by R. D. Blackmore. Here is a convalescent home, called The Rest, for the labouring classes.

Skerdmore, small island off the coast of Galway, Ir., 8 W. of the mouth of Kilkieran Bay.

Skerky Island, small island in Kenmare River, S. co. Kerry, Ir., opposite the inlet running up to Sneem.

Skerne (1), pa. and vil., E.R. Yorks., 13 N. of Beverley; ac. 2,750; soil loam, clay, and gravel, overlying clay. The church of St. Leonard, which has undergone reparation, contains a fine Norm. chancel-arch and the remains of several old monuments.

Skerne (2), river, S.E. Dur., rises in the west vicinity of Hutton Henry, about 8 S.E. by E. of the city of Durham and 6 miles from the east coast of the co. After running a few miles in a S.E. direction, it flows S.W. to Butterwick, and thence W.N.W. to Bishop Middleham, where it turns S.S.W., passing about a mile to the west of Hardwick Hall. From Bradbury its course is S.W. past Woodham to Aycliffe, whence it flows S. to the Tees at Croft. Its course from Aycliffe to Croft is almost due S., but there is a considerable curve to the E. a little above Darlington, which is on the banks of the river. Its length is 19 miles.

Skerries (1), reef off south coast of Dev., 2 N.N.E. of Start Point. The reef, which is much feared by mariners, is 3 miles long and about ½ mile broad.

Skerries (2), or Ynysoedd Moelroniaid, rocky island off north-west coast of Anglesey, 7½ N. by E. of Holyhead. S. is about 2 N.W. of Carmel Head. It extends about ¾ N.N.E. and S.S.W., and is the resort of innumerable sea-birds. On the island is a lighthouse, erected 1714, with a fixed light visible 15 miles.

Skerries (3) (= "Detached Rocks"), the name of several groups of small rocky islands bordering the north and west coasts of Scotland. The most considerable are the Housie Skerries (q.v.), in Shetland, and the Pentland Skerries (q.v.), in Orkney.

Skerries (4), seaport and small mkt. to. (s.) with railway station, on a neck of land on the coast of the Irish Sea, pa. of Holmpatrick (q.v.), N.E. co. Dub., Ir., 3 S.E. of Balbriggan. It is of considerable importance as a fishing port, and previous to the withdrawing of the fishing bounties the trade of the place in this branch was much more considerable. There is a factory for the embroidery of muslin. The harbour is the best on this part of the coast; the roadstead is good, and safe in southerly winds; and the pier, which had become damaged, has been repaired at considerable expense. The strand, about 1½ mile in length, is well adapted for sea-bathing. The National Lifeboat Institution has a station here. Fairs are held on April 28 and August 10. The old Protestant church of the pa. of Holmpatrick is a plain structure; the new church, built on the adjoining ground, is a fine building. A stone column has been erected to the memory of James Hans Hamilton, Esq., M.P. (d. 1863). The Catholic church (1823) is a spacious and handsome edifice. A parochial schoolhouse was built by J. A. Hamilton, Esq., and there are national schools. About a mile from S. is Hacketstown House with its beautiful demesne, which skirts the bold and rocky shore. To the left is Milverton, beautifully situated and commanding extensive views. On the Holmpatrick estate are quarries furnishing the finest stone, large quantities of which are shipped to Wicklow, Wales, and other parts, while much has been used in constructing the bridges on the Great Northern Railway, which runs through the estate. There are many delightful situations in the neighbourhood. The views are magnificent, and combine a pleasing variety of hill and dale, home scenery of vivid beauty, and sea views expansive and interesting.

Taking into consideration its being situated in a wild and unenclosed part of the country, Skibbereen is a fairly flourishing town. Like other places in the south and west of Ireland, the famine of 1847 was severely felt here. The town consists of several streets, some of which are wide and the houses well built. The retail business is extensive, and the neighbourhood is supplied from the stores here, this being the largest town in this remote part of the county; and a fair business is done in the corn trade. S. is also a considerable fishing port, more than 700 boats being registered under the Sea Fisheries Act. Fairs are held May 14, July 10, Aug. 2, and Oct. 12. The Protestant church of Abbeystrowry is a spacious edifice in the E. Eng. style, with a tower at the east end. This town is the head of the Catholic diocese of Ross. The Catholic church, near the court-house, is a handsome edifice in Grecian style. The court-house is a substantial stone building at the northern end of the town. About 2 miles below the town, on a picturesque site, is New Court, a seat.

Skidbrook, coast pa. and vil., N.E. Lincs., 10 N.E. of Louth; ac. 2,067 land and 1,290 water; soil clay, overlying sand and gravel. The church of St. Botolph (restored 1871) is E. Eng., Dec., and Perp. The pulpit dates from Charles I.; there is an incised slab in the chancel floor to the memory of a former vicar (d. 1413). The Free Methodists have a chapel.

Skidby, pa. and vil., E.R. Yorks., 4 S. of Beverley; ac. 1,179; soil loam, overlying clay. The church of St. Michael is an ancient brick building, to which a tower was added in 1836. There is a Wesleyan chapel. The school has a small endowment.

Skiddaw (1), pa., S.W. Cumb., near Keswick; ac. 2,969.

Skiddaw (2), mountain (3,054 ft.), Mid Cumb., 3½ N. of Keswick. S. is situated a short distance east of Bassenthwaite Water, and consists of an oblong mass some 8 miles long and 7 miles wide. Within this area are included the Caldbeck Fells to the north and Saddleback to the east. The central portion comprises the desolate moorland district known as S. Forest. The mountain (formed mainly of clay-slate of a deep blue colour, intersected by numerous veins of quartz) is ascended from Keswick on the south, the upward slope being very gradual. The views increase in grandeur as the summit is approached, and the seven peaks in which the mountain terminates command a magnificent prospect of very extensive range, and including nearly the whole of Cumb. and Westmd.

Skiddaw Dodd, or Dodd Fell, mountain peak (1,612 ft.) on south-west side of Skiddaw, Mid Cumb., 3 N.N.W. of Keswick. The peak is within ¾ mile of the west shore of Bassenthwaite Water, and commands a good view.

Skilgate, pa. and vil., W. Somerset, bordered on the south by the co. of Dev., 5 E. of Dulverton; ac. 2,108; soil loamy, overlying clay-slate. The church of St. John (rebuilt 1872) is in E. Eng. style.

Skillington, pa. and vil., S.W. Lincs., 8 S. of Grantham; ac. 2,158; soil loam, overlying clay. The church of St. James is chiefly E. Eng., with some Sax. or E. Norm. work at the north-east angle of the nave, and Dec. insertions; fixed in the north wall of the chancel are two sepulchral slabs of the 14th cent., with fine floriated crosses. Here is a Wesleyan chapel.

Skillion, Port, small cove in pa. of Braddan (q.v.), on east coast of I. of M., ½ S.W. of Douglas. It is a favourite bathing resort, well furnished with concrete piers and diving-boards for the purpose. Part of the area is walled off for the benefit of those who cannot swim.

Skinburness, coast vil., pa. of Holme Cultram (q.v.), N.W. Cumb., 2½ N.E. of Silloth. It is a pleasant seaside resort.

Skinflatts, vil., pa. of Bothkennar (q.v.), S.E. Stirls., Sc., 2 N.E. of Larbert.

Skinnand, pa. and vil., Mid Lincs., 9 S.W. of Lincoln; ac. 658; soil sandy loam, overlying clay. The church has been in ruins many years, and nothing now remains except a few scattered stones; but a portion of the burial-ground is still used.

Skinningrove, tp., pa. of Skelton near Redcar (q.v.), N.R. Yorks., 1½ E. of Brotton; ac. 188. The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have chapels. There is a small cottage hospital, and a Miners' Institute.

Skinsdale, stream, W. Suths., Sc., rises on Ben Armine and flows for 13 miles in a S.E. direction to the Black Water, which it joins 2 N.W. of the head of Loch Brora.

Skiplam, tp., pa. of Kirkdale (q.v.), N.R. Yorks., from 2 to 3½ N.W. of Kirby Moorside; ac. 2,572.

Skipness, q.s. pa. and vil., pa. of Saddell and Skipness (q.v.), on north-east coast of Kintyre peninsula, at north extremity of Kilbrannan Sound, S. Args., Sc., 7 S.S.E. of Tarbert. The Established church dates from 1756; alterations were made in the interior in 1892. S. Castle is an ancient square structure with outer wall 450 ft. in circuit and 7 ft. thick. It has a projecting keep, and another tower (known as the "Priest's Tower") also built in advance of the main edifice. It was the residence of a branch of the Campbells, one of whom fought against Charles I. There are some ruins of a large old church dedicated to St. Columba. S. Castle is a modern edifice.

Skiport, Loch, an inlet of the sea, in the north of S. Uist island, Outer Hebrides, Invs., Sc. It separates S. Uist into two parts as it joins Loch Bee on the west side of the island.

All Saints' Church (restored 1866) is a 13th- and 15th-cent. building, the exterior being chiefly Perp. There are Congregational and Wesleyan chapels. A manor court is held in October.

Skipton (in Domesday "Sciptone," "Sceptone," or "Scepetone," probably from Saxon "scep" = "a sheep"), pa., tp., mkt. to., head of U. and Co. Co. dis., W.R. Yorks., 9 N.W. of Keighley; ac. of pa. 30,122, of tp. 4224, and 21 water. The town is situated in a mountainous district, on a branch of the Aire. The church of the Holy Trinity (restored 1854) is chiefly Perp.; the chancel screen was transferred from Bolton Abbey in 1533. On the raised daïs of the chancel, on the north side, is a tomb, richly panelled with shields of arms, to Henry Clifford, first Earl of Cumberland, K.G., military commander against the Scots (d. 1542), and his son Henry, second Earl (d. 1570); and on the south side is the black marble tomb of George, third Earl, and last male heir of the Cliffords (d. 1605). In the vestry is a valuable library of old works, presented in 1719 by Sylvestre Petyt, Esq., of Barnard's Inn, London. Christ Church is an eccl. pa. with a modern church in Gothic style; there is a Catholic church, and places of worship for various Nonconformist bodies. The Mechanics' Institute has a good library, and science and art classes are carried on. There are Liberal and Conservative clubs, and one non-political. The grammar school (founded 1548) has been reconstituted by the Commissioners, and new buildings have been erected in Elizabethan style. The chief industries are cotton and thread spinning, and cotton and worsted weaving; the extensive sewing cotton manufactory and cotton spinning mills on the Broughton road give employment to about 1,200 hands. About 2 miles from S., on the Bolton road, is a large limestone quarry, known as the S. Rock, with a very large output. A weekly market for provisions, etc., is held on Saturdays, and a weekly cattle market on Mondays, both of which are well attended; a fair for horses is held on August 23, but is nearly obsolete. There is a pa. estate of £270 yearly, which is carried to poor rates; other charities produce about £60 yearly for the poor. S. is distinguished as the capital of Craven, and at the Norm. accession was granted to William de Romillé, who built S. Castle as the seat of his barony. Early in the 14th cent. it passed to the Cliffords, who have held it for five hundred years. The castle stands a short distance eastward from the church; but of Romillé's fortress little now remains except the western doorway to the inner castle, consisting of a treble semicircular arch supported upon square piers. The most ancient part now existing consists of seven round towers, partly in the sides and partly in the angles of the building. From its importance and the military character of the families to which it successively belonged, it has undergone several sieges; except perhaps in the reign of Stephen, it suffered no material injury by belligerent operations till the time of the Civil War, when it sustained a siege or blockade of three years by the Parliamentarians. It was partly dismantled and demolished in 1649, but it was restored and again rendered habitable by the Countess of Pembroke. In the grounds are the ruins of the ancient pa. church of St. John, part of which is now used as a stable, the old font occupying the centre of the quadrangle and being used as a flower-vase. The castle is believed to have been the birthplace of Rosamond, daughter of Walter de Clifford, better known as "Fair Rosamond," celebrated in English history as the mistress of Henry II. Aireville and Rockwood are also seats.

and a font dated 1662. In the churchyard is a tombstone of the 14th cent., on which appears the bust of a civilian within a deeply-cut quatrefoil. The church of the Holy Trinity (consecrated 1848) is in Dec. style. St. Leonard's Hospital (endowed) is for ten poor men and their wives. There is another charity of about £70 yearly for fuel. West S. House is a seat. Rochford Tower, also a seat, is supposed to be the remains of the ancient chapel of Hiptoft; some curious wall-paintings, representing Scriptural subjects, were discovered here, and an effaced shield of arms supposed to be that of the Rochford family, who built the tower in the 16th cent. Near S. road stands a large quadrangular building of the 15th cent., called the Hussey Tower.

The screen was removed about 1820. The Wesleyans have a chapel. There is a pa. reading-room, and a charity which is partly devoted to the support of the schools. In 1809 several celts (spear-heads) were discovered in the earthworks which exist here.

Skirlaugh, North, tp. and vil., pa. of Swine (q.v.), E.R. Yorks., 8 N.W. of Hedon; ac. 2,247. [SKIRLAUGH.]

Skirlaugh, South, tp. and vil., pa. of Swine (q.v.), E.R. Yorks., 9 N.E. of Hull; ac. 1,064. [SKIRLAUGH.]

Skirling, pa. and small vil., W. Peebs., Sc.; ac. of pa. 3,433. The general features of the district are of the same hilly and undulating character noticeable throughout the surrounding country, but in a more advanced state of cultivation. The vil. is on the road from Biggar to Peebles, about 2 E. of Biggar station.

Skirlington, ha., pa. of and 1 N. from Atwick (q.v.), E.R. Yorks. According to Domesday Book, it was one of the five sokes belonging to the manor of Hornsea.

Skirpenbeck, pa. and vil., E.R. Yorks., 10½ N.E. of Hull; ac. 1,600; soil loam, sand, and clay, overlying gravel and shale. The church of St. Mary is an ancient stone building.

Skirrid Fawr. [SCYRRID FAWR.]

Skirwith, eccl. pa., tp., and vil., pa. of Kirkland (q.v.), E. Cumb., 8 N.E. of Penrith; ac. 5,247. The church of St. John the Evangelist (1858) is in Dec. style. The Wesleyans have a chapel. There are some small charities. S. Abbey, a seat, is said to stand on the site of an ancient religious house.

Skitter Ness, headland, N. Lincs., on the south side of the Humber, about 2 S.E. of Hull.

Skokholm, island, pa. of Dale (q.v.), off south-west coast of Pembs., 11 W. of Milford. It extends about 1 N.E. and S.W., with an extreme breadth of less than ½ mile. It is equidistant from Skomer island, 2¼ miles to the north, and the mainland on the north-east. The surface is barren, overlying limestone in the north and red rabstone in the south. Sheep find pasture on the island, and it abounds in rabbits. The landing-place on the north side forms a break in the bold rocky coast.

Skomer, island, pa. of St. Martin, Haverfordwest, off south-west coast of Pembs., 11½ W. by N. of Milford. The island is 2 miles long from east to west, with an extreme breadth of 1 mile. A channel about 2 miles broad separates it from Skokholm (q.v.) on the south. The surface is barren, overlying limestone. Rabbits are abundant.

Skreen (1), bar., E. co. Meath, Ir.; ac. 40,891. It is bounded on the north by Navan and Upper Slane bars., on the east by Upper and Lower Duleek bars. and co. Dub., on the south by Ratoath bar., and on the west by Navan and Lower Deece bars.

Skreen (2), pa. and vil., Skreen bar., E. co. Meath, Ir., 5 N.E. of Kilmessan station; ac. 4,520. The vil. stands on the summit of S. Hill, which rises from the low surrounding country to a height of about 500 ft.

Skreen (3), coast pa., Tireragh bar., N. co. Sligo, Ir., 10 N.W. of Ballysodare station. The pa. has an area of 13,239 ac., and extends from the Atlantic to the Ox Mountains.

Skreen (4), pa., South Ballaghkeen and Shelmaliere East bars., S.E. co. Wex., Ir., 6 N.E. of Wexford; ac. 1,366.

Skull, or Schull, coast pa. and vil., West Carbery bar., S.W. co. Cork, Ir.; ac. 37,922. The pa. lies on the peninsula formed by Dunmanus Bay on the north and Long Island Bay to the south, and includes several islands off the coast. It is very mountainous, exhibiting some grand scenery, in which Mount Gabriel (1,339 ft.) is prominent. A considerable quantity of copper ore has been discovered from time to time. This once gave employment to a number of persons, and many thousand tons of ore were sent to Swansea; but the works were ultimately abandoned. In 1847 the pa. was particularly afflicted by the famine, which carried off several hundreds of its poorer inhabitants. S. was anciently called Sancta Maria de Scholis (= "St. Mary of the Schools"), and is traditionally alleged to have been for some time the chief seat of learning in south-western Munster. The harbour affords good shelter and anchorage to vessels of moderate tonnage, having two to eight fathoms of water at low tide; and although the entrance is impeded by some sunken rocks, it is well defended from the fury of the Atlantic by Castle Island and Long Island, which lie immediately outside. A Protestant church of the modern English style, with a belfry, is situated near the town. The workhouse is about 1 E. of the vil. There is a market on Thursday for butter, eggs, and fowls; and monthly fairs are held.

Skutterskelf, tp. on the north bank of the Leven, pas. of Rudby-in-Cleveland and Stokesley (q.v.), N.R. Yorks., adjoining Rudby on the east; ac. 1,008. S. Hall, a handsome mansion of the Grecian order, on rising ground, is a seat.

Skye, island, the largest of the Inner Hebrides, off the north-west coast of Invs., Sc., from which it is separated by Sleat Sound and Kyle Rhea; Loch Alsh, Kyle Akin, and the Inner Sound dividing its northern portion from Ross. S. comprises seven pas.—Bracadale, Duirinish, Kilmuir, Portree, Sleat, Snizort, and Strath. Its length from north to south is 45 miles, and its breadth varies from 5 to 20 miles; its shape is very irregular, and its coast is deeply indented by sea-lochs. The principal mountainous district lies between Loch Eishart and a line drawn from Portree to a little east of Loch Bracadale, and including in its south-eastern corner the Cuchullin Hills (q.v.). The seven pas. (which include some smaller neighbouring islands) comprise 428,966 ac. S. is principally occupied as grazing farms, producing great numbers of sheep and black cattle, and some small horses; but a large portion of the land is rented by what are termed crofters, who combine farming and fishing for a livelihood. In 1884 an agitation arose amongst them for a thorough revision of the terms on which they held the land. The agitation caused such a popular feeling on their behalf that a Land Bill, considerably in their favour, was passed by Parliament. Formerly great quantities of kelp were produced here. The fisheries off this coast, especially in the sound between S. and the mainland, are sometimes very productive. The island was celebrated for its race of pipers, and a sort of college for pipers existed at Borcraig. There are several forts and castles along the coast, some ruined and a few still occupied and kept up, the principal being Armadale, Duntulm, and Dunvegan (inhabited), Knock, Castle Moll, and Eilean Donan; while near the head of Loch Snizort stands the house of Kingsburgh, on the site of the old house to which Flora Macdonald, by the advice of Lady Margaret Macdonald, guided Prince Charlie when they landed from South Uist.

Sky Hill, eminence (850 ft.), pa. of Lezayre (q.v.), N.E. I. of M., 1½ W.S.W. of Ramsey. The hill is well wooded, and commands a fine view to the north, embracing all the low-lying part of the island in that direction and part of the Scottish coast. Here the Norseman, Godred, son of Harold the Black, of Ireland, defeated the Manxmen, thereby gaining possession of the island.

Skyreholme, vil., pa. of Burnsall (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., about 3 N.E. of Skipton. Percival Hall is a farmhouse with the inscription "C. L. C. E. P. 1671" above the doorway.

Slad, eccl. pa. and vil., pa. of Painswick (q.v.), Mid Glouc., 2 N.E. of Stroud. The church of the Holy Trinity was built 1833, in Perp. style. There is a Congregational chapel. Steanbridge House, an ancient mansion, is a seat.

Slade (1), ha., pa. of Nettlecombe (q.v.), W. Somerset, 4 S. of Watchet.

Slade (2), fishing ha., pa. of Hook (q.v.), S. co. Wex., Ir., 1 N.E. of Hook Head.

Slade (3), stream, S. co. Dub., Ir., rises under the slopes of Seefingan Mountain, and flows in a N. direction for about 3 miles to the Dodder, which it joins in Glennasmole.

Slade Down, eminence (666 ft.), N. Dev., 1 S.W. of Ilfracombe.

Slade Hooton, ha., pa. of and ½ N. from Laughton-en-le-Morthen (q.v.), W.R. Yorks.

Slades Bridge, ha., pa. of and ½ S.E. from Egloshayle (q.v.), N.E. Cornw.

Slades Green, ha., pa. of and adjoining Erith (q.v.), N.W. Kent.

Slaggyford, ha. with railway station, pa. of Knaresdale (q.v.), S.W. Northumb., 8½ S.W. of Haltwhistle. There is a Wesleyan chapel. Fairs for the sale of horses, cattle, and sheep are held in May and Sept.

Slaghtmanus, ha., pa. of Lower Cumber (q.v.), W. co. Londy., Ir., 7 miles from Claudy.

Slaidburn, pa., tp., and vil., on the Hodder, W.R. Yorks., 9 N. of Clitheroe; ac. of pa. 39,986, of tp. 5,182; soil disintegrated limestone. The church of St. Andrew is E. Eng.; there is a beautiful screen of black oak; the font is ancient, but plain. The Wesleyans have a chapel. The charities are of £20 yearly value, besides the rent of 50 ac. of poor's land, amounting to £79 10s. yearly. Fairs for cattle are held on the Wednesday before Easter Sunday and on Nov. 4th.

Slains, coast pa., N.E. Abers., Sc., about 5 E. of Ellon, on the old road between Aberdeen and Peterhead; ac. 9,124. The coast here is rocky with many caves, one of which is 200 ft. in length. The Established church was erected in 1806. The ruins of S. Castle, dismantled about 1594, are on a rock 120 ft. above the sea and about 2 N. of the point where, it is supposed, the St. Catharine, one of the ships of the Spanish Armada, was wrecked in 1588.

Slains Castle, seat, pa. of Cruden (q.v.), N.E. Abers., Sc., about 7 S.W. of Peterhead. It stands on the edge of a high cliff about 5 N.E. of the old castle of Slains (q.v.).

Slaithwaite, tp., pa. of Huddersfield, and vil. extending into the pa. of Almondbury (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., 5 W. by S. of Huddersfield; ac. 2,436. [SLAITHWAITE-WITH-LINGARDS.]

Slaithwaite-with-Lingards, eccl. pa. and vil. (Slaithwaite), pas. of Almondbury and Huddersfield, W.R. Yorks., about 5 W. by S. of Huddersfield. The church of St. James is in Gothic style. There are Baptist and Free Methodist chapels. An endowed school was founded in 1721; the endowment is now given to the national school. The mineral baths, surrounded by beautiful gardens and romantic scenery, are in great repute, and much frequented in the summer season. Here are Liberal, Conservative, and Working Men's Clubs, a Homing Club, and an Industrial Society. The woollen and worsted manufacture (fancy and unions) and cotton-spinning are carried on here; there are also several stone quarries in the neighbourhood. The Manor House (or Old Hall), an Elizabethan building, is used only for the receipt of rents from the estate of the Earl of Dartmouth, a court baron being held annually in October.

Slaley (1), pa. and vil., S. Northumb., 6 S.E. of Hexham; ac. 7,518; soil loam, overlying generally clay. The church (name unknown) was rebuilt in 1832, in E. Eng. style. The charities amount to £7 yearly. The vil. is bounded by the Devil's Water, and, being on high ground, commands an extensive prospect and is remarkable for its salubrity.

Slaley (2), ha., pa. of and ¾ S.W. from Bonsall (q.v.), Mid Derbys.

Slamannan, pa., q.s. pa. (extending into the pa. of Falkirk), and to. with railway station, S.E. Stirls., Sc.; ac. of pa. 7,062; soil principally bog and moss, but there are a few dairy-farms. Near the north-west end of the pa. is a point where the cos. of Stirls., Dumbarts., and Lanarks. meet, and at the south-west end the cos. of Stirls. and Lanarks. meet Linliths. On the south boundary is a small lake called Black Loch, a tributary to the great reservoir for the Forth and Clyde Canal. The to. is 10 S.W. of Linlithgow, on the road to Glasgow. The Established church, erected about the beginning of the 19th cent., is a plain stone edifice. The whole neighbourhood abounds in collieries. Balquhatstone is a seat.

Slane, pa. and vil. on the Boyne, Upper Slane bar., N.E. co. Meath, Ir., 6 N.E. of Navan; ac. 5,869. Though now a small vil., S. was formerly one of the boroughs in the palatine of Meath. On a hill here St. Patrick (A.D. 433) lighted the Easter fire. An abbey for canons regular was founded here at a very early date, and another in 1512 for Franciscans; some ruins still remain. At the lower end of the vil. is the Protestant church, a plain structure almost hidden by trees; there is also a Catholic church. Monthly fairs are held. A large castle was erected here by the family of Lord Slane, who being afterwards engaged in the rebellion of 1641, the estate became vested in the Crown, and the castle has now come into the possession of the Marquess of Conyngham. The present mansion has been considerably modernised, and it stands in beautiful grounds on the banks of the Boyne.

Slane, Lower, bar., N.E. co. Meath, Ir.; ac. 26,224. It is bounded on the north and east by co. Monaghan and co. Louth respectively, on the south by Upper Slane bar., and on the west by Morgallion bar.

Slanes, coast pa., Ards Upper bar., N.E. co. Down, Ir., 3 N.E. of Portaferry; ac. 946. The coast is bluff and rocky.

Slane, Upper, bar., N.E. co. Meath, Ir.; ac. 29,211. It is bounded on the north by Lower Slane bar., and on the east by co. Louth; on the south the Boyne separates it from Lower Duleek bar., and Morgallion and Navan bars. adjoin it on the west.

Slaney, river, cos. Wick., Carl., and Wex., Ir., rises in Mid co. Wick., near Lugnaquilla, and flows in a W. direction towards Baltinglass, where it turns S., and, leaving co. Wick., runs through the east portion of co. Carl., passing Rathvilly, Tullow, and Clonegall. At Newtownbarry it enters co. Wex., and, still continuing its S. course, passes Enniscorthy and empties itself into Wexford Harbour. Its total length is 60 miles. Its principal tributaries are the Boro, the Bann, the Derry, and the Derreen.

Slapin, Loch, sea-loch on the south of Skye island, pa. of Strath (q.v.), Skye, Invs., Sc. It is 2½ miles wide at the entrance, and runs inland for a distance of about 4 miles.

Slapton (1) (anciently "Slepetone"), pa. and vil. on the Ouse, Mid Bucks., on the border of Beds., 3½ S. of Leighton Buzzard; ac. 1,413; soil clay, overlying clay. The church of the Holy Cross (restored 1889) is E. Eng.; the font dates from the 13th cent., and there are brasses dated 1462, 1519, and 1522. The Wesleyans have a chapel. There is a charity of £66 yearly. S. formerly belonged to the Benedictine convent of SS. Mary and Ethelburga at Barking, and was a royal manor in the time of Edward VI. and Elizabeth.

Slapton (2), pa. and vil. on the shore of Start Bay, S. Dev., 8½ S.W. of Dartmouth; ac. 3,074; soil loamy, overlying limestone and clay-slate. The church of James the Greater is Late Dec. and E. Perp.; it was attached originally to a college founded here 1350 by Sir Guy de Brian, Knight, standard-bearer to Edward III. The Brethren erected a chapel here 1868. Poole, anciently the residence of the De Bryans, is now a farmhouse. There are some small charities.

Slapton (3), pa. and vil., S. Northants, 3¾ S.W. of Towcester; ac. 652; soil clay, overlying stone. The church of St. Botolph (restored 1878–79) is Late Dec., and retains a piscina in the south aisle. There is a small Wesleyan chapel. Mrs. Jane Leeson's charity of 20s. (1646) is distributed yearly to the poor; Knight's gift of 30s. yearly is for the schooling of three children; and a forest allotment, producing 30s. yearly, is also applied to the relief of the poor.

Slate, river, co. Kildare, Ir., rises about 2 N.W. of Prosperous, and flows in a W. direction for about 17 miles to the Cushina, which it joins about 6 N. of Monastereven.

Slateford, ha., pa. of and about 1 N. from Maybole (q v.), W. Ayrs., Sc.

Slateford and Inglisgreen, vil. with railway station, on the Water of Leith and Union Canal, pas. of Colinton and St. Cuthberts (q.v.), N. Edins., Sc., about 2½ S.W. of Edinburgh. There are extensive bleaching works.

Slate Islands, group of islands off the Lorn district, Args., Sc. It includes the islands of Luing, Shuna, Seil, and Torsay (q.v.).

Slaugham, pa. (extending for eight miles) and vil., N. Sussex; ac. 5,364; soil sand and clay, overlying clay, gravel, and sand. The vil. is N.W. of Cuckfield. The church of St. Mary (restored) is chiefly Dec., and contains some ancient monuments and brasses to the Covert family from 1503 to 1586, and a font of the 11th cent. In the pa. are church mission rooms and Baptist and Wesleyan chapels. A spring of excellent water rises in S. Park, from which the whole of the vil. is supplied. Some remains still exist of the mansion of the Covert family, including several perfect arches and portions of the extensive kitchen. The ruins extend over 3 ac. of ground, and are encircled by a high wall with octagonal towers; the place was formerly surrounded by a moat. The neighbourhood is pleasant, and contains many seats.

Slaughden Quay, ha. on the Alde, pa. of and 1 s. from Aldeburgh (q.v.), E. Suff. Vessels up to 200 tons burthen can here receive and discharge cargoes.

Slaughterford, pa., N.W. Wilts., 4½ N.W. of Corsham; ac. 473; soil rocky, overlying rock. The church of St. Nicholas (restored 1883) is in E. Eng. style. S. was a Roman settlement. There are paper-mills and a brewery.

Slaughter, Lower, pa. and vil. on a feeder of the Windrush, E. Gloucs., 6 N.N.E. of Northleach; ac. 1,140; soil stonebrash, overlying gravel. The church of St. Mary (rebuilt 1867) is an E. Eng. and Dec. building. There is a Baptist chapel. A public hall was built in 1887. The Manor House is a seat.

Slaughter, Upper, pa. and vil. on a feeder of the Windrush, E. Gloucs., 2½ S.W. of Stow-on-the-Wold; ac. 1,390; soil and subsoil chiefly stonebrash. The church of St. Peter (restored 1877) is a Norm. and E. Eng. building; it has an altar-tomb to the Rev. F. E. Witts (d. 1854), and in the chancel a tablet to Andrew Wanley, dated 1688; there are brasses to John Slaughter (d. 1583), his wife Eleanor (d. 1597), and his son Paris (d. 1597); in the south wall of the chancel are sedilia and a piscina. The Primitive Methodists have a chapel. The charities amount to £35 yearly. The Manor House (built in the reign of James I.) and Copse Hill are seats.

Slawston, pa. and vil. overlooking the vale of the Welland, S. Leics., 6 N.E. of Market Harborough; ac. 1,510; soil stiff clay. The church of All Saints is E. Eng. There is a Congregational chapel. The interest of £100 is distributed yearly in coals.

Slea, river, S. Lincs., rises near Ancaster, and flows past Sleaford in a N.E. direction for about 18 miles to the Witham, which it joins by means of canals. Through this junction Sleaford is connected both with Lincoln and Boston.

Sleaford, or New Sleaford, pa., tp., and mkt. to. (M.) on the Slea, S. Lincs., 18 s. of Lincoln; ac. of pa. 2,409, of tp. 1,213. The to. of S. is situated in a highly fertile district. The principal streets (called gates), named from the cardinal points, intersect each other at right angles—the Market Place occupying the angle contained by North and East Gates. The church of St. Denis (restored 1853), which stands to the east of the Market Place, is Trans., E. Eng., Dec., and Perp.; the nave, aisles, transept, and south porch are Dec., and the chancel, clerestory of nave, sedilia, and some minor details Perp.; the south porch, a work of beautiful design, has a crypt below it, entered by a doorway in the west wall; the chancel screen is a beautiful specimen of mediæval oak carving; on the external east wall of the chancel is an inscription (in Latin) to Richard Dokke, Johan his wife, and John their son (1407); and on the wall of the south aisle is an inscription (in English) to William Harebeter and Elizabeth his wife. To the Carr family there are four monuments, the earliest of which is a thick slab of grey marble on the chancel floor, with brass effigies of George Carr (d. 1520), his wife Ann (Flower) (d. 1521), and three shields of arms; the next, on the north side of the chancel arch, is a plain low altar-tomb with pilasters supporting a canopy, numerous shields of arms, and an inscription to Robert Carr, Esq. (d. 1590), his three wives, and children, with their respective alliances; on the south side of the chancel arch is a plain altar-tomb with recumbent effigies of alabaster, a good deal mutilated, to Sir Edward Carr, Bart. (d. 1618), and probably Ann (Dyer) his second wife; in the transept is a fine altar-tomb of black and white marble, with shields of arms to Sir Robert Carr, Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (d. 1682), his wife Elizabeth (Bennet), and his only son and heir, Sir Edward Carr (d. 1683); beneath the tomb is the vault of the Carr family. In the south aisle is a slab of grey marble, with an inscription of the 13th cent. in Lombardic characters, but now illegible; here also is a small brass of the 14th cent., with three admonitory Latin lines, and a slab with the matrix of the brass effigy of a priest. In the north aisle is a brass inscription to Rycherd Pikeworth, mercer (d. 1557), with merchant's mark between the initials R. P.; in the chancel are inscribed slabs to Richard Warsope (d. 1609) and Miles Long, gent. (d. 1664), and near the lower stairs a brass to Theophilus Brittaine (d. 1696). There are later memorials to the Peart, Cawdron, Seller, and Taylor families. The west window has some fragments of ancient glass. In 1647, during the Commonwealth period, the interior of the church was despoiled and everything of value carried away. There are two ancient oak chests, one of which is banded with iron and has three locks; the other is larger and of later date, and on the panelled front is the bust of a man wearing a helmet, and the initials "R. T."; in this chest is preserved an elaborately-worked pulpit cushion of the Early Stuart period, and a superb ancient altar cloth of velvet and silk, richly embroidered. Near the vestry is kept a curious reading-desk of oak, with a collection of 15 chained theological books. Here is a Catholic church and several Nonconformist chapels. The Carr Hospital (Northgate) was founded in 1636, for the maintenance of twelve poor men, and in 1845 enlarged for the reception of six additional poor men. The other charities for distribution amount to about £50 yearly, derived from various sources. The town hall, or sessions house (1829–30), on the north side of the Market Place, is in the Tudor style. The Corn Exchange, in the Market Place (1857), is Perp.; underneath is a butter market, and attached to it are other rooms and offices. There are six fairs yearly—on Plough Monday, Easter Monday, Whit-Monday, Aug. 12, Oct. 1 (for cheese), and Oct. 20 (for cattle). S. Castle, south-west of the to., was erected by Alexander, Bishop of Lincoln (1123-47), but only a fragment of the north-west tower and traces of the moats remain; an ancient key was found here about 1870; John took refuge here in 1216, after the loss of his army and baggage in The Wash; and here (Jan. 25, 1430–31) died Richard Flemyng, Bishop of Lincoln. At the south end of Southgate is a monument to the memory of Henry Handley, Esq., M.P. for S. Lincs. 1832–41, who died in 1846; at the base of the memorial is a drinking fountain. In 1858, near the south entrance to the town, four or five skeletons, each with a shield, knife, and spear-head, were discovered, all of which were in good preservation; a brass coin of Valentinianus was also found. The "Black Bull" inn, in Southgate, retains its ancient sign built into the wall, with the date "1689" and the initials "R B M," and below, the date "1791" and the initials "I. W." There are other old houses in the town, dating from the time of Queen Elizabeth to that of Charles II., including a picturesque gabled house in Eastgate.

Sleaford Division, one of the seven parl. divs. of Lincs.; it lies in the south of the co., and returns one member.

Sleaford, Old, pa., S. Lincs., part of the to. of Sleaford; ac. 1,150. The ancient church of All Saints (14th cent.) no longer exists. There is a Baptist chapel.

Sleagill, tp., pa. of and 2½ s. from Morland (q.v.), N. Westmd.; ac. 1,384. The tp. contains a thin seam of coal.

Sleat, pa. and vil., forming the south-east end of Skye, Inner Hebrides, Invs., Sc., and divided from the district of Moidart on the mainland by the Sound of Sleat and Kyle Rhea; ac. 39,959; soil mossy towards the middle of the pa., and clayey in the portion under tillage. The vil. is about 10 s. of Broadford. About 4 s. of the vil. and ½ mile from the shore is the Castle of Armadale, a large modern house in fine grounds, with a pier for steamers close by; and in a bay a little north of the vil. are the ruins of Knock Castle.

Sleat, Sound of, a belt of sea dividing Skye from the mainland of Invs., Sc. It is 19½ miles long, from 1 to 7 miles wide, and is on the route of the steamers from Oban to Portree.

Sleaty, pa. on the Barrow, Slievemargy bar., S.E. Q. Co., Ir., 1½ N.W. of Carlow; ac. 671. Here are remains of the old church, supposed to be of the 13th cent.; the walls are now the only part left standing. In the churchyard stands a granite cross without inscription, and said to have been erected by Saint Fiacc, patron of the place. Not far from this old church stands the Catholic college of Knockbeg.

Slebech, pa. on the East Cleddau, S. Pembs., 4½ E. of Haverfordwest; ac. 4,474; soil mostly fertile, overlying limestone. The church of St. John the Baptist is in Dec. style. The Baptists and Calvinistic Methodists have chapels. Picton Castle, a fine old Norm. fortress built by William de Picton, has descended through the Wogans and the Dounes to the family of Phillips, in whose possession it has remained since the reign of Richard III. S. Park, which occupies the site of a commandery of the Knights Hospitaller, is surrounded by pleasant grounds.

Sleddale, Long, eccl. pa. and tp., pa. of and 8 N. from Kendal (q.v.), Mid Westmd.; ac. 6,735. The church of St. Mary is in Gothic style. The surrounding scenery is very fine. There are quarries producing a fine blue slate.

Sleddale, Wet, ha., pa. of and 2½ S.W. from Shap (q.v.), N. Westmd. The Lowther rises among the mountains at the west end of the valley in which the ha. is situated, and which is noted, as the name implies, for its driving rains.

Sledmere, vil., pa. of Sledmere-with-Croom (q.v.), E.R. Yorks., 8 N.W. of Driffield. S. House, in a fine park, is a seat.

Sledmere-with-Croom, pa., E.R. Yorks., 8 N.W. of Driffield; ac. 7,000; soil and subsoil chalk. The church of St. Mary is an 18th-cent. building in Classic style, the 14th-cent. tower being the only remnant of the old building. There is a memorial to Thomas Wilson (d. 1641); several mural tablets to the Sykes, Rouse, Egerton, and Kirkby families; and a coped granite tomb to Sir Tatton Sykes (d. 1863). The Primitive Methodists and Wesleyans have chapels. On Garton Hill is an observatory tower, built in 1865. S. House, a seat in Italian style, contains a fine library and several good paintings, and is surrounded by a large park.

Sleegill, ha., pa. of and 3 W. from Catterick (q.v.), N.R. Yorks.

Sleekburn, East, vil., pa. of Bedlington (q.v.), S. Northumb., 2½ N.E. of Blyth.

Sleekburn, West, ha. with railway station, pa. of Bedlington (q.v.), S. Northumb., 2 N.E. of Blyth. The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have chapels. There is an extensive colliery.

Sleightholme, ha., pa. of Bowes (q.v.), N.R. Yorks., about 5 S.W. of Barnard Castle.

Sleights, vil. with railway station, pa. of Eskdaleside-cum-Ugglebarnby (q.v.), N.R. Yorks., 3 S.W. of Whitby. The church of St. John is in Gothic style. Esk Hall and S. Hall are seats.

Slemish, mountain (1,457 ft.), pa. of Racavan (q.v.), Mid co. Antr., Ir., about 4 S.E. of Broughshane.

swelling verdant surface, and forms a conspicuous feature.

Slieu Lewaigue, eminence, pa. of Maughold (q.v.), N.E. I. of M., 1½ S.E. of Ramsey. It commands a fine view, embracing Snae Fell and North Barrule, the coast which sweeps round to Maughold Head, and, in fine weather, the mountains of Cumb. and South Scotland.

Slieu-na-Fraughane, or Slieu Fraoghane (= "Hill of Heather"), eminence (1,602 ft.), pa. of Michael (q.v.), N. I. of M., 5½ N.E. by E. of Peel.

Slieu Whallin (= "Hill of the Whelp"), eminence (1,086 ft.), pa. of Patrick (q.v.), W. I. of M., 2¼ S.E. of Peel. In old days witches were rolled down the hillside, which is very steep, to test their guilt or innocence; if they reached the bottom alive, they were considered guilty and put to death. The hill is said to be haunted by the ghost of a woman who underwent this ordeal enclosed in a barrel studded with nails pointing inwards; and, according to the story, it is her strange cries which give the mountain its name.

Slieve Alp, mountain (1,084 ft.), N.W. co. Mayo, Ir., 16 N.W. of Newport.

Slieve Altovey, mountain (1,684 ft.), S.W. co. Don., Ir., about 8 W. of Ardara.

Slieve Annee, mountain (1,782 ft.), N. co. Antr., Ir., about 6 S.W. of Cushendall.

Slieveardagh, bar., S.E. co. Tip., Ir.; ac. 90,773. It is bounded on the north by Q. Co., on the east by co. Kilk., on the south by Iffa and Offa East bar., and on the west by Middlethird and Eliogarty bars. The river Munster flows along its east boundary for some distance, and a branch of the Great Southern and Western Railway traverses the west corner of the barony.

Slieve Aughty Mountains, a range of hills (1,312 ft.), S. co. Galway, Ir., near the border of co. Clare, and extending for about 14 miles north to south.

Slieve Bane (1), mountain (1,595 ft.), S. co. Down, Ir., near Rosstrevor. The ascent is steep, but not difficult; and Cloughmore, a boulder passed on the way up, is exceedingly interesting from the geological and legendary point of view.

Slieve Bane (2), mountain (2,128 ft.), S. co. Dub., Ir., on the borders of co. Wick., 7 N.E. of Blessington.

Slieve Bawn, or Sleebon, mountain (857 ft.), Mid co. Roscom., Ir., 4 S. of Strokestown.

Slieve Beagh, or Slabay, mountain (1,254 ft.) on the borders of cos. Tyrone, Monaghan, and Fermanagh, Ir., 5 S. of Clogher. The main portion of the mountain is in co. Tyrone, but the actual summit is in co. Fermanagh.

Slieve Bearnagh Mountains, range of hills (1,746 ft.) near Lough Derg, E. co. Clare, Ir., about 1½ W. of Killaloe.

Slieve Bunn, hill (879 ft.), N. co. Wex., Ir., 4 N.W. of Gorey.

Slieve Callan, mountain (1,282 ft.), W. co. Clare, Ir., about 5 E. of Miltown Malbay. On its south-east side there is a cromlech, consisting of three immense stones, celebrated for being marked with an Ogham inscription. S. Callan consists, geologically, of the Upper Limestone Measures.

Slieve Caltia, hill (888 ft.) near the river Barrow, S. co. Wex., Ir., 4 S. of New Ross. Here the rebels encamped in 1798.

Slieve Car, mountain (2,369 ft.), N.W. co. Mayo, Ir., 14 W. of Crossmolina. It is known also as Laght Dauhybaun.

Slieve Carna, hill (855 ft.), Mid co. Mayo, Ir., 3 S.W. of Kiltamagh.

Slieve Croob, mountain (1,755 ft.), Mid co. Down, Ir., about 6 S.W. of Ballynahinch. On the side of the mountain there is a large rath, 80 yds. round at the base.

Slieve Curkagh, mountain (1,098 ft.) near Lough Allen, N. co. Roscom., Ir., 4 N. of Keadew.

Slieve Daeane, hill (900 ft.) near Lough Gill, E. co. Sligo, Ir., about 3½ S. of Sligo town. The hill is of a gneissic character, passing into granite.

Slieve Donard, mountain (2,796 ft.), the highest point of the Mourne range, S. co. Down, Ir., about 3 S.W. of Newcastle. The ascent, which is not difficult, may be made from Newcastle, and the summit affords a magnificent view. The mountain is composed of granite, which is ice-worn up to 1,400 or 1,500 ft.

Slieve Elva, mountain (1,109 ft.), N. co. Clare, Ir., about 5 S.W. of Ballyvaghan.

Slieve Fyagh, mountain (1,090 ft.), N. co. Mayo, Ir., about 14 N.W. of Crossmolina.

Sligo (1), north-western maritime co. of Ireland, province of Connaught, on the shore of the Atlantic, having the bays of Donegal and Sligo on the north, Killala Bay on the west, co. Mayo on the south-west, co. Roscom. on the south-east, and co. Leit. on the north-east. Its extent from north to south is about 40 miles and about 38 from east to west; its surface comprises 450,120 ac. of land and 12,025 water. This co. has a great diversity of surface—mountains, lakes, rich lands and enclosures, contrasted with dreary bogs and commons; some small woods, however, scattered in different parts, relieve the eye from the monotony attached to many of the counties of Ireland. The Ox Mountains, on the west, are a range extending in a south-westerly direction to co. Mayo, with heights ranging from 1,000 ft. up to 1,778 ft. Lough Easky lies among the summits, at an altitude of 697 ft. Its principal lakes are Lough Gill, Temple House Lake, Lough Talt, and Lough Arrow, the last remarkable for large and fine-flavoured trout. The most considerable rivers are the Moy (for many miles separating co. Mayo from co. Sligo), the Owenmore, the Easky, and the Unshin; and there are many other streams which afford good fishing. On the coast, in the bar. of Tireragh, is a stone which bears a high polish, called serpent stone, from figures which it exhibits resembling the skeletons of those animals. A ridge of mica-slate runs N.E. and S.W. (by Collooney and the Ox Mountains), through the millstone grit and carboniferous limestone, which forms the prevailing substratum, except north of S. Bay, where the coast towards Milk Haven is of Old Red Sandstone. Copper and tin are found in the western parts of Tireragh bar., and fine clays and talc near Drumleer, 13 S.E. of Sligo. Grain and potatoes are the chief crops, and linen and coarse woollens are manufactured. The fisheries employ a numerous body of men and boys. Sligo may be considered for the most part a tillage co., though there are numerous tracts peculiarly suited to the fattening of cattle. The climate is temperate, but variable. The lines of three railway companies pass through the co.—the Midland Great Western, the Sligo, Leitrim and North Counties, and the Waterford and Limerick. The co. has two parl. divs.—North Sligo and South Sligo.

Sligo (2), mun. bor., seaport, mkt. and co. to., pas. of St. John's and Calry (q.v.), N.W. co. Sligo, Ir., 25 S.W. of Ballyshannon. S. was a parl. bor. till 1870, when it was disfranchised. The to. is situated at the head of the bay to which it gives name, on the banks of the Garogue, which here discharges itself into Sligo Bay, and is spanned by two bridges of plain structure. S., which lies in the midst of a wild, romantic, and mountainous country, and may be considered the capital of this part of Ireland, is said to owe its origin to Maurice Fitzgerald, Earl of Kildare, Lord Justice (1229–45), who about 1242 erected a strong castle here, and ten years after built a monastery for Dominicans. The town was often pillaged and destroyed, and in 1277 the castle was demolished. In 1414 the abbey was destroyed by fire, and the year after the present building was begun. The ruins of this abbey, which are close to the town, are very interesting, and sufficiently perfect to show that it was once a structure of great importance; the tower, the interior of the chapel, and particularly the cloisters exhibit great beauty. The places of worship are two Protestant churches, the Catholic cathedral, the Catholic New Abbey (in High Street), the chapel of the Friary, and chapels for Presbyterians, Independents, and Wesleyans. The Catholic cathedral is a fine building in Romanesque style. The palace, on rising ground, and commanding fine views of the town and surrounding districts, will be the permanent residence of the Catholic bishops of Sligo. St. John's, the old Protestant church (originally erected in the 13th cent. and twice rebuilt), is a cruciform structure, in the later style of English architecture. Other public buildings are the town hall and the new assize courts. The last has a frontage to Albert Street of 150 ft., and contains convenient courts and offices; the ground floor consists of a porch, vestibule, public hall, crown and record courts, offices for crown solicitor, barristers' and solicitors' consulting rooms, etc.; the first floor consists of grand jury room, grand jury dining-room, with other rooms. The town hall is a handsome building in modern Italian style; on the ground floor are the exchange, chamber of commerce, library and reading-room, borough court and council chamber, and offices; the upper floor consists of a large assembly room. There are three newsrooms—the Commercial (in Quay Street), the St. John's Catholic (in Albert Street), and the Y.M.C.A. (in Stephen Street). There are also barracks, H.M.'s prison, a fever hospital, a dispensary, national and other free schools, lunatic asylum (in Elizabethan style), and a union workhouse. The model school, on a piece of rising ground in the Mall, is a very fine building. For many years S. has been increasing in importance and commerce. The trade with Liverpool and Glasgow is considerable; and butter, grain, meal, mess beef and pork are the principal articles of exportation. The purchase of grain in the corn market is also extensive, and this, with the butter trade, has been increasing. The butter market is a large establishment, where very considerable weekly purchases are made during the season, which lasts from about May till towards the latter end of the year. The town has a brewery, two corn mills, saw mills, etc. A commodious Custom House and quay add greatly to the shipping interest and convenience of this improving and commercial town. The S. fishery extends more than 100 miles, from Ballina Bridge to Abbey Point. There are also two salmon fisheries. Two lines of steamers sail from this port—the one to Liverpool, the other to Glasgow. The markets for butter and grain are held on Tuesday, and a general market on Saturday; and there are monthly fairs. In the neighbourhood are some cairns and standing stones, supposed to mark the site of a battle.

Slindon (1), pa. and vil., S.W. Sussex, 5 N.W. of Arundel; ac. 2,614; soil light loam and sand, overlying chalk and flint. The church of St. Mary is E. Eng., but traces of a much earlier fabric, possibly built by Archbishop Anselm in the early part of the 12th cent., may be detected; at the east end is a reredos in the Italian style of the 12th cent., with figures of the four Evangelists enamelled in four compartments; on the south side is an altar-tomb of the early part of the 16th cent., with a curious wood effigy of a knight, supposed to represent either Sir Anthony Kempe or Sir Anthony St. Leger. A Catholic church, dedicated to St. Richard, was erected in 1865. There is also an old chapel in S. House (dating from 1696), where the Catholics in the troubled times used to assemble. The lands of S. were given by Henry I. in 1108 to St. Anselm, Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Manor Place was erected in the middle of the 13th cent., and was till lately a "peculiar" of Canterbury; Archbishop Langton died at S., 1228. Later, the estate passed into the hands of the Kempe family. S. House was originally of E. Eng. or E. Dec. work, but seems to have been rebuilt in Elizabeth's reign.

The church of St. Peter (erected in 1861, on the site of an older church) is in E. Dec. style, and retains a curious sculptured female figure, destitute of any inscription, but traditionally said to represent a member of the family of Tregoz. Here is a Congregational chapel. The Village Hall has a library. The charities are small. Edward II. is recorded to have visited S. on his return from Battle Abbey in 1324. S. Lodge, in a well-wooded park of 30 ac., and Strood Park are seats.

Slingsby, pa. and vil., N.R. Yorks., 28 N. of York; ac. 2,570; soil loam and clay, subsoil various. The church of All Saints was rebuilt 1869, in E. Eng. style. In the south chapel lies the mutilated cross-legged effigy of a knight (temp. Henry III.), supposed to represent a member of the Wyville family; the chancel retains a sedile and Dec. piscina. The font is a stone octagon on marble shafts, and there is an alabaster reredos. The Wesleyans have a chapel. The old village maypole, a mast of fir 85 ft. high, is still standing. There are the remains of an ancient castle, supposed to have been erected about 1603, although the upper portions are chiefly of the time of Charles I. Some British remains, principally urns, have been disinterred from local tumuli.

Slipend, ha., pa. of Woodside (q.v.), S. Beds., 2 S.W. of Luton.

Slipton, pa. and vil., N. Northants, 3 W. of Thrapston; ac. 757; soil strong, overlying lias and ironstone. The church of St. John the Baptist is a small building of stone. Here are extensive mines of ironstone.

Slish Mountain, eminence (967 ft.) on south side of Lough Gill, Tirerrill bar., N.E. co. Sligo, Ir., 3 W. of Drumahaire. It is composed of gneiss and granite, forming a dark mass, which presents a striking contrast to the verdure in the vicinity of the lake.

Slitrig Water, stream, W. Roxbs., Sc., rises on the north slope of the Teviotdale watershed, and flows for 11 miles in a N. direction to the Teviot, which it joins at Hawick.

Slitting Mill, ha., pa. of and about 1¼ W.S.W. from Rugeley, Mid Staffs.

Slock-na-Marra Race, channel off north coast of co. Antr., Ir., between Rathlin Island and the mainland.

Sloley, pa. and vil., E. Norf., 5 S. of North Walsham; ac. 718; soil mixed, overlying sand and gravel. The church of St. Bartholomew (restored 1841) is E. Eng.; the font bears representations of the Seven Sacraments. In the chancel is a monument to the Rev. W. Gunn, B.D., fifty-seven years rector. The poor have £30, rent of 21 ac. S. House is a seat.

Sloley Hill, ha., pa. of and adjoining Arley (q.v.), N. Warws.

Sloothby, or Slothby, vil., pa. of Willoughby (q.v.), E. Lincs., 4 S.E. of Alford.

Sloswick, ha., pa. of and 3 S.W. from Worksop (q.v.), N.W. Notts.

Slothby. [SLOOTHBY.]

Slough, mkt. to. (W.), pa. of Upton-with-Chalvey and Stoke Poges (q.v.), S.W. Bucks., 2 N. of Windsor. The church of St. Mary, belonging to the eccl. pa. of Upton, dates from 1837; the Catholics have a chapel, and there are various places of worship for Nonconformists. The British Orphan Asylum, Mackenzie Park, is a large and handsome building; the institution has no endowment. The Leopold Institute and Public Hall, in the High Street, was erected (1887) in memory of Prince Leopold, Duke of Albany; the building consists of a large public hall with stage and dressing-rooms; there is also a smaller hall,

Slyfield. [BOOKHAM, GREAT.]

Slyne, vil., pa. of Bolton-le-Sands (q.v.), N.W. Lancs., about 3 N.N.W. of Lancaster. [SLYNE-WITH-HEST.]

Slyne Head, islet off north-west coast of co. Galway, Ir., 11½ S.W. of Clifden. The islet is situated 2 W.S.W. of the south-west extremity of Connemara. There are several smaller islets between it and the mainland. On a rock hard by are two lighthouses (built 1836), which have a revolving light and a fixed light, visible 15 and 14 miles respectively.

Slyne-with-Hest, tp. on the shore of Morecambe Bay, pa. of Bolton-le-Sands (q.v.), N. Lancs.; ac. 1,143, and 1,906 foreshore. At this place the road across the sands to Cartmel commences. There is a charity of £9 yearly for coals, and of £18 for clothing, for the poor.

Smailholm, pa. and vil. on Eden Water, N. Roxbs., adjoining Berws., Sc., 5½ W. by N. of Kelso; ac. 4,194; soil mostly fertile, partly overlying limestone and trap. The Established church (an ivy-clad edifice) is said to date from 1632. S. Tower is the "Avenel Castle" of Scott's "Monastery," and it also plays a conspicuous part in the "Eve of St. John." The Tower is a square building, with gables and small windows, erected early in the 15th cent.; adjoining it is a courtyard, in which was situated the chapel. Sandyknowe Crags (q.v.), even more closely associated with Scott, are also in the pa.

Smalesmouth, tp., pa. of Greystead (q.v.), W. Northumb., 5 N.W. of Bellingham; ac. 13,365.

Smallberry Green, ha., pa. of Isleworth (q.v.), S.W. Middx., about 2 S.W. of Brentford.

Smallbridge, eccl. pa. and vil., pa. of and about 2 N.E. from Rochdale (q.v.), E. Lancs. The church of St. John the Baptist was built 1834, in E. Eng. style; and a chapel-of-ease (St. Andrew's) was erected in 1894. There are Congregational, Wesleyan, Free Methodist, and Primitive Methodist chapels.

Smallburgh, pa. and vil., E. Norf., 2½ S.W. of Stalham; ac. 1,247; soil rich loam, overlying sand, clay, and gravel. It is on the navigable river Ant, which is crossed by Wayford Bridge, connecting this pa. with Stalham. The church of St. Peter, approached from the Yarmouth road through an avenue of trees, is a small but ancient building (restored 1885). Here are Reformed Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist chapels. The fuel allotment is 43 ac.

Smallcounty, bar., E. co. Lim., Ir.; ac. 44,424. It is bounded on the north by Clanwilliam bar., on the east by co. Tip., on the south by Coshlea and Coshma bars., and on the west by Coshma and Pubblebrien bars. It contains the vil. of Hospital.

Small Dole, ha., pa. of Upper Beeding (q.v.), S. Sussex, 6 N. of Shoreham. There is a Baptist chapel.

Smalley, eccl. pa., tp., and vil., pa. of Morley (q.v.), S.E. Derbys., 6 N.E. of Derby; ac. 1,715. The church of St. John the Baptist was formerly a chapel to Morley. Stainsby House is a seat.

Smallfield, vil., pa. of Ecclesfield (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., adjoining Bradfield.

Smallford, ha. with railway station, pa. of and about 3 E. from St. Albans (q.v.), S. Herts.

Small (or Sma') Glen. [GLENALMOND.]

Small Hythe, eccl. pa. and vil. on the Rother, pa. of and 2½ S. from Tenterden (q.v.), S. Kent. The Perp. church of St. John the Baptist (restored 1884) dates from 1500.

Small Isles, pa., Inner Hebrides, Invs., Sc., consist of the islands of Canna, Eigg, Muck, Rum, and Sandy. (Of these, only Eigg was formerly in Invs., the other four having been recently transferred from Args. by the Boundary Commissioners.) These five islands lie off the coasts of Moidart and Skye, in a curved line extending from north-west to south, and are divided from the large island of Skye by the Cuchullin Sound. Rum and Eigg can only be approached by boat from the east side, the heavy swell from the Atlantic rendering the west coasts inaccessible. The pa. church is on Rum island, and there is another Established church on Eigg.

Smallmouth Caves, N. Dev., about 3 E. of Ilfracombe. From one of them a charming view of the Little Hangman and the coast towards Combe Martin is obtainable. These caves were a favourite hunting-ground of the celebrated naturalist P. H. Gosse, and are mentioned in his "Rambles of a Naturalist on the Devonshire Coast."

Smallmouth Sands, sands on the south coast of Dors., lying between Chesil Bank and Weymouth.

Small Rise, ha., pa. of and adjoining Sandon (q.v.), Mid Staffs.

Smalls Rocks, group of islets off coast of Pembs., 24 W. of Milford. Here is a lighthouse with a fixed light, visible 17 miles.

Smallthorne, eccl. pa., pa. of and 1 S.W. from Norton-in-the-Moors (q.v.), N. Staffs., adjoining Burslem. St. Saviour's Church (1850) is in E. Eng. style. There are Wesleyan, Primitive Methodist, and Methodist New Connexion chapels, and a Working Men's Club and reading-room.

Smallwood, eccl. pa., tp., and vil., pa. of Astbury (q.v.), S.E. Chesh., 4½ E.S.E. of Sandbach; ac. 2,186. The church of St. John the Baptist was built 1845, in E. Eng. style. The Wesleyans have a chapel. There are several charities.

Smannell, ha., pa. of and 2½ N.E. from Andover (q.v.), N. Hants. [KNIGHTS ENHAM WITH SMANNELL.]

Smardale, tp., pa. of and 2½ S.W. from Kirkby Stephen (q.v.), E. Westmd.; ac. 1,657. S. Hall (now occupied as a farmhouse) is a mansion of the Late Tudor or Jacobean period.

Smarden, pa. and to., S. Kent, 10 W. of Ashford; ac. 5,386; soil various, overlying clay. The church of St. Michael is E. Eng.; in the chancel are sedilia and piscina and a low side window. There are chapels for General and Particular Baptists, and a reading-room and library. Turner's charity of £22 is for clothing and a distribution of wheat, and the school has an endowment. Romden, formerly a seat, was partially taken down in 1866 and converted into a farmhouse; the tower, however, has been suffered to remain, as well as other portions of the original structure. Many of the old farmhouses have picturesque timber-framed gables, and Marley Farm retains a chimney, in the centre of the house, consisting merely of a wooden framework filled in with coarse plaster. S. was once a mkt. to.; linen was formerly manufactured here, and flax was cultivated in the pa. to a comparatively recent period.

Smarmore, pa., Ardee bar., S. co. Louth, Ir., 6 S.W. of Dunleer; ac. 1,595. S. Castle and park is a seat.

Smearlagh, stream, N.E. co. Kerry, Ir., rises in Trughanacmy bar., 5 N.N.W. of Castleisland, and runs 10 miles through Clanmaurice bar. to the Feale, 3 miles above Listowel, the general direction of its course being N. by E.

Smeaton, Great, pa., tp., and vil., N.R. Yorks., 7 N. of Northallerton; ac. of pa. 5,229, of tp. 1,536; soil and subsoil clay. The church of St. Eloy is an ancient building. The pa. reading-room contains a library of about 1,000 volumes. S. Manor is a seat.

Smeaton Kirk. [KIRK SMEATON.]

Smeaton, Little (1), tp., pa. of Birkby (q.v.), N.R. Yorks., about 6 N. of Northallerton; ac. 1,001. There are several tumuli in this neighbourhood and some remains of an ancient camp; Roman remains have been found at various times.

Smeaton, Little (2), tp. on the Went, pa. of and 2½ S.W. from Womersley (q.v.), W.R. Yorks.; ac. 1,238. The Wesleyans have a chapel. There are a few small charities. In the tp. is a malting kiln.

Smeeth, pa. and vil., S. Kent, 4½ S.E. of Ashford; ac. 1,619; soil various, overlying ragstone. The church of St. Mary is Norm. and E. Eng.; in the chancel aisle is a monument with two marble figures to Priscilla Scott (1648) and Mary Scott (1652). Fairs are held on May 15 and September 29. Scott's Hall formerly stood near the foot of the hill, east of the vil., and was the property and residence of the family of Scott, supposed to have descended from Balliol. Sir W. Scott, Knight Marshal of England in 1350, was the first of the family to reside here. The Paddock is a seat.

Smeeton Westerby, eccl. pa. and tp., pa. of Kibworth Beauchamp (q.v.), S. Leics., 6 N.W. of Market Harborough; ac. 1,391. Christ Church (1849) is in Dec. style. There is a Baptist chapel.

Smerrill. [MIDDLETON AND SMERRILL.]

Smerwick Harbour, inlet of the sea, Corkaguiny bar., W. co. Kerry, Ir., 5½ N.W. of Dingle. The harbour penetrates 3 miles inland, its breadth in most parts being about 1½ mile. It is memorable as the scene of the Spanish attempts at invasion in 1579-80. The fortress erected by those who accompanied Sanders, the Papal Legate, in 1579 was strengthened in the following year; but it was reduced by the English, and the Spaniards were put to the sword.

Smestow, stream, S. Staffs., rises about 2 W. of Wolverhampton, and flows in a S. direction for about 7 miles to the Stour, which it joins about 3 W. of Stourbridge.

Smethcote, ha., pa. of Middle (q.v.), Mid Salop, 1 N.W. of Hadnall.

Smethcott, pa. and vil., W. Salop, 9 S.W. of Shrewsbury; ac. 2,705; soil clay, sand, and loam, overlying clay and gravel. The church of St. Michael is E. Eng. The school has a small endowment.

Smethwick (1), to. and populous manufacturing dis., pa. of Harborne (q.v.), S. Staffs., 3 W. of Birmingham. The Birmingham and Dudley and Wolverhampton canals pass through S., the new canal having been cut to the depth of 60 or 80 ft. under the old one; over it are several bridges, the most remarkable of which is the "Summit Bridge," an elegant iron structure. There are several eccl. pas. with modern churches, a Catholic church, and places of worship for various Nonconformist bodies. The Public Hall, in High Street (1866), has attached to it the offices of the Local Board of Health; adjoining are the petty sessions court and free library, together with the offices of the gas works The free library contains a reading-room and librarian's and other apartments; the hall will hold about 1,000 persons. The Public Baths, in Rolfe Street, cover an area of 1,213 square yds. In Crockett's Lane are four almshouses for as many married couples, who occupy them rent free, providing their own board and clothes. Victoria Park, Bearwood Hill, formed in 1888, occupies an area of 35½ ac.; a carriage drive runs round the grounds, which contain a pool or lake of 2½ ac. S. contains various works and manufactories of great extent and importance. The glass, chemical, and lighthouse works, where upwards of 2,000 workpeople are employed, cover more than 40 ac.; there are also machine works employing about 2,000 persons. Other important industries are the Smisby, pa. and vil., S. Derbys., 9 S.E. of Burton; ac. 1,271; soil various, overlying gravel. The church of St. James is chiefly Dec., but its tower (added towards the end of the 15th cent.) is Perp.; the nave is separated from the aisle by three low-pointed 14th-cent. arches, and has a flat roof supported by seven moulded tie-beams; the chancel and tower walls are panelled with 16th-cent. oak carved in the linen-fold pattern. Against the west wall is a 14th-cent. monument, in the form of an alabaster slab, with the figure of a lady sculptured in high relief and an inscription, now almost effaced. In the chancel is a handsome monument dating from 1627. There is a Wesleyan chapel. Within 200 yds. of the vil. is the spot where the tournament, described by Sir W. Scott in "Ivanhoe," was held. Old Park House is a seat.

Smite, river, Leics. and Notts., rises in N. Leics., about 2 S.E. of Nether Broughton, and flows in a N.E. direction for about 10 miles to the Devon, S. Notts., which it joins near Whatton.

Smockington, or Little Copston, ha., pa. of and adjoining Wolvey (q.v.), N.E. Warws. It was formerly much more considerable than it is now.

Smoo, Cave of, pa. of and nearly 2 E. from Durness (q.v.), N. Suths., Sc. It consists of three caverns hollowed out of the limestone, the outer chamber 33 ft. high and 203 ft. long, the inner about 70 ft. long by 30 ft. wide, with a high arched roof, and the third about 120 ft. long by 8 ft. wide; the last cannot be seen by ordinary light.

Snae Fell, mountain (2,034 ft.), pa. of Lezayre (q.v.), N.E. I. of M., 4 S.S.W. of Ramsey. The mountain, which forms the highest point in a slaty range, has a fine rounded outline. It is the most elevated spot in the Isle of Man, and commands a magnificent view, embracing the whole of the island and part of England, Wales, Scotland, and Ireland.

Snailwell, pa. and vil., E. Cambs., 3 N. of Newmarket; ac. 2,014; soil various. The church of St. Peter (restored 1878) is an ancient edifice of flint with stone quoins and windows. In the churchyard is the stone tomb of a priest of the 15th cent., with a cross on the upper slab; the coffin was discovered in the wall of the south aisle at the time of the restoration. There are 33 ac. of fen land, and a small allotment of arable land for the poor.

Snainton, chap., tp., and vil., pa. of Brompton (q.v.), N.R. Yorks., 8½ S.W. of Scarborough; ac. 4,836, including marsh land. The chapel of St. Mary is a plain building of stone; in front of it is a handsome Norm. archway. The Primitive Methodists and Wesleyans have places of worship. Wydale, a modern stone building very pleasantly situated, and commanding extensive views of the surrounding country, is a seat.

Snaith (Teut. snaid = "separated piece of land"), pa., tp. (Snaith and Cowick), and small mkt. to. (TH.), on the south bank of the Aire, W.R. Yorks.; ac. of pa. 33,854, of tp. 5,570; soil sandy, overlying clay and peat. The to. is 7 W. of Goole, which is also in the pa. The church of St. Lawrence (restored 1868), belonging in the 12th cent. to a Benedictine monastery, is chiefly E. Eng. and Perp.; the tower (about 30 ft. square) originally had lateral chapels, that on the north side serving as the consistory court of this pa., which was once a "peculiar"; the south porch retains stone benches, and until 1868 had a parvise, used as the registry of the "peculiar"; the stairs remain; in the chancel is the matrix of a brass of a mitred abbot; the north aisle or chapel belongs to the Stapletons, Barons Beaumont, and contains a fine marble bust to Lady Elizabeth Stapleton (d. 1683). In the Dawnay chapel (on the south side) is an altar-tomb to John Acclom (d. 1436), who married one of the Daunays, and another altar-tomb (covered with a fine slab of black marble and adorned with shields of arms) to Sir John Daunay (d. 1493); on the east wall of this chapel are suspended some relics of Sir Thomas Daunay (d. 1642). Snaith and Cowick. [SNAITH.]

Snape (1), pa. and vil., E. Suff., 3½ S. by E. of Saxmundham; ac. 2,100; soil in some parts good mixed, and in others light and sandy, overlying sand and gravel. The church of St. John the Baptist (restored 1864) is E. Eng., with a western embattled tower said to be Saxon. Here is a Primitive Methodist chapel (1862). The interest of £200 is annually distributed in coal. In the pa. are two barrows; and there are sand and clay pits, and brick-earth. In the barrows have been found rings, coins, and other memorials. S. Priory, in the immediate neighbourhood of the vil., a cell of Colchester, has no remains of its former importance, but skeletons, coins, and other relics have been exhumed. A horse fair is held on August 11.

Snape (2), tp. and vil., pa. of and 1½ N. from Well (q.v.), N.R. Yorks.; ac. 4,451. S. Castle or Hall, at the west end of the vil., is now partly in ruins, but a portion of the fabric is occupied as a farmhouse. It was rebuilt by the Latimers in or about the reign of Henry VI.; one of the rooms is fitted up as a chapel-of-ease. Thorp Perrow, in a fine park of 200 ac., is a seat.

Snarehill, Great and Little (formerly extra-parochial), pa., S. Norf., lying S. and E. of Thetford, on the borders of Suff.; ac. 2,155; soil sandy, subsoil chalky. There are many large tumuli in the neighbourhood, supposed to indicate the site of a battlefield where St. Edmund, King of the East Angles, was defeated and taken prisoner by the Danes, who caused him to be fastened to a tree and shot to death with arrows (870). S. House, a modern mansion of brick in a fine park, is a seat.

Snaresbrook, dis. with railway station, pa. of Wanstead (q.v.), S.W. Essex, 6¾ N.E. of Shoreditch. The Merchant Seamen's Orphan Asylum and the Infant Orphan Asylum are both in S. The Eagle pond or lake is a sheet of water about 7 ac. in extent, now secured to the public, and in summer frequented by anglers. At the east end of the lake is the "Eagle" hotel, a well-known and favourite resort, with large gardens and pleasure-grounds.

Snareston, or Snarestone, pa. and vil., W. Leics., on the Warws. border; ac. 1,325. The church is dedicated to St. Bartholomew. There is a small Wesleyan chapel. The charities amount to £2 11s. yearly, and the school has a small endowment.

Snarford, pa., Mid Lincs., 7 S.W. of Market Rasen; ac. 1,131; soil clay and sand, overlying clay and gravel. The church of St. Lawrence is Norm., E. Dec., and Perp.; it contains a series of stately but faded and dilapidated monuments of the St. Poll (or St. Paule) family. The earliest of these is a canopied altar-tomb enriched with ten statuettes, and bearing effigies of Sir Thomas St. Poll, Knight (d. 1582), and his wife, together with an inscription; the next, according to date, consists of two effigies placed within a recess in the north wall of the chantry, adjoining the chancel, representing Sir George St. Poll (d. 1613) and Frances (Wray) his wife. On the south chancel wall is an inscription on brass, giving the conjugal history of this Lady St. Poll, who, in the same year her husband died, married (as his second wife) Robert, Baron Rich of Lieze, created Earl of Warwick August 6, 1618; in the church are memorial busts of the earl (who died in 1618) and of the countess, with an inscription. On the floor is a dark grey slab, with an inscribed brass to Joan (St. Poll), wife of John Tornay, of Caynby, Esq. (d. 1521), and on the floor of the chantry chapel is a slab inscribed to George Brownlow Doughty, Esq. (d. 1743).

Snargate, pa. and vil., S. Kent, 5½ N.W. of New Romney, on the road to Appledore; ac. 1,552 and 25 water; soil light, overlying sand. The land is chiefly in pasture. The church of St. Dunstan (restored 1872) in its external features seems to be wholly Perp., but the arcades of the nave and some other portions are E. Eng. The chancel, which retains its piscina, is separated from both its adjacent chapels by two Pointed arches on either side, supported on octagonal pillars; on its north side is a Perp. tomb, and in the north chapel is a square piscina and some traces of an altar. The rood staircase remains.

Snar Water, stream, S.W. Lanarks., Sc., rises in the pa. of Crawfordjohn (q.v.), and flows in a N. direction for 6 miles to Duneaton Water, which it joins about 2 S. of Crawfordjohn.

Snatchwood, ha., pa. of Trevethin (q.v.), W. Mon., 1 S. of Abersychan railway station.

Snave (1), pa., S. Kent, 9 S. of Ashford; ac. 1,453; soil stiff mould, overlying stiff clay. The church of St. Augustine (restored 1873) is chiefly Norm.

Snave (2). [COOMHOLA.]

Snead, pa., E. Montgoms., on the Salop border, 2 N. by W. of Bishop's Castle; ac. 644; soil mostly fertile. The church (dedication unknown) is an ancient Gothic edifice.

Sneaton, pa. and vil., N.R. Yorks., 3 S. of Whitby; ac. 4,851; soil various, overlying stone and gravel. The church of St. John (1823) is in E. Gothic style. The font dates from about 1100.

Sneedham Green, ha., pa. of and ½ S.W. from Upton St. Leonard's (q.v.), Mid Gloucs.

Sneem, fishing vil. and head of petty sess. div., pa. of Kilcrohane (q.v.), S. co. Kerry, Ir., 14 W.S.W. of Kenmare. It is situated at the head of a harbour formed by an inlet of the Kenmare, near the mouth of a small stream crossed by a bridge, and on Kenmare Bay, amongst picturesque surroundings. The Protestant church for Kilcrohane is in this vil.; also a Catholic church with a conspicuous bell-tower, and a parochial school. A butter market is held every Friday, and fairs during the year.

Sneinton, pa., S. Notts., an eastern suburb of Nottingham; ac. 911. It was formerly named "Snottengaton," and is by some thought to have been the original settlement of the to. of Nottingham. The church of St. Stephen (rebuilt 1839) is in E. Eng. style.

Snelland, pa. and vil., Mid Lincs., 9 N.E. of Lincoln; ac.. 1,365; soil gravelly, overlying clay. The church of All Saints (rebuilt 1863) is E. Dec.

Snelsmore, ha., pa. of and 1½ S. from Chieveley (q v.), S. Berks.

Snelson, tp., pa. of Rostherne (q.v.), E. Chesh., 4 S.E. of Knutsford; ac. 428.

Snelston, pa. and vil. on the Dove, W. Derbys., on the borders of Staffs., 2½ S.W. of Ashbourne; ac. 2,178 and 19 water; soil mixed, overlying chiefly gravel and clay. The land is chiefly in pasture for dairy produce. The church of St. Peter (within the grounds of S. Hall) was remodelled and rebuilt almost from the foundation about 1825. The ancient font is an octagon of the Dec. period (c. 1300). In the churchyard is a magnificent old yew-tree. The charities amount to about £25 a year. S. Hall is a seat.

Snetterton, pa. and vil., Mid Norf., 5 S.W. of Attleborough; ac. 2,819; soil and subsoil various. Here was anciently a church dedicated to St. Andrew. The church of All Saints (restored 1857) has chancel, nave, and aisles of the Perp. period, and the porches are E. Eng. The nave is divided from the chancel by a handsome carved screen, painted and gilt. There is a parish-room. The poor receive £3 a year from the Hall farm, left by an unknown donor.

Snettisham, pa. and vil., N.W. Norf., 11 N.N.E. of Lynn, on the coast road to Hunstanton; ac. 5,593; soil various, but chiefly of a good mixed character, overlying principally chalk. The church of St. Mary (restored 1856) is a large and handsome Perp. building. The lofty spire, which may be seen for miles around, forms a landmark for vessels at sea; the chancel is in ruins, and only a small portion is now standing, covered with ivy; the principal entrance is through the finely-groined west porch, above which is a handsome window of six lights. In the church is a curious font; and there is a marble monument with effigy to Sir Wymond Carye (d. 1612), a brass with effigies to John Cremer (d. 1610), Anne his wife, and seven children; and a brass effigy of a female (d. 1500). The transept contains the vaults of the Le Stranges. Here are Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist chapels. The grammar school was founded in 1708, and reorganised in 1875. A Public Hall was erected in 1890. There is a fuel allotment of 17 ac. A statute fair for hiring servants is held on Oct. 12. In the pa. are chalk-pits, lime-kilns, and quarries of carr-stone. Many objects of antiquity, including a number of celts, have been found here at different periods. The Old Hall, a spacious mansion of brick in the Elizabethan style, surrounded by well-wooded grounds, and the New Hall, on Ken Hill, commanding extensive views over The Wash, Lincs., and the Sandringham Woods, and surrounded by a park, are seats.

Sneyd, eccl. pa., pa. of Burslem (q.v.), N.W. Staffs. The church of Holy Trinity was built 1852, in Dec. style.

Snibstone, ha., pa. of Packington (q.v.), S. Leics., about 5 S.E. of Ashby-de-la-Zouch. St. Mary's chapel-of-ease is a small ancient building. Here are extensive collieries. [RAVENSTONE-WITH-SNIBSTONE.]

Snig's End, ha., pas. of Corse, Staunton, and Redmarley (q.v.), N.W. Glouc., about 7 N.W. of Gloucester. The estate consists of a number of small cottages, built about 1840, by the Chartist Association.

Snilesworth, tp., pa. of and 2½ N.W. from Hawnby (q.v.), N.R. Yorks.; ac. 5,132.

Snipehouse, ha., pa. of and about 3 S.E. from Alnwick (q.v.) E. Northumb.

Snitter, tp. and vil., pa. of and 2½ N.W. from Rothbury (q.v.), Mid Northumb.; ac. 1,080.

Snitterby, pa. and vil., N. Lincs., 9 S. of Brigg; ac. 1,684; soil peat, clay, and sand corn-brash, overlying limestone. The church of St. Nicholas (rebuilt 1566–67) is E. Dec. The chalice and paten are of silver, and date from 1568.

Snitterfield, pa. and vil., S.W. Warws., about 4 N.E. of Stratford-on-Avon; ac. 3,764; soil various, overlying marl. The church of St. James (restored 1882), formerly belonging to the priory of St. Sepulchre, Warwick, is Perp. The Wesleyans have a chapel (1883), and there is a newsroom with a library and billiard-room. On leaving the vil. for Stratford, a beautiful and most extensive view is obtained over a rich and highly-cultivated country. Pursuing a straight and westerly direction, King's Lane is entered, through which, after the battle of Worcester, when leaving the hospitable and sheltering retreats of Boscobel, Moseley, and Bentley, on his way to the west, the fugitive King Charles II rode before Miss Lane, seated on a pillion, disguised as her groom. Richard Jago, the poet, born at Beaudesert, in this co., Oct. 1, 1715, was many years vicar of this pa.; he died here, May 8, 1781, and is interred in the church. In front of the vicarage are three fine birch-trees, termed the "Three Ladies," planted, it is said, by Jago's three daughters. Ingon Grange is a seat.

Snitterton, ha., pa. of Darley (q.v.), Mid Derbys., about 3½ N.W. of Matlock. [WENSLEY AND SNITTERTON.]

Snittlegarth, pl., pa. of Torpenhow (q.v.), W. Cumb., about 6 N.E. of Cockermouth. Here are earthworks forming a square camp. S. Hall is a seat. [BEWALDETH AND SNITTLEGARTH.]

Snizort, pa., q.s. pa., and ha. on the east side of Skye, Inner Hebrides, Invs., Sc.; ac. 53,280. The surface is marked with flat hills of moderate elevation, partly covered with pasture and partly with heath. The vil. lies at the head of Loch Snizort, 7 N.W. of Portree. The Storr Rock, a remarkable pinnacle of rock about 3 miles from the east coast of the pa., and standing 2,350 ft. above sea-level, can be visited either from Portree (7 miles) or Uig. On the west side of the pa., close to the shore of Loch Snizort, stood the old house of Kingsburgh, where Prince Charles Edward found shelter on his way from South Uist.

Snizort, Loch, sea-loch on the north-west coast of Skye island, Invs., Sc., enters from the Little Minch. It is 9 miles wide at the entrance, and runs inland for about 8½ miles, when it branches into Loch Greshernish on the south and Snizort Beag above. This latter continues inland for about 6 miles.

Snodhill, ha., pa. of Peterchurch (q.v.), W. Herefords., 6 E. of Hay. There are some remains of S. Castle, which existed in the reign of Stephen.

Snodland, pa. and vil. on the Medway, N.E. Kent, 6½ S.W. of Rochester; ac. 1,879; soil gravelly, overlying clay. The church of All Saints (restored) is chiefly E. Eng., the walls containing fragments of Roman bricks and tiles; there are sedilia and a piscina in the chancel, a piscina in the south aisle, and a small crypt; and the doors to the rood-loft remain. The church contains some brasses, memorials to the Palmer, Tilgham, and Waghorn families, and a tablet to Martha Boynard (1682). There is a Swedenborgian church, Congregational and Primitive Methodist chapels, and a Baptist meeting-room. There is a Working Men's Institute. The charities are small, and the national school is endowed. The pa. contains lime, cement, and paper works. Holborough Court, Ivymeath, and Vales are seats.

Snoreham, formerly a separate pa., now ha., pa. of and ½ N. from Latchingdon (q.v.), S.E. Essex. A sermon was formerly preached annually under a tree here, but the custom has long been discontinued. S. Hall is a farmhouse.

Snoring, Great, pa. and vil. on the Stiffkey, N. Norf., 3½ N. by E. of Fakenham; ac. 1,645; soil mixed, overlying clay. The church of St. Mary the Virgin is Dec.; the interior retains some stone stalls and several monuments. The rectory-house is a fine specimen of ornamental brickwork; its elaborate south front has been in part restored. There is a Primitive Methodist chapel. The charities are Pearson's of £14 yearly for bread, and Alvis's of £6 5s. The workhouse of Walsingham Union is in this pa.

Snoring, Little, pa. and vil., N. Norf., about 3 N.E. of Fakenham, on the road to Wells; ac. 1,528; soil various, overlying clay. The church of St. Andrew is Trans. Norm. and later; the porch is of very curious character, having a stilted horse-shoe arch, under which is a pointed one ornamented with zigzag work, and under this again a round-headed doorway, with shafts in the jambs, having sculptured capitals. The font is Late Norm., and is ornamented with sculptured foliage. Here is a Primitive Methodist chapel. The poor have the rent of 8 ac. of land, now let in allotments of £2 an acre; also 17 ac. to cut for fuel.

Snowdon (= "Hill of Snow"), mountain (3,571 ft.), Mid Carnarvs., 10 S.E. of Carnarvon. S. is the highest and also the grandest mountain in England and Wales. Its Welsh name is Eryri, signifying "Eagle Top." Including the spurs and lower summits gathered round the central mass, it embraces an area extending about 12 miles from north to south and 6 miles from east to west, bounded by Llanrug, Bettwsgarmon, Beddgelert, Nantgwynnant, Capel Curig, and Llanberis. This is exclusive of the greater part of the mountainous tract called "Snowdonia," which stretches from Penmaenmawr to the vicinity of Nevin. S. has five distinct summits—Y Wyddfa (3,571 ft.), Yr Aran, Lliwedd, Crib-y-Ddysgyl, and Cribgoch. From the main portion in the centre five ridges extend outwards like the spokes of a wheel, separating as many ravines, the sides of which are almost perpendicular. The most striking feature in the magnificent view from the summit of Y Wyddfa is afforded by the peaks, coombes, and tarns immediately below. A railway to be worked by electricity was constructed in 1894–95; it ascends from a height of 350 ft. to one of 3,490 ft. above the sea. The railway passes over several viaducts, one of which is 500 ft. in length, and has 14 arches with a span of 30 ft.

Snowdonman Fell, mountain, N.R. Yorks., about 6 N.E. of Askrigg.

Snowshill, pa. and vil., N.E. Gloucs., 7 S.W. of Chipping Camden; ac. 2,294; soil brash, overlying rock. The church of St. Bartholomew (rebuilt 1864) is in E. Eng. style. There is a small charity.

Snydale, tp., pa. of Normanton (q.v.) W.R. Yorks., 4 S.W. of Pontefract; ac. 1,060. The tp. contains a church mission room and Congregational and Primitive Methodist chapels. There are collieries. S. Hall is a seat.

Rothley, Cossington, Mount Sorrel, Barrow, Loughborough, Normanton, Sutton Bonnington, and Ratcliff to the Trent, which it joins 9 S.W. of Nottingham and 8 E.S.E. of Derby. From Loughborough to its union with the Trent it divides Leics. from Notts. The course of the river lies through a rich pastoral district. Some of the most interesting scenery on its banks is between Rothley and Loughborough, Charnwood Forest being situated a short distance to the west, and a range of wolds rising above the east side of the valley. By artificial means the river has been made navigable as far as Leicester. Its length is 40 miles.

Soay, island, pa. of Bracadale (q.v.), Skye, Invs., Sc., south-west of Loch Scavaig. It is 3 miles long by nearly 2 wide, but is nearly divided by two bays, indenting it in the middle. It rises in the north portion to 455 ft.

Soberton, pa. and large scattered vil. on the Meon, E. Hants, 15 S.W. of Petersfield; ac. 5,873; soil chalk, clay, and loam, overlying gravel, chalk, and flint. The church of St. Peter (restored 1881) is E. Eng., Dec., and Perp. Bishop Curle died and was buried here in 1647. There are several ancient monuments dating from 1580, and a memorial to a daughter of Dr. Walter Curle, Bishop of Winchester, dated 1709. In the leper window is a curious piece of stained glass, the arms of the Cardinal de Beaufort. On the west front of the tower, and in the centre of the string-course beneath the parapet, there is a device of a death's head, having the head of a man with a key on one side, and the head of a woman with a pail on the other; in explanation of this device, it may be stated that in the family of Anson, the celebrated circumnavigator, who had a manor house at Soberton, there lived for many years a butler and dairymaid, who had each saved a considerable sum of money; they married, and, having no family, the question arose how they should dispose of their wealth, which ended in their determining to build a tower to the old parish church, and the device is said to represent the butler with his key and the dairymaid with her pail. In the church is also an old Saxon coffin of sandstone, found about 1880 in a field near the church; it contained an almost perfect skeleton encased in cement. The Free Methodists have a chapel.

Sock, ha., pa. of and adjoining Mudford (q.v.), S.E. Somerset.

Sock Augh, mountain (2,032 ft.), pa. of Tarland and Migvie (q.v.), Mid Abers., Sc.

Sockbridge and Tirril, tp., pa. of Barton (q.v.), N. Westmd., about 3 S.W. of Penrith; ac. 1,195. There is a Wesleyan chapel at Tirril. S. House, now a school, is dated 1699, and was formerly the residence of Wordsworth's grandfather. S. Hall, now a farmhouse, is a mansion of the 15th and 16th cents., on the south bank of the Eamont.

Sockburn, pa. and tp. (wholly in Dur.) on the Tees, S. Dur. and N.R. Yorks., 7 S.W. of Yarm; ac. of pa. 2,795, of tp. 710. The church of All Saints, on the Yorkshire side of the river, is a plain building. S. anciently belonged to the family of Conyers, one of whom, Sir John Conyers, a knight of the 11th cent., is said to have slain a large "worm" or serpent which infested these parts, and to have received this estate as a reward, on the tenure of rendering up his victorious sword to every new Bishop of Durham entering the diocese at this point. S. Hall is in Domestic Gothic style. In the hall is preserved a cross-legged effigy in chain armour, said to represent the worm-slayer, and the traditional sword is also kept here. Near the hall are the ruins of an ancient church dating from the 12th or 13th cent., but partially demolished 1838, and some remains yet exist of a still earlier building.

Sock Dennis, pa., S.E. Somerset, 1 S. of Ilchester; ac. 666.

Sodbury, Chipping. [Chipping Sodbury.]

Sodbury, Little, pa. and vil., S.W. Glouc., 14 N.E. of Bristol; ac. 1,092; soil and subsoil clayey. The old church of St. Adeline, a Perp. building, has been disused since 1859; the new church is in Perp. style. The Baptists have a chapel. There are remains of a Roman camp. William Tyndale resided here c. 1520. L. S. House is now a farm.

Sodbury, Old, pa. and vil., S.W. Glouc., 14 N.E. of Bristol; ac. 3,727; soil mixed, overlying clay and limestone. The church of St. John the Baptist (rebuilt 1858) is of mixed periods, and contains a curious wood monument dating from 1320. Here are two Baptist chapels. The pa. contains remains of a Roman encampment. Lye Grove House, an Elizabethan building, is a seat.

Soderick, Port. [Port Soderick.]

Sod Island, islet in the estuary of the Shannon, 9½ W. by N. of Lim., Ir. Here is a fixed light, visible 5 miles.

Softly. [Lynesack and Softly.]

Soham (1), pa. and to., head of a Co. Co. dis. and a polling-place for the east div. of the co., N.E. Cambs., 6 S.E. of Ely; ac. 12,706. The pa. is important and extensive, being in one direction more than 9 miles in length. The Fen, which covers 8,000 ac., has now, owing to the superior method of drainage, been brought into a high state of cultivation; there was formerly a large mere or lake on the west side of the town. Here are many extensive orchards and gardens, and large quantities of fruit, especially plums, are yearly sent to London, Norwich, Liverpool, Newcastle, Bradford, Leeds, and Manchester. The church of St. Andrew (restored 1879–80) is a cruciform edifice, chiefly Trans.-Norm., with portions and insertions of later date; the chancel is lighted by Dec. windows, and the east window has been considered to be one of the best specimens of that period; on each side of the window is a small niche with traces of painting; the north wall retains a fresco of a bishop in the act of benediction (uncovered in 1849), and it would seem that the whole chancel was at one time ornamented in this way; on the south side are ancient stone sedilia and a piscina, and there are finely-carved altar rails of oak; the easternmost the two chapels (built in the 14th cent.) retains a stone altar at the east end, an aumbry, and an irregular oblong tombstone with incised lettering, as well as some old glass; the other chapel is of Late Perp. date, and has on its east wall a monument to Edward Bernes, Esq., and Dorothie (Drurye) his wife (d. 1598); the chapel is enclosed at the west end by a very perfect and elaborately wrought parclose screen (restored 1880); in the south transept is an E. Eng. piscina and a nearly illegible inscription, and shields of arms to some member of the Dowman family, and on the east wall a brass with inscription to John Thornton, gent. (d. 1598), and Ann (Drurie) his wife; the north transept contains an altar-tomb of the 15th cent., and a large marble slab, inscribed but undated, to Thomas Dockwra and his wife; the south aisle retains an aumbry; on the south side of the nave is a small brass to Olliver Robins (d. 1608), and Katherin (Salisbury) his wife, and at the west end are ten ancient stalls with misereres, formerly in the chancel; the north porch is Perp., and has a stoup; the south porch, of the 14th cent., has a large sundial over the entrance. In the churchyard, near the north porch, is the grave of Mary D'Aye (d. 1765), great-granddaughter of Cromwell. There are Congregational, Wesleyan, Baptist, and Primitive Methodist chapels. The town has several almshouses, founded in 1582, and occupied by poor and aged persons, to whom a portion of the fen lands was allotted in lieu of common rights. The other charities are considerable. The endowed grammar school (founded 1687) was reopened 1881 under a new scheme as a middle-class school. In the Station Road is the People's Hall, containing reading and recreation rooms. A cattle fair is held on May 9, and a pleasure fair or feast on the Monday before the Nativity of St. John the Baptist (June 24), and continues for three days. The Liberal and Conservative associations have club-houses, comprising large rooms for meetings, and reading, coffee, and billiard rooms.

Soham (2). [EARL SOHAM, MONK SOHAM.]

Soho, dis. of Central London, E. Middx., 1½ W. of St. Paul's. S. comprises the eccl. pas. of St. Anne [ST. ANNE, SOHO] and St. Mary the Virgin. "So—hoe," a cry raised by huntsmen when they caught sight of the hare, had become the name of the ground on which Soho Square stands as far back as 1632. As the Duke of Monmouth lived in a house on the south side of Soho Square, "Soho" was the watchword of his followers at Sedgemoor. In the latter part of the 17th and during the 18th cent. S. was a fashionable quarter. Among noted persons who occupied houses in Soho Square were Sir Cloudesley Shovel (d. 1707), Lord Chancellor Macclesfield (d. 1732), Alderman Beckford (d. 1770), Field-Marshal Conway (d. 1795), and Sir Joseph Banks (d. 1820). The statue of Charles II., in the middle of the square, was taken down in 1876. S. Bazaar, the first institution of the kind established in England, dates from 1816.

Soken, The, district in N.E. Essex, comprising the pas. of Kirby-le-Soken, Thorpe-le-Soken, and Walton-le-Soken. The name is derived from the Anglo-Saxon soc = a place privileged to hold local courts. Other peculiar privileges enjoyed were exemption from archidiaconal and commissary jurisdiction, power to administer and execute laws for themselves, and the equal right of a wife with her husband in the ownership of land.

Solent, The, channel in S.W. Hants, between the mainland and the I. of W., 8 S. of Southampton. The S. extends 15 W.S.W. from Southampton Water and Spithead on the east to the open Channel on the west. It is bounded on the south by the coast of the I. of W. from West Cowes, in the extreme north of the island, to the Needles, which form its west termination. The channel forms two slight curves, the upper of which is concave towards Hants, the lower towards the I. of W. It ranges in width from 1 to 2 miles and in depth from 4 to 12 fathoms, the more westerly portion being the deeper. On the Hants coast, which is low and wooded, there are several gentlemen's seats. The part of the I. of W. contiguous to the S. consists mostly of rolling downs, broken by picturesque valleys, in one of which stands the vil. of Yarmouth. The navigation of the S. is somewhat difficult, but it furnishes a secure and well-sheltered anchorage.

Sole Street, ha., pa. of and 1 S.W. from Cobham (q.v.), Mid Kent. There is a church mission room.

Solfach. [SOLVA.]

Solihull, pa. and small to., head of petty sess. div., U. and Co. Co. dis., N. Warws., 6½ S.E. of Birmingham, on the road to Warwick; ac. 11,939. The church of St. Alphege is a large cruciform structure; the west end of the nave and the south aisle are Late Perp.; the rest of the church and the lower part of the tower are Dec.; north of the chancel is a small chapel, and beneath it a groined crypt; the chancel retains a piscina under a richly-canopied niche, and there is a plainer one in the vestry. Of former rectors of this place may be mentioned John Feckenham, D.D. (alias Howman), (so called from his birthplace, Feckenham Forest, in Worcestershire), a noted personage in the religious disturbances during the reigns of Mary and Elizabeth; he was for ten years rector here, and afterwards Dean of St. Paul's and Abbot of Westminster, being the last mitred abbot who sat in the House of Peers. He died a prisoner in Wisbech Castle in 1585. The Catholic church is dedicated to St. Augustine of England; and there is a Congregational chapel. The grammar school was founded by Richard II. and reorganised in 1879. The Public Hall was erected in 1876, at a cost of £2,500. S. has a convalescent home for twelve poor children, and a hospital for infectious diseases. Berry Hall and Malvern Hall are seats; the latter is approached by iron gates with stone pillars, erected from an old design of Inigo Jones, and stands in a park of more than 150 ac.

Sollershope, pa., S.E. Herefords., 6 N. of Ross; ac. 1,152; soil clayey and loamy, overlying limestone rock. The church of St. Michael (restored 1885) is in Dec. style.

Solloghodbeg, pa., Clanwilliam bar., S.W. co. Tip., Ir., about 3 N. of Tipperary; ac. 2,201. There is an abundance of limestone.

Solloghodmore, pa., Clanwilliam bar., S.W. co. Tip., Ir., about 2 N.W. of Tipperary; ac. 6,657. Here is a Catholic church. The pa. contains part of the vil. of Limerick Junction.

Sollom, ha., pa. of and ½ S. from Tarleton (q.v.), W. Lancs.

Solomon's Temple, heap of stones on the summit of a hill, about 2 S. of Buxton, N.E. Derbys. It is 1,510 ft. above sea-level, and commands an extensive view.

Solport, tp., pa. of Stapleton (q.v.), N. Cumb., 8 N.E. of Longtown; ac. 3,226. There is a Presbyterian chapel and a Friends' meeting-house. Shank Castle is now occupied as a farmhouse.

Solva, or Solfach, small seaport on St. Bride's Bay, pa. of Whitchurch-by-Haverfordwest (q.v.), W. Pembs., 3 E. of St. David's. The vil., which comprises two portions—Upper and Lower S.—is picturesquely situated in a deep narrow glen. The places of worship include a chapel-of-ease in Gothic style at Upper S., and Baptist, Calvinistic Methodist, and Congregational chapels. The harbour affords good anchorage, and has a quay where corn is shipped. The climate is healthy, and the place is much frequented by visitors during the summer. Llanunwas is a seat.

Solway Firth, an inlet of the Irish Sea, between Scotland and England, extending inland for about 49 miles in a N.E. direction. At its mouth (reckoning Burrow Head as the extreme point on the north) it is about 32 miles wide, but this gradually lessens, with occasional expansions, to about 2 miles. The Urr, Nith, Annan, Dee, Pow Water, Lochar Water, Cree, and Bladenoch on the Scottish side; the Esk, Eden, Wampool, Weaver, Ellen, and Derwent on the English side are the chief rivers emptying themselves into the S. Firth. The principal bays on the north side are Wigtown Bay, Kirkcudbright Bay, and the estuary of the Nith; Wampool estuary, Moricambe Bay, and Allonby Bay on the English side. At certain seasons the tide comes in with very great rapidity, forming the "Bore," when waves of 3 or 4 ft. are frequently seen. The fisheries of the S. Firth are various and extensive. The Solway railway viaduct (opened 1869), extending from Annan, S. Dumfs., Sc., to Bowness, N. Cumb., is 1,960 yds. long.

Solway Moss, pl., pa. of Kirkandrews-upon-Esk (q.v.), N. Cumb., 3 E. of Longtown, on the Scottish border. It is the site of a battle (1542) between the Scots and English Borderers, in which the Scots were completely defeated.

Somborne, Kings. [KINGS SOMBORNE.]

Somborne, Little, pa. and small vil., W. Hants, 2 S.E. of Stockbridge; ac. 1,934; soil loam, overlying chalk. The church of All Saints is a small ancient flint building. Somborne House, standing in a park, is a seat.

Somerby (1), pa. and vil., E. Leics., 5 W. of Oakham; ac. 1,470; land rocky, and chiefly used for grazing. The church of All Saints, the chancel of which was restored 1885, is of various periods, Norm., E. Eng., and Dec. One of the stained windows in the chancel is a memorial to Colonel F. G. Burnaby, R.H.G., killed at the battle of Abu Klea, 1885. The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have chapels. There is a Working Men's Institute and an Oddfellows' Hall. The charities amount to about £51 yearly.

Somerby (2), or Somerby-by-Grantham, pa. and vil., S. Lincs., 3½ S.E. of Grantham; ac. 2,990; soil various, overlying part stone and part clay. The church of St. Mary Magdalen (restored 1876) is chiefly E. Eng., but with a Dec. chancel and clerestory, a fine Norm. chancel arch, and a Late Perp. priest's doorway. At the east end of the chancel are two statue brackets, and the aisle also retains a bracket and an aumbry, and in one of the nave windows are the Threckingham arms; in the south porch is a recumbent effigy of a knight (of the time of Edward II.) presumed to represent a member of the De Somerby family, formerly lords of this pa.; in the chancel are two mural monuments of marble to Elizabeth (Cartwright), wife of Sir John Brownlow, subsequently (1718) created Baron Charleville and Viscount Tyrconnel; and to Jane, daughter of Sir Richard Brownlow, Bart., of Humby, and wife of Peregrine (Bertie), 2nd Duke of Ancaster (d. 1670); there are other mural monuments to the Cheyney and Hotchkin families; in the chancel are two brasses—one of 1590, and the other is to a brother of Bradshaw the regicide.

Somerby (3), or Somerby-by-Brigg, pa., N. Lincs., 4½ N.W. of Caistor; ac. 975; soil alluvial, overlying chalk on the Wolds. The 11th-cent. church of St. Margaret (restored 1884–85) has several monuments to the Weston family, and the recumbent effigy of a cross-legged knight in chain mail. S. Hall is a seat.

Somerby (4), ha., pa. of and just S. from Corringham (q.v.), N.W. Lincs. It is mentioned in Domesday Book as "Sumerdebi." S. Hall, a seat, is said to date back to Elizabeth's time. In a field adjoining, at the west of the house, is the site of an ancient Roman encampment.

Somerby-by-Grantham. [SOMERBY (2).]

Somercotes, eccl. pa. and large vil., pa. of Alfreton (q.v.), E. Derbys., 1½ N. of Pye Bridge. The church of St. Thomas was erected in 1852. The Primitive, Wesleyan, and Free Methodists have chapels. There is a Working Men's Institute, reading-rooms, etc. A market is held every Friday.

Somercotes, North, pa. and vil. near the German Ocean, E. Lincs., 6¼ N. of Saltfleetby station; ac. 4,806; soil sandy and loamy. The church of St. Peter is apparently E. Eng.; the south aisle is wide, the north narrow; both had a chantry at the east end, and in the latter an ancient altar stone and a piscina remain; the slab of the high altar and one support lie near the north door; in the chancel is a slab incised with a stepped floriated cross; in the north porch is a stone coffin-lid, used as a doorstep. The font is octagonal, and is supported on eight marble shafts; on the sides are shields Somercotes, South, pa. and vil., E. Lincs., 3½ N.W. of Saltfleetby station; ac. 2,515; soil loamy, overlying clay. The church of St. Mary (called the "Queen of the Marsh") is E. Eng., Dec., and Perp. The west tower contains three bells, dated 1323, and beautifully lettered and enriched with foliated work and grotesque figures; the spire, the only one within a distance of 60 miles north and south, serves as a sea-mark; the ancient chancel screen and some early benches remain. Here are Wesleyan and Free Methodist chapels.

Somerford, tp., pa. of Astbury (q.v.), S.E. Chesh., 3 W.N.W. of Congleton; ac. 1,203. S. Park is a seat with a private chapel.

Somerford Booths, tp., pa. of Astbury (q.v.), S.E. Chesh., 3 W. by N. of Congleton; ac. 1,274.

Somerford, Great, pa. and vil. on the Avon, N.W. Wilts., 4 S.E. of Malmesbury; ac. 1,544; soil loamy, overlying gravel. The church of St. Michael and All Angels (restored 1867) is Perp.; the chancel has some wall decorations on the north. The Primitive Methodists have a chapel.

Somerford Keynes, pa. and vil., N. Wilts., 4½ S. of Cirencester; ac. 1,958; soil clay and gravel, overlying gravel and clay. The church of All Saints (restored 1876) is Perp.; an old painting of St. Christopher was found, in good preservation, at the beginning of the 19th cent. There are some small charities.

Somerford, Little, pa. and small vil. on the Avon, N.W. Wilts., 3 S.E. of Malmesbury; ac. 1,333; soil sandy, overlying gravel and clay. The church of St. John the Baptist is E. Eng.

Somergill, stream, E. Radnors., rises 2½ N.W. of New Radnor, and runs E. through New Radnor and N.E. to the Lugg, which it joins 2½ E. by S. of Presteigne, at a point 8 E. of its source.

Somerley. [HARBRIDGE.]

Somerleyton, pa. and very pretty vil., N. Suff., separated from Norf. by the Waveney, 8 S. of Yarmouth; ac. 1,387; soil good mixed land, overlying clay. The church of St. Mary (rebuilt 1854) was a structure of flint, originally E. Eng.; a handsome Dec. screen has panels, in which are painted figures of Apostles and Saints; there is also a large mural monument and bust of Sir John and Lady Wentworth, and a monument and bust to Sir Thomas Allin, Admiral of the Fleet in the reign of Charles II. Here is a chapel for Free Methodists, and a New Connexion Methodist chapel, with schools for boys and girls. In the pa. is an extensive manufactory of bricks and tiles. There is a reading-room, open every evening. S. Hall is a large and beautiful mansion in Elizabethan style, pleasantly situated in an extensive and well-wooded park; the gardens are usually open to the public on Wednesdays during the summer months.

Somersall Herbert, small pa., W. Derbys., 9 N.W. of Burton-upon-Trent; ac. 715; soil rich marl, with gravel and sand, overlying clay. The church of St. Peter (restored 1874) is E. Eng.; in a recess under a window on the north side of the chancel is the upper part of the recumbent effigy of a priest in eucharistic vestments, supposed to represent Robert by the Broke, the earliest known rector of S. (d. 1428); the font, of Norm. date, is a circular block of gritstone, carved with an encircling arcade of semicircular interlaced arches and a boldly-defined border above. Near the church is a fairly-preserved specimen of an E. Eng. churchyard cross, with steps and shaft complete, the cross being mutilated. Somersall Hall, an ancient picturesque half-timbered mansion with ornamental gables and modern additions, is a seat.

Somersby, pa., E. Lincs., 6 N.E. of Horncastle; ac. 600; soil clay and sand, overlying mostly blue and red clay. The church of St. Margaret (restored 1863–65) is Perp.; there are some memorials to the Burtons, and a small mural brass in the chancel, with kneeling effigy, to George Littlebury (d. 1612); in the porch is a stoup. In the churchyard is a lofty and singularly perfect Perp. cross, with octagonal shaft, and bearing on its summit beautifully-sculptured figures. Tennyson was born here in 1809.

Somersetshire, western maritime co. of England, bounded on the north-west by the Bristol Channel, on the south-west and south by Dev., on the south-east and south by Dors., on the east by Wilts., and on the north-east and north by Glouc. It comprises 1,049,812 ac., of which 101,455 are arable, over 700,000 pasture, about 25,000 orchards and market-gardens, and 45,000 mountain and heath-land used for grazing. Of the agricultural products the cattle are a considerable feature, from which quantities of cheese are produced; sheep also are reared in large numbers. Teazles are grown around Taunton for the woollen trade of the shire, potatoes, fruit, flax, etc. On the moors red deer are found in their wild state, and on Exmoor a peculiar breed of ponies is reared. Salmon and herring fishing is carried on to a considerable extent at Porlock, Minehead, and Watchet. The principal manufactures are those of woollen, worsted, and silk goods at Frome, Twerton, and Wellington; of gloves at Yeovil, Stoke, Martock, and Taunton; of lace at Chard; linen shirts and sail-cloth at Crewkerne; shirt collars at Ilminster and Taunton and Shepton Mallet; of silk at Taunton and Shepton Mallet; horsehair seating at Castle Cary, Bruton, and Crewkerne; brushes at Wells; of bricks, draining-pipes, and the celebrated Bath brick at Bridgwater, where are also extensive coach-building factories; also manufactories of spades, shovels, and edge tools. On the Avon are several mills for preparing iron and copper, and others for spinning worsted and the spinning and weaving of cotton. The chief mineral productions are coal, brown ironstone, zinc, limestone, and freestone; fullers' earth and ochre are also found. Bath stone and Ham Hill stone are quarried in this co. Spathose iron-ore is obtained mostly from the Brendon Hills, and exported to Ebbw Vale. Near Wellington are lead mines, and lead is washed from the old mines on the Mendip Hills. There are slate quarries at Wiveliscombe and at Treborough, near Williton. The coal beds constitute the most southern deposit of that mineral in England; the deposit is comparatively small, and lies northward of the eastern parts of the Mendip Hills. Petroleum has been found at Ashwick. Bristol is the great trading town and seaport for the co., with its docks in the city and subsidiary ones at Avonmouth and Portishead, at the mouth of the Avon, respectively on the Gloucester and Somerset shores; Bridgwater is another port on the Bristol Channel. Weston-super-Mare is a popular bathing town, as are Clevedon and Burnham. The city of Bath is well known for its mineral springs. The mun. bors. are Bridgwater, Chard, Glastonbury, Taunton, Wells, and Yeovil. S. is a hilly co.; in the north the great range of the Mendip Hills extends from Frome to the sea, a distance of about 25 miles. Others are the Quantocks in the south-west and the Brendon Hills in the west, and the Cothelstone Hills are situated in the south-western district of this co. Exmoor (q.v.) is in the extreme west, and extends into Devonshire. The Blackdown Hills, on the Devonshire border, are about 900 ft. in height. The chief rivers are the Lower Avon, the Parret and Yeo, the Tone, the Brue, and the Axe. The smaller streams are very numerous; they all flow through fertile tracts, and the banks of many of them are adorned with extensive ornamental grounds, belonging to the various seats of the landowners with which this co. abounds. In the town of Chard is the watershed of the co.; there are two streams on different sides of the street, one of which flows towards the Bristol Channel and the other towards the English Channel. The Kennet and Avon Canal enters the co. from Bradford, in Wilts., and joins the Lower Avon at Bath. The railways intersecting this co. are the Great Western, the London and South Western, and the Somerset and Dorset joint line of the Midland and London and South Western Companies. In the geological structure of S. the old (or Palæozoic) rocks rise to the surface both in the north-east (Mendip Hills and Bristol coalfield) and in the west (Quantock Hills, Exmoor, etc.). The rocks of these two areas are no doubt connected underground, though as to their precise relations there may be some doubt, and the great hollow so formed is overspread and filled up by newer rocks belonging to the Secondary (or Mesozoic) Period, which as a rule are much softer than the old rocks they lie upon, and so form lower ground; they are not laid horizontally one upon the other, but have a general dip or inclination to the south and east, so that the lower or first-formed beds come to the surface or crop out along the shores of the Bristol Channel, and in passing, say, from Bridgwater to Yeovil the edges of beds of rock are crossed continually advancing to upper and newer strata. The surface deposits include the beds of gravel, brick-earth, silt, and peat, which occupy a large area in the centre and north of the co., as in the North and South Marshes, Burnham and Huntspill Levels, Sedgemoor, and the vale of Ilchester. At Burtle are beds of sand containing marine shells. Thus about the commencement of the Christian era such places as Glastonbury, Brent Knoll, Wedmore, and Pawlet stood as islands in the middle of great bogs and marshes, presenting indeed a great similarity to the fen country of Lincolnshire; the Romans built sea-banks, which have been kept up ever since, and by drainage and cultivation a great tract of land has been rendered habitable. Raised beaches are seen at Bearn Cove, north of Weston-super-Mare, and at Woodspring, indicating an elevation of land there to an extent of 20 or 30 ft.; the submerged forest seen in Bridgwater Bay tells, on the other hand, a tale of depression. In the gravels which border the existing rivers bones of mammals are of frequent occurrence. Hills of blown sand occur at several points on the coast. From the slime of the river Parret, near Bridgwater, the well-known Bath bricks are made; they are named after a certain Mr. Bath who discovered the process of making them. Perhaps the earliest relics of man in this co. are the tools of flint, chert, and bone found in the Hyæna Den at Wookey Hole, near Wells, which was explored by Professor Boyd Dawkins between 1859 and 1863; these were associated with numerous bones of the hyæna, cave-bear, mammoth, stag, etc. Little Solsbury Hill, near Bath, seems to have been the site of an ancient encampment of the early races to whom metals were unknown. Here have been found flint flakes, scrapers, arrow-heads, and cores, with quartz pebbles which had been used as hammers; a flint saw, with numerous flakes and some scrapers, was found in a barrow (burial-place) at West Cranmore, and arrow-heads are recorded from Barwick and Ham Hill, near Ilchester. For Parliamentary purposes the co. has the following divs.: Bridgwater, Frome, Wellington, Wells, and Eastern, Northern, and Southern Somersetshire.

PREFACE.

In offering this work to the public the Publishers confidently believe that it meets a want hitherto unsupplied. No detailed preface is necessary; but it may be pointed out that this Gazetteer deals with the Counties (with their geological features and river-systems), Parliamentary Divisions, Baronies, Parishes (with their acreage and soil), Townships, Cities, Boroughs (County, Parliamentary, and Municipal), Towns, Seaports, Hamlets, Villages, and small places in the United Kingdom, arranged in alphabetical order, and treated with a fulness not to be found in any other work of the kind.

The physical features, such as Mountains and Hills (with their altitude), Rivers (with their fisheries), Waterfalls, Bays, Capes, Lakes, Islands, and Rocks and Shoals (with their Lighthouses, Lightships, and Beacons), are described. "Historic Houses" and Antiquities have received a large share of attention; and considerable space has been devoted to Prehistoric Remains, Earthworks, Castles, and Ecclesiastical Ruins.

In the series of Maps, specially prepared for the work, the reader has always at hand a ready means of reference to the geography of Great Britain and Ireland.

The Illustrations, which are from the photographs of firms of established repute, or from drawings taken on the spot, are intended to give the reader an accurate idea of the places described in the text. Many of these have never before been represented, and in some cases photographs by private persons have been generously placed at the disposal of Messrs. Cassell and Co.

In the matter of place-names the spelling of the Census Returns has been followed, as has the official method of printing names in which a distinctive epithet occurs. Places to the names of which Great, Little, North, South, and the like are prefixed, should be looked for under the principal word. Thus East Allington will be found on page 37 of vol. i. as Allington, East.

The geographical position of a place in its County, and with respect to some important town, is first given. In the cases of Parishes the acreage and the nature of the soil follow. Then comes the Parish Church, with its Dedication, Architectural Features, Monuments, etc. A church of the Norman or Early English period is described as Norm. or E. Eng., while a modern building reproducing the characteristics of any architectural period is said to be in the style of that period. Other places of worship, schools, and public buildings come next in order. Historical events with which the place is connected are noticed, as are eminent natives. The Antiquities, Natural Features, Trades, and Seats follow.

The table at the foot of the pages has been compiled with great care. It contains only such places as are found in the Census Returns, and for these only is it possible to give the population. The first column contains the Name, the second the nearest Railway Station, with its distance from the place in question; in the third column is the distance of such station from London (for places in Great Britain) or Dublin (for places in Ireland); and the figures in the last column show the Population, according to the returns for 1891. Thus on page 1, vol. i., Abberley is 6 miles from Stourport Station, which is 125 miles from London; Abbey (2) has a station of its own (Abbeyhill), 395 from London; the Welsh Abbeycwmhir is 5½ miles from Ponty-dwr Station, which is 206 miles from London. On the following page Abbeyleix has a station, which is 61 miles from Dublin, and the two populations given are shown by the abbreviations Pa. and Mkt. To. to be those of the Parish and Market Town respectively. The Townships or Civil Parishes are the smallest divisions of which the population is given in the Census Returns for England and Wales. In dealing with Scotland and Ireland, however, the population of a large proportion of the villages is given.

When a number of places of the same name occur, they are arranged in the following order:—English, Welsh, Scots, and Irish, the most important ones coming first.

In conclusion the Publishers gratefully acknowledge the kind assistance they have received from official and private persons all over the country; and their thanks are also due to Messrs. Kelly and Co., Limited, for the use (by special arrangement) of their Post Office Directories.

DEFINITION OF TERMS.

arony.—Properly the estate of a Baron; a territorial division of a county in Ireland, probably in former times the district of a native chief.

'orough, originally a fortified or corporate town:

County Borough.—Any borough instituted by the Local Government (England and Wales) Act, 1888, and therein defined as "a borough which on June 1, 1888, either had a population of not less than 50,000 or was a county of itself. Such boroughs are, for the purposes of this Act, administrative counties."

Municipal Borough.—A borough possessing a charter, and governed by a Mayor and Corporation.

Parliamentary Borough.—A borough returning a member, or members, to Parliament, or forming one of a group of boroughs represented in Parliament.

Burgh.—The Scottish term corresponding to the English "borough" (q.v.):

Burgh of Barony.—A burgh governed by a council and magistrates, or by the latter alone, and owing its charter to a feudal superior, not directly to the sovereign.

Burgh of Regality.—A Burgh of Barony formerly possessing exclusive criminal jurisdiction within its boundaries. The name is retained, but the jurisdiction has been abolished.

Municipal Burgh.—The same as Municipal Borough (q.v.).

Parliamentary Burgh.—The same as Parliamentary Borough (q.v.).

Royal Burgh.—A burgh created by Royal Charter.

Chapelry, a district assigned to a chapel-of-ease.

Civil Parish or Township. [TOWNSHIP.]

Ecclesiastical Parish.—A division of a parish, or parishes, for ecclesiastical purposes.

Hamlet, a section of a parish, a village, a group of houses.

Liberty.—A territorial division, in some counties, and sometimes containing more than one parish. The name refers to the fact that in this district certain franchises or privileges were, or still are, enjoyed.

Market Town.—A town which has the privilege of holding a public market on stated days of the week.

Parish.—A territorial division of a county for civil and ecclesiastical purposes.

Quoad Sacra Parish.—A parish, in Scotland, for ecclesiastical purposes only.

Riding.—One of the divisions (North, East and West) of the County of York in England, and of Co. Cork (East and West) in Ireland. The term is a corruption of the Old English thryding = a third part.

Tithing.—Originally a company of ten householders, or the district occupied by them. The name has now no practical signification.

Townland.—A division of a parish in Ireland, without rating powers.

Township.—A civil division of an ancient parish in England and Wales, where a separate poor rate is levied. The name is often retained even after the township is absorbed for rating purposes. In such cases the population does not appear in the Census Returns.

OF

GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.

Somersham (1), pa. and large vil., N. Hunts., 5 N.E. of St. Ives, on the road from March to Wisbech; ac. 4,356; soil gravel and clay, overlying green sandstone. The vil. consists principally of one street, about a mile in length, running from east to west and crossed by a shorter street near the centre; the houses are mostly good. The church of St. John the Baptist (restored 1883) is E. Eng.; at the east end is a fine triplet of lancets. In the pavement within the communion rails are three large slabs, once enclosing brass effigies of priests, only one of which now remains; this figure (c. 1530) is habited in eucharistic vestments, with chalice and host, but the inscription is lost. Another slab, near the font, once bore the brass effigy of a knight with five shields of arms, and probably commemorated Sir Richard Thwaytes (d. 1467). The columns and stonework of the church were restored in 1883; in 1886 the tower was restored, and a staircase leading to the belfry erected. There are Baptist and Wesleyan chapels. Bee-keeping is largely carried on, and the apiaries are considered to be among the finest in the co. A feast is held on June 24, but the market is obsolete. There are some charities. S. was once celebrated for its chalybeate spa, the well of which still exists. A little s. of the church stood the palace of the Bishops of Ely; the ruins have been pulled down, and on the site a farmhouse has been built.

Somersham (2), pa. and vil., S.E. Suff., 5½ N.W. of Ipswich; ac. 1,077; soil mixed, overlying gravel. The church of St. Mary is a substantial Dec. structure of flint and stone. Here is a Baptist chapel. The town land (1 ac.) is let for £3 15s. yearly, which is distributed among the poor at Christmas.

Somers Town, dis. of N.W. London, pa. of St. Pancras (q.v.), E. Middx., 2 N.W. of St. Paul's. The area covered by S. T. was not built over till the last decade of the 18th cent., a large number of the earliest inhabitants being members of the French priesthood and noblesse who were driven from their country at the time of the Revolution. The chapel erected by the Abbé Caron, in which the Princess Condé and other noted immigrants were buried, is still standing. William Godwin (d. 1836), the author of "Caleb Williams" and "Political Justice," resided here. S. is now a poor quarter.

Somerton (1), pa. and to. on the Cary, Mid Somerset, 7 S. of Glastonbury; ac. 6,350. The church of St. Michael (restored 1889) is Dec. and Perp., with a fine Perp. oak roof to the nave; near the south transept is a recumbent effigy of the 11th cent., and in the north transept a brass to Christopher Overton (1683). The pulpit dates from 1615 and the communion table from 1626. Here are Congregational, Wesleyan, and Bible Christian chapels; the Society of Friends have a meeting-house. The almshouses were founded in 1626 by Sir Edward Hext, and endowed with £50 yearly; there are others founded in 1866. The charities are of the yearly value of £35, and the church lands produce about £160 annually. The free grammar school was founded in 1676 by Thomas Glover. There is an ancient market cross, dated 1673; but the market, formerly held on Tuesday, has long been abandoned. S. was once a residence of the Saxon kings, and John, King of France, is said to have been imprisoned in the castle which once stood here. Shirt-collars are made, and there is a brewery. S. Court, S. Erleigh, and The Grange are seats.

Somerton (2), pa. and vil. on the Cherwell, N. Oxon, 8 N.E. of Woodstock; ac. 1,755; soil clay, stonebrash and sand, overlying stonebrash. The church of St. James (restored 1891) is of mixed periods; in the chancel are sedilia and a Dec. reredos, the chancel arch is Late Norm. with a Perp. rood-screen, the font is Dec., and in the Fermor chapel is a brass to William Fermor (d. 1552). There is a small charity, and the school has an endowment.

Somerton (3), pa., S.W. Suff., 10 N.W. of Sudbury; ac. 1,015; soil a mixture of clay and flint, overlying chiefly clay. The church of All Saints (restored 1883) is E. Eng.; in the north wall of the nave is an old Norm. doorway; there is a carved font, and a very fine old Jacobean octagonal oak pulpit. The pa. has a small charity. S. Hall is a seat.

Somerton, East, pa. near the coast, E. Norf., 8½ N. by W. of Yarmouth; ac. 798; soil light mixed, overlying sand, gravel, and clay. The church of St. Mary has been for many years in ruins; the tower and walls, now covered with ivy, are still standing; and there is a large tree growing in the midst. Burnley Hall, a mansion surrounded by beautiful gardens and plantations, is a seat.

Somerton, West, pa. near the coast, E. Norf., about 9 N. by W. of Yarmouth; ac. 1,130; soil a fine rich loam, overlying generally brick-earth intersected with veins of sand. The marsh land in this pa. has been thoroughly drained by a Commission of Sewers under the Local Drainage Act of 1861, and a large portion of the land so drained is farmed. The church of St. Mary is a building of stone with thatched roof, of E. Eng. and Perp. periods. When this church was undergoing repair in 1867, a mural painting of "The Day of Judgment," about 12 ft. long, was discovered on the south wall of the nave, and subsequently other frescoes were disclosed on the north wall of the nave; these paintings date from 1327–77, and have been carefully preserved; in 1878 a very interesting E. Eng. painting of "The Virgin and Child," executed on a narrow thick piece of deal, and suggested to have been part of a rood, was found under the floor of the pulpit. Here was an hospital for lepers, founded in the reign of Henry II. by Ralph (or Ranulph) de Granville, Chief Justiciar of England. Human bones have occasionally been found on the Hall estate, and a stone jug and skeleton were dug up in 1844 near the churchyard. Hales, the Norfolk Giant, was born and buried in this pa.; his height, as stated on his tomb, was 7 ft. 6 in. S. Hall, situated on an eminence and commanding views of the German Ocean, is a seat; it was an old manor house, and some portions are of considerable age.

Sompting, pa. and vil., Mid Sussex, 3 N.E. of Worthing; ac. 2,930; soil various, overlying chalk. The church (dedication unknown) is a cruciform building of stone, chiefly of E. Eng. date, with later insertions and a singularly constructed and very ancient western tower. This, the most interesting feature of the church, is generally regarded as of Saxon origin; it is rectangular, and each side of the upper storey terminating in a pointed gable; the lower stage is relieved by a string course cut into rude dentils, and up the middle of each face of the tower runs a flat strip of stone-work; at the angles are small flat buttresses of like character. The archway from the tower into the church has the imposts ornamented with scrolls coarsely carved, the half-pillar attached to each jamb having a complete capital. The piscina is triangular, the aumbry double; and besides an altar-tomb of Perp. date, assigned to Richard Burré, there are some rude E. Eng. sculptures in the transepts and an inscribed brass to Mrs. Emily Williams. At the time of the Domesday survey some sort of ecclesiastical edifice was certainly in existence here, and the building seems to have been reconstructed in the first half of the 12th cent., additions being made to it at much later dates. A reading-room was erected in 1889. The charities are considerable, and are distributed to the poor in fuel, bread, clothing, and blankets. There are also two cottages for the aged and infirm.

Sonning, pa. (extending into Oxon), tp., and vil. on the Thames (here crossed by an ancient bridge of eleven arches), E. Berks., 3 N.E. of Reading; ac. of pa. 9,813, of tp. 1,203, and 43 of water. The houses of the vil. are clad with creepers and often embowered in fruit trees. The neighbourhood of

S. presents some exquisite river scenery. A charming walk immediately above and below the lock is locally termed the Thames Parade, and the many eyots in the river create apparently separate waterways. The church of St. Andrew (restored) is a large edifice of flint and stone, dating from the 13th cent.; the arches on the south side of the chancel are elliptical; those on the north side are pointed, on clustered pillars, the easternmost being richly sculptured with figures in stone, representing on one side Our Lord blessing the Apostles; on the other, figures of kings and queens, with the Virgin and Child as a keystone, serve as a canopy to a monument erected to the memory of the Rev. H. Pearson. In the south aisle is a modern marble monument with brasses to various members of the family of Palmer, of Holme Park; and here also is a painted monument of marble to Katherine, Lady Lidcott (1630), with her effigy kneeling at a desk. A mortuary chapel, separated from this aisle by an oak screen, is almost entirely allotted to memorials of this family; and the belfry contains a ponderous monument of black marble to Thomas Rich, alderman of Gloucester (1613), and to Sir Thomas Rich, Bart., of Sonning, his son (d. 1667). In the wall by the vestry door are two curious tablets, dated respectively 1533 and 1605. In the vestry, north of the chancel, is a mural inscription to Robert Wright, S.T.P. Oxon, and others below to Robert (1553) and Agnes (1579), probably children, with a shield of arms. On the floor of the nave are brasses to Laurence Fyton, Esq., bailiff of Sonning (1434); William Barker, steward of the lordship of Sonning (1549), and Anne his wife; William Barker, Esq. (1575), and Anne (Stoughton) his wife; Anne (Barker), wife of William Staverton, of Oakingham, gent. (1589); and Elizabeth, daughter of Sir George and Dame Ann Chute (1627). In the north aisle is a fine tomb to Anna, wife of Sir John Clarke, Bart., of Salford, Warwick (1654); a fine monument has been placed on the north side of the chancel to Canon Pearson, 40 years vicar of the pa. (d. 1882); the font is of Caen stone with a lofty canopy of oak; in a niche over the door of the north porch is a figure of St. Andrew, the patron saint. The Congregationalists have a chapel. There are charities for apprenticing and clothing, besides others for educational and for church purposes; also an endowed school. Holme Park is a seat; the house, situated in a large park, is on an eminence, and commands a fine view of the Thames.

Sookholme, or Soulkholme, tp., pa. of Warsop (q.v.), W. Notts., 4 N. of Mansfield; ac. 991. It formerly belonged to the Priory of St. Oswald, at Nostell, Yorks., and was attached to Warsop at the Reformation. S. chapel is of Norm. date, with a fine Norm. arch. In the neighbourhood Roman coins and other remains of antiquity have been found.

Soothill, tp., pa. of Dewsbury (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., 3 N.W. of Wakefield; ac. 2,326. There are Congregational and Primitive Methodist chapels. Coal and stone abound here.

Sopley, pa. and vil. on the east bank of the Avon, S. Hants, 3½ N. of Christchurch; ac. 4,964; soil and subsoil gravelly. The church of St. Michael (restored 1868) is E. Eng., with Perp. alterations; the porch has an ancient statue of St. Michael; the chancel retains an aumbry and squint, and has a low side window and several marble monuments; there are two recumbent figures with Perp. canopies. S. has some small charities. S. Park is a seat.

Sopworth, pa. and vil., N.W. Wilts., on the Glouc. border, 7 W. of Malmesbury; ac. 947; soil brash, overlying rock. The church of St. Mary is a small E. Eng. structure.

Sorbie, pa. and vil. on the south side of Wigtown Bay, S. Wigs., Sc.; ac. of pa. 9,611. The pa. lies for about 9 miles along the coast, which is indented by the bays of Garliestown and Rigg, and possesses two bold headlands, Eggerness to the north and Cruggleton Head to the south of these bays. The vil. lies 6 S. of Wigtown. The Established church at Millisle is a fine cruciform Gothic structure. The ancient Tower of S., now a ruin, is about 2 E. of the vil.; it was a stronghold (or peel) of the Sorby family. Between the headlands of Cruggleton and Eggerness is the park and house of Galloway, erected in 1740. [CRUGGLETON, EGGERNESS.]

Sorel Point, headland, pa. of St. John, north coast of Jersey, Channel Islands, 6 N.N.W. of St. Helier. The Point consists of a serrated ridge of a deep pink hue extending a considerable distance into the sea. It affords grand views both to the east and to the west.

Sorley, ha., pa. of and 1½ N.E. from Churchstow (q.v.), S. Dev.

Sorn, pa. and vil., N.E. Ayrs., Sc., about 4 E. of Mauchline; ac. 19,195. The land, originally moor, has been much improved and well enclosed, and there are fine plantations near the Ayr, which runs through the pa. from east to west. S. abounds with coal, limestone, and ironstone. S. Castle, about 1½ mile from Catrine, is a seat.

Sorrel Hill, mountain (1,975 ft.), Lower Talbotstown bar., N. co. Wick., Ir., 4 E.S.E. of Blessington.

Sosgill, ha., pa. of St. Bees (q.v.), S.W. Cumb., 5 S.W. of Cockermouth.

Sotby, pa. and vil., Mid Lincs., 5 E. of Wragby; ac. 1,500; soil mostly marl, overlying marl and white clay. The church of St. Peter (rebuilt 1857) is E. Eng. and Dec.; some wall-paintings were disclosed on the splays of the chancel windows, apparently of the 14th cent.; there remain a credence table, piscina, and a sepulchral arch, the latter probably covering the tomb of the founder. Several finely-sculptured stones have been dug up in a field in this pa.

Sotherton, pa., N.E. Suff., 4 N.E. of Halesworth; ac. 1,385; soil principally clay, overlying clay and (in some parts) sand. The church of St. Andrew (rebuilt 1854) is in Gothic style.

Sotterley, pa. and vil., N.E. Suff., 5 S.E. of Beccles; ac. 1,573; soil mixed, overlying gravel and clay. The church of St. Margaret is Perp., and contains several ancient monuments of the Playter family, one of which has kneeling effigies of Sir Thomas Playter, lord of the manor in 1623, and his two wives, with figures of their twenty-two children; there are several brasses—one to Thomas Playter (d. 1572), and one to Alice Lappage, wife of Robert Edgar (d. 1595); by the south door is a stoup; the chancel is divided from the nave by a beautiful ancient carved oak screen, gilded and decorated, the lower panels containing representations of the Twelve Apostles. The charities amount to about £10 yearly. S. Hall, surrounded by a well-wooded park, is a seat.

Sotwell, pa. and vil., N. Berks., 1½ N.W. of Wallingford; ac. 708; soil black mould, overlying chiefly clay. The church of St. James (1884) is in Perp. style, and was built on the site of an older church; several fragments of an earlier structure were found among the rubble of which the late church was built, including the greater portion of an early window and the stones of a doorway, now built into the north wall.

Soudley, Great, ha., pa. of and 1 S. from Chewardine (q.v.), N. Salop.

Sough, or Springvale, ha. with railway station, pa. of Blackburn (q.v.), Mid Lancs., about 1 S.W. of Darwen. There are cotton mills, flag quarries, Soulbury, pa. and vil. on the Ousel, E. Bucks., about 9 N.E. of Aylesbury; ac. 4,460; soil sandy, overlying sandstone and gravel. The church of All Saints (restored 1863) is Dec. and Perp., and contains several brasses of the Lovett and Liscombe families; there are piscinæ and sedilia in the chancel, a piscina in the north aisle, and in the south aisle a piscina and a squint. The Wesleyans have a chapel. The pa. has several charities, and the Lovett and Sambee's charity provides an endowment of £100 yearly for the schools. Liscombe Park, a seat, is an Elizabethan mansion with a 14th-cent. chapel; among the portraits (some by Kneller and Lely) are those of Charles Brandon (first Duke of Suffolk), Sir Edmund Verney, William Sancroft, Titus Oates, and Nell Gwynne. Stockgrove is also a seat.

Soulby (1), eccl. pa., tp., and vil., pa. of and 2½ N.W. from Kirkby Stephen (q.v.), N.E. Westmd.; ac. 2,644. The church of St. Luke was built in 1662, in E. Eng. style. There is a Wesleyan chapel. The charities amount to £2 16s. yearly.

Soulby (2), ha. on the north side of Ullswater, pa. of Dacre (q.v.), E. Cumb., 5 S.W. of Penrith.

Souldern, pa. and vil. on the Cherwell, N.E. Oxon. 8 S.E. of Banbury; ac. 1,451; soil and subsoil variable. The church of St. Mary (restored 1879) is of various periods, with an E. Norm. tower; there are brasses to John Throckmorton (d. 1537) and Thomas Warner, parson (d. 1508 or 1514). The Roman Catholics and Wesleyans have chapels. The pa. has several charities, and the school has an endowment. Here are stone quarries. Ploughley Hill is a Saxon barrow. Wordsworth frequently visited S., and composed a sonnet on the rectory. S. Manor House is a seat.

Souldrop, pa. and vil., N. Beds., on the border of Northants, 10 N.W. of Bedford; ac. 1,073; soil clay, overlying gravel and clay. The church of All Saints (rebuilt 1861) is in E. Eng. style; the chancel has a stone groined roof, and the capitals of the chancel arch and other features display some good specimens of stone carving; one ancient Latin inscription to John Hanger (1608) has been preserved, and there is another to William Robinson (1701). Pillow-lace is made here to a small extent.

Sour Milk Gill (1), mountain valley with stream and waterfall, W. Westmd., 6 N.W. of Ambleside. This stream issues from Easedale Tarn, and runs about a mile in an easterly direction to Easedale Gill. The Milk Force is a fine waterfall 60 ft. in height.

Sour Milk Gill (2), mountain valley with stream and waterfall, S.W. Cumb., 8 S.W. of Keswick. The stream descends ¾ mile from Bleaberry Tarn to Buttermere. About half-way along its course it forms a waterfall between impending rocks, presenting a very romantic scene.

Sourton, pa. and scattered vil., Mid Devon, 4½ S.W. of Okehampton; ac. 4,266; soil clay and marl, overlying shale. The Dec. and Perp. church of St. Thomas à Becket was restored 1881. There are Wesleyan Methodist and Baptist chapels. In the neighbourhood are lime quarries.

South, for places not found under this prefix, the principal element should be consulted. Thus SOUTH BEDBURN will be found under BEDBURN, SOUTH.

Southacott, ha., pa. of and 3 W. from Okehampton (q.v.), Mid Dev.

Southacre, pa. in a pleasant valley watered by the Nar, S.W. Norf., 4 N. of Swaffham; ac. 2,491; soil sand and clay, overlying sand and gravel. The church of St. George is E. Eng.; it contains some 16th-cent. brasses, a 13th-cent. monument to Sir Eudo Harsicke, and an undated monument to Sir E. Barkham, Lord Mayor of London in 1621; the chancel retains a piscina with shelf, and there is a large stone font with raised oak cover.

Southall, mkt. to., pas. of Hayes and Hester (q.v.), S.W. Middx., 6½ S.E. of Uxbridge. There are two eccl. pas. (St. John and Holy Trinity) with modern churches. Here are large chemical works and steam flour mills. A large market, granted by Charter of William III. in 1698, is held here for cattle arriving by railway, Wednesday being market day. The Manor House, an ancient timbered mansion, is a fine example of the domestic architecture of the Elizabethan or Jacobean period, and was formerly the seat of the Awsiter family; it consists of a centre with gabled wings, which has an oriel rising through both stories, the other two windows carried on brackets; two smaller gables project from the centre, one of which forms an oriel rising to the roof, and the other serves as a porch, with a room over it.

Southam (in Domesday "Sucham"), pa. and tn. and mkt. to. (M.), S.E. Warws., 7 S.E. of Leamington; ac. 2,973; soil clay and marl, overlying clay and limestone. The church of St. James (restored) is principally Dec. There are Congregational and Primitive Methodist chapels, and a Catholic convent with a small iron church and an orphanage. The pa. has an endowment of land, yielding about £60 yearly, half of which is for the repairs of the highways and bridges, the other half being distributed to the poor at Christmas; another charity produces about £19 yearly, which is devoted to clothing ten poor men. There is also a school charity, the value of which is £40. Blue lias lime and cement are extensively manufactured in the neighbourhood. A fair for cattle is held the first Monday in every month. S. possesses a mineral spring, situated about a mile from the town, the properties of which are similar to those of the Leamington waters; another, of considerable antiquity, called the "Holy Well," is remarkable for the intense coldness of the water.

Southampton, seaport, co., parl. and mun. bor., U. and mkt. to., and a co. of itself (under the designation of "the Town and County of the Town of Southampton"), S. Hants, 13 s. by w. of Winchester. Where Bitterne (q.v.) now stands, the Romans had a military station, which was succeeded by the Anglo-Saxon town of "Hantune." Canute, after his establishment on the throne, made this town his occasional residence. S. derived its importance in Norman times from being the port of Winchester. Henry V., before the battle of Agincourt, marshalled his army here in August, 1415, for his expedition. In the reign of Edward V. the town had materially increased in extent and importance, and its trade became so flourishing that the Lord Mayor of London was appointed collector of the duties at this port. Philip, King of Spain, on his arrival in England to espouse Queen Mary, landed at this port (July 20, 1554), and was entertained at the sheriff's house by the mayor and his brethren. The ancient part of the town was formerly enclosed with walls (nearly a mile and a quarter in circuit), of which considerable portions, with their ruined circular towers, are still entire, the most important being that reaching from the West Gate along the shore northward. Of the ancient gates, the principal now remaining are West Gate, South Gate, and Bar Gate, in relation to which last the more modern part of the town is distinguished by the appellation of "Above Bar" from the other part, which is called High Street. The town was first incorporated in the reign of Henry I., whose charter was confirmed by Richard I. and by King John, and succeeding monarchs. The bor. returns two members to Parliament. The ancient castle was taken down in 1863, and the materials disposed of; the site is now occupied by houses. The town is beautifully situated on a peninsula rising gradually from the northern shore of S. Water, and bounded on the east by the Itchen, and on the south and west by a fine open estuary formed by the confluence of the Itchen with the river Test. S. is distinguished for the beauty of its situation, and is approached from the London road through an avenue of stately elms across the common. The principal entrance is through the ancient Bar Gate, an embattled and machicolated structure, on the north front of which are two gigantic figures representing Sir Bevois of S. and the giant Ascupart, whom, according to legendary tale, Sir Bevois is said to have conquered in single combat; this gate conducts immediately to the High Street, which is more than half a mile in length, and leads directly to the Quay, for the improvement of which the old Water Gate was taken down in 1804. In the part Above Bar are many fine ranges of buildings. Near the South Gate is a platform for cannon. The port and harbour are vested in a Board. There is ample depth of water, and safe anchorage for the largest ships afloat, which can enter or leave at any time of tide. The Royal Pier was reconstructed in 1892; on it is a pavilion for bands and concerts. Trains run to the pier-head, and from it is considerable passenger and excursion traffic to the Isle of Wight. The S. docks cover about 250 ac., and, having the natural advantage of double tides and practically four hours of high water, they afford every convenience for the reception of the largest ships, and, on account of the sheltered harbour within which they are, offer unusual protection against risk and casualties. These docks comprise two large open docks, four dry docks, and a graving dock. Within the docks are some twenty miles of railways, extending to all the quays and warehouses, and giving every facility for landing and embarking passengers, luggage, and cargo—trains running alongside the steamers direct from Waterloo station. The bonded and free warehouses are very large; there are also upwards of 100,000 sq. ft. of specially-constructed shedding for storing goods and for keeping foreign cattle. The railway services between Manchester and other large centres and S. Docks enable goods leaving Manchester by the evening trains to be at the docks early on the following morning. Steam navigation has added considerably to the importance of S., whence passengers embark for the Isle of Wight, Jersey, Guernsey, the Clyde; Dublin, Belfast, Cork, and other Irish ports; Falmouth, London, Plymouth, Liverpool, St. Malo, Granville, Cherbourg, Honfleur, Havre, Antwerp, Bremen, Hamburg, to all parts of the Mediterranean, the Peninsula, the East and West Indies, Cape, Australia, Brazil, River Plate Japan, the Pacific, New York, and other places. The trade of S. is very considerable, embracing coastwise the Channel Islands, the Continent, Northern Europe, and nearly every part of the world. S. comprises the pas. of S. All Saints, S. Holy Rood, S. St. John, S. St. Lawrence, S. St. Mary, and S. St. Michael. All Saints' Church (in Classic style) is remarkable for one of the largest unsupported ceilings in the kingdom; in the catacombs is buried Sir George Carteret (d. 1679). Holy Rood Church is in Dec. style. The church of St. Lawrence (to which the pa. of St. John is annexed ecclesiastically) is in E. Eng. style, as is that of St. Mary, erected in place of the old pa. church and as a memorial to Bishop Wilberforce (d. 1873). The church of St. Michael, in St. Michael's Square, is Norm. with Perp. insertions, and contains monuments to Sir Richard Lister, Knight, Chief Justice of the King's Bench (d. 1553), and Thomas Fleming, one of his successors in that office (d. 1613). There are several eccl. pas. with modern churches; and the chapel of the Hospital of God's House, founded in the reign of Henry III. for eight poor persons, is also used for services of the French Anglican Church. The Catholics have two churches, and there are places of worship for various bodies of Nonconformists. The Watts Memorial Hall belongs to the Congregationalists, and is set apart for Sunday-school purposes. The grammar school, in Bugle Street, founded in 1553 by Dr. Capon, now occupies new buildings; the Taunton Trade School, founded in 1760, was reorganised in 1873, and a technical department added in 1893. The Guildhall is a spacious room above the arches of the ancient Bar Gate, in which the borough sessions and other courts are held. The municipal offices are in the High Street; here the regalia of the corporation are kept, which, together with the seals and records, are ancient and extremely curious. The Public Free Library (1892-93) is a fine red-brick building with stone facings; it contains a lending library, a reading-room, and offices. The S. Chamber of Commerce, established in 1854 and incorporated in 1875, holds its meetings at the Hartley Institution, where a room has been set apart for the use of its members. The Corn Exchange is on the Town Quay, and here a corn market is held every Friday. The market days are Wednesdays (for cattle) and Fridays (for corn); and there is a pleasure fair on Trinity Monday. The Custom House is in Royal Crescent Road; the offices of the Board of Trade are near the docks; there is also a Customs branch on the Town Quay. The Hartley Institution, High Street, built and endowed from a bequest made to the corporation (in trust) by the late H. R. Hartley, Esq., was opened by Viscount Palmerston, Oct. 15, 1862. The Institution building embraces a library, a reading-room, lecture hall, and a natural history museum; chemical, physical, and physiological laboratories, well supplied with apparatus and models; a gallery for the exhibition and study of works of art; and a series of class-rooms. The lecture hall is used for concerts and for lectures organised by local societies or institutions, or by the council of the Hartley Institution; the lectures of the Polytechnic Institution are also delivered in this hall during the winter season. The Ordnance Survey Office, the headquarters of the Ordnance Survey of the United Kingdom, where all the plans and maps of Great Britain are engraved, zincographed and printed, is situated at the north entrance of the town, near the Avenue. The staff employed at the office consists of clerks, draughtsmen, engravers, photographers, calculators, printers, and mechanics, in all (including both Royal Engineers and civilians) about 900 persons. The total force employed on the surveys of Great Britain and Ireland (inclusive of four companies of Royal Engineers) amounts to about 2,500 persons. The Ordnance Surveys, published by Government, are on the scales of 25 in., 6 in., and 1 in. to a mile, with plans of large towns on the scale of 5 ft. or 10 ft. to a mile. The Prince of Wales' Royal Theatre, Above Bar (1883), is capable of holding about 1,400 persons. The Assembly Rooms comprise two large halls; there is also a music-hall. The Royal S. Yacht Club and the Royal Southern Yacht Club have club-houses; the regattas take place in July or August, when several prizes are sailed for. There are large public swimming baths close to the town. H.M.S. Trincomalee lies off the Town Pier, in S. Water, and is used as a training-ship for the Royal Navy Reserve. The Royal South Hants Infirmary (1838) is an extensive structure in the Italian style. Other charitable institutions are the Hants Female Orphan Asylum, the Dispensary (New Road), and St. Mary's Cottage Hospital (1887). There is also a branch of the Gordon Boys' Brigade. The charity almshouses furnish homes for 43 poor widows, and two others shelter 14 poor persons. The charities for distribution in money and clothing, and loans to young tradesmen, amount to £300 a year. The Common Fields, in the heart of the town and containing upwards of 65 ac., have been planted and laid out as parks and pleasure grounds. A monument to Richard Andrews, five times mayor of S., stands in the park; and another commemorates Dr. Isaac Watts (born in S., July 17, 1674, d. 1748). S. Common, of 375 ac., with its splendid avenue of trees, extends to the northern municipal boundary. An open space formerly called Porter's Meadow has been laid out as a garden, and is now called the Queen's Park; a memorial to Maj.-Gen. Charles Gordon, killed at Khartoum, Jan. 26, 1885, has been erected, and was unveiled Oct. 15, 1885. This town was the general's residence when in England. In Priory Road are some remains of a priory of Austin Canons, founded by Henry I. in 1124, and dedicated to St. Denys or Dionysius; the churches of Holy Rood, St. Michael, St. Lawrence, and All Saints were attached to this monastery, which on its suppression in 1538 had nine canons, and revenues estimated at £91. On a portion of the ruins is an inscribed stone recording some facts as to its history.

Southampton Water, sea-inlet, S. Hants, is about 2 miles broad at its entrance near Calshot Castle, and stretches north-westward for nearly 7 miles to Eling and Redbridge, where the river Test falls into it. The shores of the inlet are richly wooded, and afford a continuous stretch of finely-diversified scenery, studded with villages, mansions, and villas. The town of Southampton is on the east shore. A little lower down are the ruins of Netley Abbey, the mouth of the Hamble river, and (at the end) the river Titchfield or Meon. On the west are the extensive and beautiful tract of country known as the New Forest, Dibden Bay, Hythe, Cadland Park, and Calshot Castle. At its mouth S. Water meets the Solent on the west and Spithead on the east.

Southborough (1), to., pa. of Tunbridge (q.v.), 2½ N. of Tunbridge Wells. There are two eccl. pas., both with modern churches. The Wesleyans have a chapel. The Parochial Hall dates from 1881. The Holme Endowed School (founded 1785) was reconstituted in 1889. Charities for distribution amount to £20 yearly. Near the town are chalybeate springs, the mineral properties of which are similar to those of Tunbridge Wells. Bentham Hill and Broom Hill are seats. At the latter is an observatory tower, intended for a meteorological station; from the summit an extensive view of the country is obtained.

Essex, very pleasantly situated near the mouth of the Thames and nearly opposite to Sheerness, 16 S. of Maldon. S. first sprang into notice as a watering-place from a visit of Queen Caroline and Princess Charlotte in 1804. The bathing is good, but the tide recedes to the extent of about a mile. Steamers run to and from London several times a day during the summer months, as well as to Sheerness, Rochester, and Gravesend. The old pier was replaced in 1890–91 by an iron structure 1½ mile in length. An electric tramway runs the entire length of the pier, and at the shore end is a spacious pavilion with a stage. A wide esplanade has also been formed, and both on the cliffs and immediately below are pleasant winding walks. The church of the eccl. pa. of St. John the Baptist is a building of stone in mixed styles. S. has also a Catholic church, a convent and a home for the aged destitute poor and for infirm children, and a convent school; a Reformed Episcopal church; and Baptist, Congregational, and Wesleyan chapels, and one for the Peculiar People. The Public Hall (1872) has been converted into a theatre. The Royal Alexandra Yacht Club building stands in its own grounds on the slope of the cliffs; the grounds are tastefully laid out, and command uninterrupted views of the sea. The S. Institute (1881) has a library and reading-room. In the Conservative and Unionist club-house is the Clarence Hall, capable of seating 500 people.

The country is hilly and has no large vils. in it, the inhabitants being employed in agriculture and fishing. The vil. is on the coast opposite Sunda, 10 S. of Campbeltown. A little south of the vil. stands the rock Dounavertie, a spot interesting to the historian and the antiquary as having been the scene of many sanguinary conflicts, especially the massacre of 300 of the M'Donalds here by General Leslie after their capitulation in 1649. Few traces of the castle now remain; but 1½ W. stand the walls of a church, said to have been founded by St. Columba, who landed in Scotland in 563. The burial-ground was formerly divided by a small stream, on the north side of which the Highlanders were interred, and on the south side the Lowlanders, but that distinction no longer exists. A little to the north of the vil. stands the pa. church, and in the vil. the United Presbyterian church.

Southfield and Blackwood, vil., pa. of and 3 N.W. from Lesmahagow (q.v.), W. Lanarks., Sc.

Southfleet, pa. and vil., N. Kent, 3 S.W. of Gravesend; ac. 2,408; soil clay, sand and loam, overlying gravel and chalk. The Late Dec. church of St. Nicholas (restored 1867) retains on the south side of the chancel graduated triple sedilia with crocketed canopies supported on shafts of Purbeck marble, and a trefoil piscina with a shelf; in the south aisle is a marble tomb to Sir John Sedley (1561) richly painted and gilt, and near it an ogee arch richly crocketed, with the figure of an angel on either side. There are other 14th- and 15th-cent. memorials, and brasses of interest. Here was anciently a stream of water flowing to the Thames (now stopped up by an embankment): hence the name of the place. S. furnishes some curious specimens of the shell formation. It is supposed to have been the Roman station Vagniciæ, Watling Street forming its north-east boundary. Earthen vessels, coins, and stone tombs have been found here, as also a milliary.

South Fortyfoot Drain, large drain, S. Lincs., separating the districts of Holland and Kesteven (q.v.).

Southgate, residential dis. with two eccl. pas. (Christchurch and St. Michael), pa. of Edmonton (q.v.), N. Middx., 8 N. of London. Christ Church was erected 1862, St. Michael's 1874—both in E. Eng. style, from designs by Sir G. Scott, R.A. There is a Baptist chapel and a Wesleyan mission house. A village hall was erected 1883. There is a reading-room with a library. Beggars Bush Fair, held at Cathol Gate, leading to Northall, was granted by King James I.

Southgate, New, eccl. pa. and vil., pas. of Friern Barnet and Edmonton (q.v.), N. Middx., 6½ N. of London. The church of St. Paul was erected 1873, in E. Eng. style, from designs by Sir G. Scott, R.A. There are also Congregational and Wesleyan chapels. A Clock and Watch Makers' Asylum was erected here 1857.

South Hams, dis., S. Dev., known as the "Garden of Devonshire," which abounds in rich pastures, meadows, cornfields, and orchards. Totnes (q.v.) is situated in the middle of this district. The surrounding scenery, including that of the valley of the Dart, is remarkable for its beauty.

South Head, hill (1,633 ft.), W. Derbys., about 7 N.E. of Buxton.

South Hill, pa. traversed by the Tamar, Lynher and Inny, E. Cornw., 10 S. of Launceston; ac. 3,459. The church of St. Sampson (restored 1871) is chiefly Dec. and Perp.; the font is carved with grotesque figures of dragons and a representation of the tree of life; the chancel retains its piscina, and there is another in the transept, as well as a double-arched Easter sepulchre and squint; the transept also contains a monument with effigy and singular rhyming inscription to Michael Hill (d. 1663), and an incised stone to John Manaton (d. 1507), his wife, and others of that family (1501–28). The Wesleyans have a chapel in the pa. There is a small charity. On the glebe farm is an ancient baptistery or well, called "St. Sampson's Well." A block of hewn granite (supposed to date from the 5th or 6th cent.) bearing an inscription in Latin was discovered in 1891 in the rectory grounds.

Southhook, vil., pa. of Dreghorn (q.v.), N.E. Ayrs., Sc., about 7 N.E. of Troon.

Southill, pa. and vil., Mid Beds., 8 S.E. of Bedford; ac. 5,419; soil part gravel and part clay, overlying principally clay. The church of All Saints is Perp. There are several monuments of the Byng family, among which are those of the celebrated Admiral Sir George Byng, first Viscount Torrington (1733), and of his son, the unfortunate Vice-Admiral the Hon. John Byng, who, for an error in judgment while in command, was shot (1757). The Baptists have a chapel here. The charities amount to £40 yearly. S. Park is a seat; the house is a stately mansion of stone, and the park is thickly studded with fine trees. Broom Hall is also a seat.

Southington, ha., pa. of and adjoining Overton (q.v.), N. Hants. S. House is a seat.

Southleigh, pa. and scattered vil., E. Dev., 6 S.E. of Honiton; ac. 2,579; soil mixed, overlying marl. The ancient church of St. Lawrence was restored 1881–82. There are some small charities. About a mile from the vil. is a Roman encampment, called Blackbury Castle. Wiscombe Park is a seat.

Southmere. [SUMMERFIELD.]

Southminster, pa. and vil., S.E. Essex, 10 S.E. of Maldon; ac. 6,315 land, 1,385 water; soil loam, overlying clay. The church of St. Leonard (interior restored 1892) is Perp., and contains three brasses to William Harrys, Edward Bridge (d. 1666), and John King (d. 1634). Here are Baptist and Congregational chapels. There are several small charities, partly used for educational purposes. A stock market is held every Tuesday.

Southport, popular watering-place and mun. bor., pa. of North Meols (q.v.), S.W. Lancs., 18½ N. of Liverpool. The shore is an extensive flat, and at low water is dry and traversable for miles, with the exception of a few wet places, but is free from quicksands. The first building of the town dates from 1792, when an hotel, subsequently called "Duke's Folly," was erected. The place, at that period consisting only of a few fishermen's huts, has since developed into one of the largest and most prosperous towns in the kingdom. The streets are well arranged and kept, and the roads stone-paved and asphalted, with tiled and asphalted footways. Lord Street, the chief thoroughfare, which runs parallel with the shore, is more than 1 mile in length, the promenade intervening; a great portion of it is laid out in boulevards, the private dwellings on either side having also long gardens and lawns, and its whole length is traversed by the tramway which runs between Birkdale and Churchtown; there are also tramways to various other parts of the town. The hotels and shops are excellent, and there are Conservative and Liberal clubs, a Free Library and Art Gallery, hydropathic establishments, and numerous boarding and day schools. The most attractive places to visitors and residents are the Promenade, pier, Winter, Kew and Botanic gardens, and Hesketh Park, and the sand hill ranges. The town contains a great number of well-built residences, many of which are inhabited by the merchants and manufacturers of the surrounding districts. The Promenade, originally made by the landowners, has been extended by the corporation so as to afford a continuous marine drive of over 2½ miles. It has a stone sea-wall, and the footways and drive are broad and asphalted. S. pier is noted for its length; on it is a tramway road, on which run two cars, drawn by wire ropes worked by a stationary engine. The pier-head affords the means of embarking and disembarking passengers from the steamboats plying between this town and other places during the summer months at all stages of the tide. Hesketh Park, opened in 1868, comprises 33 ac. (enclosed, laid out, and planted by the corporation), and contains a lake of 4½ ac. stocked with water-fowl, a meteorological observatory with instruments, croquet grounds, a gymnasium, and rustic summer-houses. The sub-tropical gardens were added in 1882. The South Marine Park is near the pier. The Winter Gardens and Aquarium belong to a company, and form a very popular resort for visitors. The Churchtown Botanic Gardens and Museum were opened in 1875. Here are the headquarters of several lawn-tennis clubs. The Kew Gardens extend over an area of 16 ac., and include a ball-room, a theatre, and a hotel. The Public Recreation Grounds (1886) cover about 8 ac. There are several eccl. pas. with modern churches; a Catholic church, from the designs of Pugin; and places of worship for various Nonconformist bodies. The town hall, Lord Street, is an edifice in Classic style; it contains a public hall (holding 500 persons), a council chamber, mayor's parlour, court and committee rooms, and public offices. The Atkinson Free Library and Fine Art Gallery, a gift to the town by the late W. Atkinson, Esq., is a building of stone in Classic style, with lending and reference libraries, reading, news and students' rooms, and a fine art gallery. Cambridge Hall, Lord Street, the foundation stone of which was laid in 1872 by H.R.H. Princess Mary of Teck, is an edifice of stone in Classic style; it contains a large hall used for public assemblies; the lower part of the building is occupied by the Post Office. The Baths, on the Promenade, were opened in 1871. S. has an Infirmary, Convalescent Hospital and Sea-Bathing Infirmary, a Hydropathic Hospital, a hospital for infectious diseases, a sanatorium for children, and a Convalescent Home for Governesses. The Market Hall, in East Bank Street, is a spacious building in Classic style, bounded by streets on three sides, in each of which it has separate entrances; the stalls are disposed in three divisions —for provision dealers, the fish market, and the wholesale department. Attached is the inspector's office and a yard for refuse, boiler-houses, etc.

Southsea, residential dis. and watering-place, pa. of Portsea (q.v.), S. Hants. S. is a place of recent origin, and occupies the south-west portion of Portsea Island, opposite the east extremity of the Isle of Wight and the anchorage of Spithead. It extends eastward from Portsmouth town, and is within the borough of Portsmouth. The town derives its name from S. Castle, a fortress erected in the reign of Henry VIII. on the extreme south point of the island, and may be said to have wholly sprung up since the year 1850, at which period only two or three roughly-formed roads traversed the waste lands now covered with streets and houses. The town has of late been much improved by the erection of many fine houses and terraces. There are several eccl. pas. with modern churches, and the various Nonconformist bodies have places of worship. Here are the Hants and Isle of Wight School and Home for the Blind, a convalescent home for women, and one for men and boys; and the Victoria Soldiers' Home. The Portsmouth Swimming Club during the summer months have their headquarters on S. beach. South of the town, and between it and the beach, is S. Common, the property of H.M.'s Government, and used for the drilling and exercising of the troops in garrison. At the west end of the common, near the Assembly Rooms, is the Clarence Esplanade Pier, near which are the Jubilee Gardens. The Esplanade, stretching from this point to the fortifications of S. Castle, is protected by a substantial sea-wall of brick and concrete; a carriage drive and parade run parallel with the south-eastern portion of the wall, which is interrupted between the castle and Lumps Fort by the South Parade Pier. Steamers from Portsmouth call at the Clarence Pier for the Isle of Wight, and at the South Parade Pier for Sea View and Bembridge.

Southwark, parl. bor. (with three divs.—Bermondsey, Rotherhithe, and Southwark, West—each returning one member) on the south bank of the Thames, in S. London, N.E. Surrey, ½ s. of St. Paul's; ac. 1,990. By Londoners S. is usually called "The Borough," a name to which it has been entitled since the reign of Edward I. In 1885 the Parliamentary representation was increased from two to three members. It is connected with the City (on the opposite bank) by the Tower, London, Southwark, and Blackfriars bridges. S. Bridge (built 1813–19) consists of three cast-iron arches. The bor. comprises a large number of eccl. pas., the most important church being St. Saviour's (q.v.). The low flat ground on which it stands was part of the great marsh which extended a long distance south from the river. The site is believed to have been drained and embanked by the Romans, who appear to have had a settlement here, probably a suburb of the town in Middx. The name "Suthgeweorke" appears in the Saxon Chronicle under the year 1053. S. had a separate municipal existence down to 1327, when it was incorporated in London, the Mayor of the City becoming its bailiff and governing it henceforward by his deputy. Since 1551 it has formed a ward of the City, called "Bridge-without-Ward." The Borough Market, south of St. Saviour's churchyard, was formed about 1825 and enlarged in 1839, when St. Saviour's Grammar School was taken down. The school, founded in Elizabeth's reign, is now situated in Sumner Street. Among the many literary associations of S., the most important are those connected with the "Tabard" inn and the "Globe" theatre. The "Tabard," where Chaucer's pilgrims assembled on their way to Canterbury, was rebuilt after the Great Fire, the name becoming changed to "Talbot," but the last vestige of the old hostelry disappeared in 1873. The site of the "Globe" theatre, where so many of Shakespeare's plays were acted, is now occupied by a brewery. Brewing and the manufacture of glass are old-established industries in S.; there is also an important hat factory, and tanning and currying are carried on. S. Park covers 63 ac.

Southwater, eccl. pa. and vil. with railway station, pas. of Horsham and Shipley (q.v.), Mid Sussex, 3 s. of Horsham. The church of the Holy Innocents is in E. Eng. style. There is a small Wesleyan mission chapel.

Southwell (anciently "Suwelle" and "Sudwell"), pa. and to., and head of a diocese, Mid Notts., 7 w. of Newark; ac. 4,936. S. had once four famous wells, reputed to possess healing powers of an almost miraculous character; two of these, situated near the church, are now filled in or covered over; the springs of the others run as strongly as ever, but the wells have disappeared. The cathedral church of St. Mary was founded by Paulinus, first Archbishop of York, about A.D. 630, and finally surrendered to Henry VIII. in 1540, but the king refounded the chapter in 1543, and endowed the church anew with the greater part of its ancient possessions, its revenue being then estimated at £516 1s. 6½d. The bishopric of S. was founded in 1884, and consists of the cos. of Derbys. and Notts., previously belonging respectively to the dioceses of Lichfield and Lincoln—the pa. and collegiate church of S., subject to the rights of the patron and incumbent of such church, being assigned as the cathedral church of the new diocese. The church itself (restored 1882) is a large and magnificent cruciform structure of Bolsover magnesian limestone. The nave and transepts, as well as the towers, are Norm.; the choir, its aisles, and small eastern transepts E. Eng.; and the chapter-house E. Dec.—all of very excellent composition; and there are some Perp. insertions. The triforium is unusually large, and has wide semicircular arches on short piers. The west front is lighted by a large Perp. window beneath a battlemented parapet, and still retains some fragments of its original glazing; below the window is a fine Norm. doorway of five orders. The transepts date from the early part of the 12th cent., and the choir is one of the best illustrations of the E. Eng. period in the kingdom; it bears traces of having been erected on the site of an older structure, probably the early church of Paulinus. The octagonal chapter-house, a most beautiful example of Dec. work, is connected by a cloister with the north aisle of the choir. On the eastern side of the north-west transept is an E. Eng. building, formerly a chantry or singing school; the lower part until recently contained the library, the greater part being gifts from different prebendaries and canons of the church, as well as the well-known "White Book of Southwell." The library has now been transferred to the upper storey. Of the many Archbishops of York connected by residence with this church, six are known to have been buried within its precincts:—Geoffrey de Ludeham (1264); Thomas de Corbridge (1303); William Booth (1464); Lawrence Booth, his brother (1480); Robert Holgate (c. 1545); and Edwin Sandys (1588). The tomb of Archbishop Sandys, formerly on the north side of the choir, is now in the north transept, and consists of a large altar-tomb of alabaster with his recumbent effigy. The church of the eccl. pa. of Holy Trinity is in E. Eng. style, and the Wesleyans and Baptists have chapels. The ancient palace of the Archbishops of York, now in partially ruinous condition, is 30 yds. south of the minster and immediately adjoining the churchyard; it was begun by John Kempe, archbishop from 1425 to 1452, and completed by his successor, Archbishop William Booth, and other subsequent prelates, and was a favourite residence of Cardinal Wolsey. The buildings, when perfect, formed a large quadrangle, with gardens and park immediately adjacent on the south; there are considerable remains of the south, east and north elevations, including the eastern gable and portions of the walls of the chapel, but the grand banqueting-hall of Henry VI.'s time, which occupied the west side, is wholly gone. The existing structure, with all the old archiepiscopal gardens and a small portion of the park, have been purchased. The "Great Chamber" has been restored, and now forms a very fine apartment. The Residence House and the houses of the vicars-choral form a quadrangular block of buildings, situated east of the church. S. has a penny bank, a savings bank, and a free museum. Malting is carried on here, and there are silk and lace factories, each employing about 100 hands. Bricks and baskets are also made. Fairs are held on the third Monday in April and September. The S. Hunt and Hurdle Races, under Grand National Hunt rules, are held in May. The racecourse adjoins the Kirklington road. There are several charities, amounting to about £75 yearly, for the relief of the poor and the education of poor children. When S. Palace was the residence of the Archbishops of York, the prelates had four parks in its vicinity, viz.:—S. (or the Little) Park, on the confines of which the palace stood; Hockerwood, about 1 N.E.; Hexgrave, about 4 N.W.; and Norwood, ½ W. S. has not been without royal visits. James I. passed through the town in 1603, when on his way to London to assume the crown of Great Britain; and at the beginning of the Civil War Charles I., immediately before raising the royal standard at Nottingham, came to S. on August 18, 1642, and again, after the fatal engagement at Naseby, June 14, 1645; finally, it was on May 6, 1646, that the hapless monarch once more arrived at S., and, taking up his quarters at the "King's Arms," surrendered himself to the Scots Commissioners, who were sitting in the archbishop's palace. Normanton Hall and The Manor House (formerly the residence of Lord Byron, the poet) are seats.

Southwick (1), pa. and vil. on the coast, S. Sussex, 4½ W. of Brighton; ac. 1,470; soil and subsoil mixed. The church of St. Michael (restored) was given to the Templars in the 13th cent., and has a Trans. tower (probably dating from between 1140 and 1170) with traces of Saxon work; the uppermost storey is E. Eng. and is perforated with holes; there are numerous memorials to former rectors and to various families; the pulpit is a very fine example of the Jacobean period. The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have chapels. The Sailors' Institute was erected in 1889. A ship canal, 2 miles in length, extends from Shoreham harbour to Aldrington pa., and there is some trade in coals, corn, and timber. S. is noted for its oyster fisheries, which are carried on to a large extent in the river Adur.

Southwick (2), pa. and vil., S. Hants, 4½ N.E. of Fareham; ac. 4,219; soil clayey loam, overlying chalk. The church of St. James is a building of rubble and flints, in the Gothic style of the 15th cent.; there is a tomb with effigies in brass to John White (1555), and over the communion table is a very ancient painting, representing several heads of angels in the clouds singing the praises of God. S. has some small charities. The publicans of this vil., by charter of Queen Elizabeth, are exempt from having soldiers billeted on them. Here was formerly a priory of Black (or Austin) Canons, founded by Henry I. in 1133, and in which in 1445 Henry VI. was married to Margaret of Anjou. S. Park is a fine building situated in extensive and pleasant grounds with an artificial lake.

Southwick (3), pa., N. Northants, 3 N.W. of Oundle; ac. 4,601; soil heavy clay, overlying clay and ironstone. The church of St. Mary is E. Eng., and contains brasses to the Rev. Anthony Cade (1641) and Mrs. Grace Lynn (1681), and a monument by Roubiliac to George Lynn, dated 1758. The poor's land and money produce about £36 a year. Lynn's charity yielding about £14 yearly. S. Hall is a seat.

Southwick (4), tp. and to. on the Wear, pa. of Monk Wearmouth (q.v.), N.E. Dur., 1 N.W. of Sunderland, and within that parl. bor.; ac. 1,012. There are two eccl. pas. with modern churches, and places of worship for various Nonconformist bodies. The building of iron ships is extensively carried on.

Southwick (5), tp., pa. of North Bradley (q.v.), W. Wilts., 2 S.W. of Trowbridge; ac. 2,473. There are Baptist and Particular Baptist chapels. S. Manor Court (now occupied as a farmhouse) was the residence of Archbishop Stafford; it is surrounded by a moat, and the ruins of the chapel may still be traced.

Southwick (7), pl., pa. of Colvend (q.v.), S.E. Kirkcuds., Sc., 12½ S.W. of Dumfries. S. House is a seat.

Southwold, pa., mun. bor., seaport, and bathing-place, N. Suff., 12 S.S.W. of Lowestoft; ac. 560; soil sand and gravel. It was anciently called Sudwald or Southwood, in all probability from an adjacent wood, for the western boundaries still retain the appellation of Wood's End Marshes and Wood's End Creek. The town, which is pleasantly situated on a hill, with a fine common on the south, is in the form of a triangle and well paved, lighted with gas, and plentifully provided with excellent springs of fresh water. The church of St. Edmund (restored 1878) is a handsome structure of flint with stone dressings, of the Perp. period; the chancel roof is panelled and painted, small gilt stars studded on a blue ground being the principal decoration. The chancel was paved with encaustic tiles, and about three dozen of the original ones were discovered whilst recent restorations were being made in the chancel, and these are now preserved in the vestry; the roof is of oak and the compartments over the choir are painted with figures of angels holding scrolls containing in Old English characters the "Te Deum Laudamus" and the "Nunc Dimittis." The open rood-screen, with its exquisitely-fretted spires and graceful intricacies of carved work springing from panels, which contain painted figures of the saints with the Twelve Apostles in the centre (six on each side), is worthy of attention. The font is of stone and very elaborately carved, and with the pulpit (which is a splendid specimen of carved oak and richly painted) and screens are of the same date as the church; the stalls are also finely carved in oak. The oak chest which contains the old parish books is carved with a representation of St. George and the Dragon; over the vestry is a Jack in Armour, finely carved and painted in oak. This "Jack smite the Clock," as it is called, is used before the commencement of every service to warn the congregation of the entrance of the clergy. An iron mission room in Stradbroke Road was erected in 1885. There are Congregational and Wesleyan chapels. On April 25, 1659, there was a dreadful fire, which within the space of four hours consumed the town hall, prison, granaries, and 238 dwelling-houses; the loss sustained by the inhabitants was estimated at upwards of £40,000. S. has a maritime trade, which derived great advantage during the middle of the 18th cent. from the construction of two piers, tending greatly to the improvement of the harbour. The lighthouse on the North Cliff dates from 1890. Pilot boats and two lifeboats and life-saving rocket apparatus are stationed here; there is also a coastguard station. Herrings, sprats, smelts, and shrimps are caught here for the London market, and the sole and cod fishery is carried on; there are also salt, sauce and pickle works, rope walks, a brewery, and iron foundry. Here are many handsome marine villas and residences, standing in shrubberies and flower gardens; between these and the sea are beautiful promenades along the cliffs. The common is used for golf, lawn tennis, and other games. "Centre Cliff" hotel, opened in 1887, is a magnificent building standing in its own grounds, extending to the sea. A fair is held annually on Trinity Monday and the two following days. A free dispensary is supported by subscription; and there is a sailors' reading-room on the East Cliff (1864), containing billiard and bagatelle tables, and well supplied with newspapers. At Gun Hill Cliff is a breakwater; and on the Gun Hill is a battery of six 18-pounders, presented by the Duke of Cumberland to the Corporation in 1745. In 1665 the English and Dutch fleets had an engagement in Sole Bay, the former under the Duke of York and Prince Rupert, in which the Dutch were completely defeated, but the Earls of Portland and Marlborough fell in the engagement; a second battle was fought on May 28, 1672, between the English, under the command of H.R.H. the Duke of York, and the Dutch, under De Ruyter. Sutherland House, in High Street, was the residence from 1666 to 1672 of the Duke of York (afterwards James II.); the ceilings of the reception room and state bed-chamber are decorated with the royal badges of England and France.

Southworth-with-Croft, pa., S. Lancs., 5 N. of Warrington; ac. 1,884; soil loamy, overlying clay. Christ Church is in Perp. style. There are Catholic and Unitarian chapels. S. Hall, an ancient edifice, is now occupied as a farmhouse.

Soutra Hill, eminence (1,209 ft.) on border of Haddings. and Berws., Sc., 7½ N.N.W. of Lauder. The hill is situated at the west extremity of the Lammermuir Range, and commands a prospect extending over the Firth of Forth to the hills of Fifeshire. Near its summit stood a hospital, established by Malcolm IV. in the 12th cent., to which a church was attached; an aisle belonging to the latter still remains.

Sow (1), river, N.E. Warws., rises within a mile of Astley, on the south-west side of the vil., and runs past Exhall to Foleshill, the general direction of its course being S.E. Leaving Foleshill on the right, it describes a nearly semicircular curve towards the east, the town of Coventry standing 2 miles from the river midway along the base of the arc thus formed. From Whitley Abbey (where it receives a small affluent from Coventry) it runs S. by E. past Baginton Hall and Stoneleigh to the Avon. The length of the river is 15 miles.

Sow (2), river, W. Staffs., rises in the west vicinity of Broughton, and runs S. by E., E. by S., and S.E. by Eccleshall, Chebsey, and Cresswell to Stafford, receiving the Meese a little below Chebsey; after leaving Stafford it unites with the Penk, and pursues its course E., E.S.E., and E.N.E., bordering the park of Shugborough House on the north, and joining the Trent opposite the vil. of Great Haywood. Its length is about 18 miles.

Sow (3), river, Ballaghkeen and Shelmaliere East bars., E. co. Wex., Ir., rises 8 E. of Enniscorthy, and runs S.W., S., and S.E. to Wexford Harbour, which it enters at Castlebridge. Its length is about 11 miles.

Sowerby (1), extensive tp. and large vil., pa. of and about 4 W.S.W. from Halifax (q.v.), W.R. Yorks.; ac. 6,894. In the tp. are several eccl. pas. with modern churches, and various Nonconformist places of worship. The town hall (1876) comprises a large room for general use, a committee room for the use of the Local Board, and a small office. Here are almshouses for three men and three women (unmarried), who are allowed 2s. 6d. per month. The charities for distribution amount to £40 yearly.

Sowerby (2), eccl. pa., tp., and considerable vil., pa. of and 2 S. from Thirsk (q.v.), N.R. Yorks.; ac. 2,424. The Norm. church of St. Oswald was restored in 1883. The Wesleyans have a chapel. There are a number of charities.

Sowerby (3). [INSKIP-WITH-SOWERBY.]

Sowerby Bridge, eccl. pa. and to. on the Calder, at the termination of the Rochdale Canal, pa. of and 4 W.S.W. from Halifax (q.v.), W.R. Yorks. Christ Church was built originally in 1526, near the bridge over the Calder; the present church, a handsome building of stone, dates from 1819. There are Wesleyan, Congregational, Baptist, and Primitive and New Connexion Methodist chapels. Half a century ago this place consisted only of a few scattered houses; now there are worsted, cotton, and corn mills, chemical, iron, dye, and oilcloth works, and capacious wharves on the canal; and as the centre of an extending and important locality it has increased into a town of considerable magnitude, with a thriving and increasing trade. The Local Board offices, combined with public baths and slaughter-houses, are substantial stone buildings. There are Liberal and Conservative clubs. Tonge charity, amounting to £35 yearly, is distributed at Christmas in coals and blankets.

Sowton, pa. and vil. on the Clist, E. Dev., 4 E. of Exeter; ac. 1,094; soil sandy, overlying red sand. The church of St. Michael was rebuilt 1845, in the Dec. style. There are some small charities. Bishop's Court, formerly a residence of the Bishops of Exeter, is a seat.

Soyea, islet off entrance to Loch Inver, pa. of Assynt (q.v.), S.W. Suths., Sc., 3 W. by S. of Lochinver. The islet is less than ¾ mile long from east to west and about 1 furlong broad. It is 110 ft. high, and is covered with grass.

Soyland, tp. and small to., pa. of Halifax (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., 12 N.N.E. of Rochdale; ac. 4,270. The Congregationalists, Methodist New Connexion, and Wesleyans have chapels. The charities amount to £25 yearly. There are cotton and silk mills.

Spa, or Tralee Spa, vil. and watering-place on Tralee Harbour, pas. of Ballynahaglish and Clogherbrien (q.v.), N.W. co. Kerry, Ir., 2¾ N.W. of Tralee. The well or spa is of a light chalybeate character, and was brought into note about 1746 for some chronic complaints, including rheumatism, scurvy, and indigestion.

Spacey Houses, ha., pas. of Kirkby Overblow and Spofforth (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., about 4½ N.W. of Wetherby. A stock sale is held here every other Monday.

Spa Hill, eminence (496 ft.), Shanid bar., W. co. Lim., Ir., 4 S.S.E. of Glin.

Spalding, pa., seaport, and mkt. to. (T. & S.), S.E. Lincs., 14 S.W. of Boston; ac. 10,258. The Welland runs through the to., dividing it into two portions, the larger of which is on the north bank; it is navigable for vessels of 80 tons, by which means a trade in coal, oil-cake, and timber is carried on. The course of the river, extending in a comparatively straight line for 2 miles, constitutes the remains of highest antiquity about S., for the embankments on each side of the arm of the sea or Wash, beginning from the Marsh Rails, are undoubtedly the work of the Romans. The High Bridge over the Welland was rebuilt in 1838; there are three other bridges, for foot passengers only. The pa. church of SS. Mary and Nicholas (restored 1865), originally E. Eng., and rebuilt in 1294, has many Dec. and Perp. features, some later portions being of Post-Reformation date; in the church are monuments to the Johnson and other families. There are two eccl. pas. with modern churches. The church of St. Peter (1875), a chapel-of-ease to SS. Mary and Nicholas, is in E. Eng. style. St. John's (Free Church of England) (1873) is an iron building. The Catholic church, in Henrietta Street (built 1876, enlarged 1879), is in E. Eng. style. There are places of worship for various Nonconformist bodies, and a Friends' meeting-house. The Corn Exchange (1855–56) is in Elizabethan style, with an illuminated clock; close to the Exchange is the Butter Market (1857). The Masonic Hall is in Pinchbeck Street. In Hall Place is a fountain. The Johnson Hospital (1881), partially endowed, is a plain building in Domestic Gothic style; the Infirmary and Dispensary (1839) has rooms in the Hospital. The Christian Association and Literary Institute, in Spring Gardens (1875), contains a lecture hall and reading and class rooms. The S. Mechanics' Institute, in Red Lion Street (1845), contains reading-rooms and a library. Gamlyn's almshouses, for thirty-four men and women (founded by Sir John Gamlyn in 1650), were rebuilt in 1844, in Gothic style. Mrs. E. Sparkes's almshouses for six widows were rebuilt in 1812; each inmate receives 3s. 6d. weekly. The charities for distribution amount to about £200 yearly. There are five yearly fairs for cattle and merchandise, held the first Tuesday after Lincoln fair (April), last Tuesday in June, August and September 25, and on the Friday before the London great Christmas market; also a statute fair for hiring servants in May. The town carries on a trade in corn, meal, flour, timber, and cake. There is a large steam flour-mill besides several windmills for grinding corn, and a steam saw-mill. Large quantities of fruit and vegetables are also sent to the London markets and manufacturing districts. S., as a town, existed before Crowland, and its central position in the Mercian kingdom led to the erection of a castle, the site of which was at the north entrance to the town on the east side; some vestiges of the moat may be distinguished; and a fetter-lock, preserved on the spot, is believed to have been the veritable lock of the castle of Ivo Taillebois, Earl of Angers and nephew of the Conqueror, who resided here, and, dying about 1114, was buried in the conventual church. There are some 15th-cent. remains of the outbuildings of the Benedictine priory of SS. Mary and Nicholas, founded in 1051; these are now incorporated into dwelling-houses, and consist of a turret staircase, the dormitory, an octagonal turret or prison, and some portions of the moat. The house known as Fulney Farm, 1½ S.E. of the town, is a very ancient structure, erected in 1080, and is supposed to have been the dairy-farm of the monastery; there are still traces of the moat and fishpond by which the building was surrounded. Ayscoughfee Hall and Fulney House are seats.

St. Michael (restored) was originally Norm., and erected on the site of an earlier Saxon edifice, of which some few vestiges remain; the south arcade of the nave is Norm. and the north Dec.; the chancel retains a singular sedile of stone consisting of one long bench; on the south side of the tower are several figures; and in the church are marble tablets to the Chaytor and Straubenzee families, and 13th-cent. monuments to Lord Scrope, of Danby, and FitzRandolph. There are brickworks. S. and Thorney Hall are seats.

Spennymoor, eccl. pa. and mkt. to. (s.), pa. of Whitworth (q.v.), S. Dur., about 6 S. of Durham. S. has rapidly advanced in importance, wealth, and population, owing to the product of coal. The church of St. Paul (built 1857) is in Gothic style; and several Nonconformist bodies have chapels. S. has a town hall, a theatre, a Masonic Hall, baths, a Memorial Hall, and market halls. The Victoria Park, of 10 ac., was opened in 1889.

Spen Valley Division, one of the nineteen parl. divs. of the W.R. Yorks.; it lies in the eastern part of the Riding, and returns one member.

Spernall (in Domesday "Spernore"), pa. and vil. on the Arrow, W. Warws., 3½ N. of Alcester; ac. 1,065; soil and subsoil marl. The church of St. Leonard was partly rebuilt 1844, in Norm. style. The west turret is Dec.

Sperrin Mountains, range, co. Londy. and N. co. Tyr., Ir. The main chain extends 20 miles east and west between Draperstown and Strabane, and is situated partly on the border of the two cos. and partly in Lower Strabane bar., co. Tyr The highest point is Sawel (2,236 ft.). A branch chain extends upwards of 20 N. by E. through co. Londy., between Maghera and Garvagh on the east and Dungiven and Limavady on the west, terminating in the vicinity of Coleraine.

Spetchley, pa. and vil., Mid Worcs., 3 E. of Worcester; ac. 779; soil variable, overlying marl and clay. The church of All Saints is Dec.; there is a piscina in the nave; among the monuments are those of Sir Robert Berkeley (d. 1656), Mr. John Slade, and a brass to William Smythe (d. 1653). S. Park, a seat, is a modern building in Classic style, with a Roman Catholic chapel dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

Spettisbury, pa. and pleasant vil., N. Dors., 3 S.E. of Blandford; ac. 2,136; soil light and chalky loam, overlying chalk and gravel. The vil. is on the Stour, over which there is a bridge of nine arches, connecting it with Tarrant Crawford. The church of St. John the Baptist, originally Perp., was rebuilt (with the exception of the tower) in 1859; there is a monument in the north aisle to John Bowyer (d. 1599). Here are Primitive Methodist and Congregational chapels. The school is endowed. There is also a priory of canons regular; attached to the priory is a church open to the public. Here is a hall let for public meetings. In the neighbourhood are remains of a fortification, in which many coins and other relics of the Saxons have been found; it is called S. Ring, or Crawford Castle.

Spey, at Aberlour.

Spexhall, pa. and vil., N.E. Suff., 2 N. of Halesworth; ac. 1,484; soil clay and marl, overlying clay. The church of St. Peter (restored 1876) is Norm. and E. Eng.; the porch is a good specimen of E. Eng. architecture; the ruins of the tower still exist, covered with ivy. The only charity is the poor's land, of the yearly value of £15. The Manor House, about ½ mile from the church, is a seat.

Spey, river, rises in S. Invs., Sc., east of the north end of Loch Lochy, and flows through that co. in a S.E. direction, through Elgs. and along the Banffs. boundary, for over 100 miles, to the Moray Firth, which it joins about midway between Lossiemouth and Portknockie. About a mile from the source the S. expands into Loch Spey, and some 32 miles lower into Loch Insh; it has a great number of tributary streams, but none of any great size or importance. The area of the basin is about 1,300 square miles. Owing to the high-lying character of the sources of the river and its main tributaries, the S. is peculiarly subject to heavy floods, and is the most rapid-flowing river in Scotland. As a salmon river it ranks next to the Tay and the Tweed. Shipbuilding is carried on at its mouth, and timber is floated down the middle reaches of the river, but no part of the S. is properly navigable. At Kingussie and elsewhere there are some well-marked river-terraces.

Speymouth, pa. and q.s. pa. (extending into the pa. of Urquhart), N. Elgs., Sc., lying along the left bank of the Spey; ac. 6,025; soil generally light, with some black loam on a gravelly subsoil. The Established church is about 1½ N.W. of Fochabers. The principal trade was shipbuilding (now declining) and the exportation of corn, timber, and salmon; of the latter, considerable quantities are sent to London and other southern markets. The imports are guano, bone manure, timber, and coal. There was formerly a good harbour, formed by the mouth of the Spey, and here a number of vessels have been built entirely of native wood. A fair is held on June 30.

Spiddle, fishing vil. on the north shore of Galway Bay, pa. of Moycullen (q.v.), S.W. co. Galway, Ir., about 10 W. of Galway.

Spiggie (1), pl., pa. of Dunrossness (q.v.), in south of Mainland, S. Shetland, Sc., 15 S.S.W. of Lerwick.

Spiggie (2), loch, pa. of Dunrossness, in south of Mainland, S. Shetland, Sc., 15½ S.S.W. of Lerwick. The loch extends about 1½ N.N.W. and S.S.E.; it affords good sea-trout fishing.

Spike Island, in Cork Harbour, E. co. Cork, Ir., 1 S. of Queenstown. The island is well fortified, and forms one of the chief defences of the harbour. Fort Westmoreland (built 1791) was from 1847 to 1885 occupied by convicts, who built the Royal Dockyard between this island and that of Haulbowline (q.v.) on the north-west.

Spilling Rock, islet on south side of estuary of Shannon, N. co. Lim., Ir., 6½ W. of Limerick. Here is a fixed light, visible 4 miles.

Spilsby, pa. and mkt. to. (M.), E. Lincs., 8 S.W. of Alford; ac. 1,147. The town is well built, and consists chiefly of two streets and the market-place, which is intersected in the centre by a row of houses. The church of St. James (restored 1879) is Dec. and Perp.; it contains a very interesting series of monuments commemorating several of the most distinguished members of the house of Willoughby, including an altar-tomb of stone adorned with shafts originally supporting a canopy, and on the upper slab lie the effigies of John, second Baron Willoughby de Eresby (d. 1349) and Joan (Roseline) his wife; a fine altar-tomb of stone and supporting a finely-carved alabaster effigy in full armour of John, third Baron Willoughby de Eresby (d. 1372); an altar-tomb of alabaster, and on the coped slab above are recumbent effigies of Robert, fourth Baron Willoughby de Eresby (d. 1396), and his third wife Elizabeth, daughter and heiress of Lord Latimer and widow of Lord Nevill of Raby; a brass with effigy to Margaret, daughter of William, Lord Zouch, and second wife of Robert, fourth Baron Willoughby de Eresby; a remarkably fine triple canopied brass with effigies of William, fifth Baron Willoughby de Eresby (d. 1410), and Lucy, daughter of Lord Strange of Knockyn, his first wife; a heavy monumental stone screen, between the north aisle of the nave and the Willoughby chapel eastward of it, forming a memorial to Richard Bertie, Esq. (d. 1582), and his wife Catherine, Baroness Willoughby de Eresby and widow of Charles Brandon, first Duke of Suffolk (d. 1580); a monument of Derbyshire alabaster and various marbles, bearing on a panelled base a reclining effigy of Catherine, only daughter of Peregrine Bertie, tenth Baron Willoughby de Eresby, and wife of Sir Lewis Watson, Knight, of Rockingham (d. 1610); and above this is an erect effigy of her father, the famous Peregrine, tenth Lord Willoughby (d. 1601). Here are Wesleyan and Primitive chapels. The large Congregational chapel has been purchased by the Freemasons for a Masonic hall. A free grammar school was founded here in 1550. The town hall and Corn Exchange stand in the market-place, at one end of which is an ancient market cross, consisting of a plain octagonal shaft rising from a stepped base. The S. Foal Show is held on the first or second Monday in September, and the agricultural ploughing meeting in November. A large fair is held on the first Monday after July 12 for fat and store cattle, sheep, pigs, and horses. The charities amount to £105 yearly, for the benefit of the poor. Sir John Franklin, the Arctic explorer, was born at S., and a statue to him has been erected here.

Spindleston, tp., pa. of Bamburgh (q.v.), N. Northumb., 2½ E. of Belford; ac. 460. Formerly this was a Roman station.

Spink Hill, ha., pa. of Eckington (q.v.), N.E. Derbys., 8 S.W. of Sheffield. Here is the Catholic college of Mount St. Mary, and the mission church of the Immaculate Conception.

Spinningdale, small vil. on Dornoch Frith, pa. of Creich (q.v.), S. Suths., Sc., 6 S.E. of Ardgay.

Spinster's Rock, cromlech on Dartmoor, S. Dev., 2 N.W. of Gidleigh. It is a slab (15 ft. by 10 ft.) resting on three upright stones 6½ ft. high, and is said to be the only erect cromlech in Devon.

Spire Hill, eminence (423 ft.) in Emo demesne, pa. of Coolbanagher, N.E. Q. Co., Ir., 3 S. of Portarlington. The hill is surmounted by an obelisk, which forms a conspicuous object in the landscape.

Spital (2). [SPITTLE.]

Spitalfield, vil., pa. of Caputh (q.v.), E. Perths., Sc., 6½ S.E. of Dunkeld.

Spitalfields, pa. of East London, E. Middx., 1 E.N.E. of St. Paul's; ac. 73. It was a place of interment during the period of the Roman occupation, as was proved by the discovery of a cemetery wherein were found cinerary urns, stone coffins, bones, lamps, pottery, and other remains. The name is derived from the Augustinian Priory and Hospital of St. Mary, established by Walter Brune, Sheriff of London, in 1197, and dedicated to the Saviour and the Virgin. Christ Church (1723–29) is in Classical style, with a portico of the Doric order and a lofty spire. S. also includes the eccl. pa. of St. Stephen, and part of St. Mary's. St. Stephen's Church (1862) is in modern Gothic style. S. was first built over during the years 1650–60. Thirty years later many Huguenots settled here, driven from France by the Edict of Nantes; they brought with them the silk manufacture, which has survived to the present day, although it is now in a very declining state. The general character of the neighbourhood is extremely squalid, the most recent feature being the erection of some crowded lodging-houses built in immense blocks. The manufacture of the most exquisite fabrics is still carried on to some extent in the small houses with long "weavers' windows" running the whole length of the workroom in the upper storey. Brewing is also an important industry, and the Great Eastern Railway Company has a large station, which gives occupation to many of the inhabitants. Many French names still survive, especially among the weavers and jewellers. The preaching-cross, where the famous Spital sermons were delivered, stood in the churchyard adjoining the Priory (now Spital Square). The cross was demolished during the Civil War, but the sermons are still preached before the Lord Mayor on Easter Monday and Tuesday at Christ Church, Newgate Street.

Spital Hill, tp., pa. of and ½ N.E. from Mitford (q.v.), S.E. Northumb.; ac. 155.

Spital Square, eccl. pa., pa. of Spitalfields (q.v.), in East London, E. Middx., 1 E.N.E. of St. Paul's. The Square is an open place, once habited chiefly by silk and velvet manufacturers. The church of St. Mary was erected in 1693.

Spit Bank (1), shoal in Cork Harbour, E. co. Cork, Ir., between Queenstown and Spike Island. Here is a fixed light, visible 5 miles.

Spitchwick, ha., pa. of Widecombe-in-the-Moor (q.v.), S. Dev., about 8½ N.W. of Newton Abbot.

Spithead, channel, S.E. Hants, between N.E. I. of W. and the mainland, opposite Portsmouth. S. extends about 12 E.S.E. from Southampton Water and the Solent to the open Channel, and has a general breadth of nearly 4 miles. In its narrower sense the name is given only to the roadstead outside Portsmouth—so called from the Spit Sand—which embraces an area extending about 2 N.W. and S.E., and a mile and a half wide. Owing to its sheltered position—protected from westerly gales by the high ground in the I. of W., and from those which blow from the east by the mainland—the roadstead has long been a station of the Royal Navy. The system of fortifications guarding the entrance to the harbour (including Fort Monckton, Southsea Castle, and Fort Cumberland) also serves as a defence to the roadstead. A buoy marks the spot where the Royal George went down in 1782. Other vessels which have been lost here are the Mary Rose, which sank during a battle in 1545, and the Edgar and the Boyne, destroyed by fire in 1711 and in 1795.

Spittal (1), or Spittle, eccl. pa. and watering-place at the mouth of the Tweed, pa. of Tweedmouth (q.v.), N. Northumb., about 1 S.E. of Berwick-upon-Tweed. S., which derives its name from the ancient hospital formerly existing here, is situated close to the seashore, and consists principally of one wide street nearly a mile long. The houses nearest Berwick are very old and in a decayed condition, but many well-built houses and detached villas have been erected since 1855 at the extreme end of the vil., facing the sea, and these are used as lodging-houses during the season. The sands, being smooth and firm, are very suitable for bathing. Here are also excellent baths, constantly supplied with sea water, pumped up by means of a windmill. Near is a strong mineral spring or Spa, said to be very beneficial in curing complaints in which chalybeates and other tonics are recommended.

During the summer season a steamboat runs very frequently between Berwick and S. A substantial concrete sea-wall, which is about half a mile in length and faces the German Ocean, was built in 1894. The irregular ground at the back of the wall has been levelled and laid out with walks. The church of St. John the Evangelist is in E. Eng. style, and there are Nonconformist places of worship. The Public Hall, a stone edifice, was built 1885. Here was once a hospital called "God's House," erected before 1327; and another, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, dates from the 13th cent. The trade of S. is chiefly that of fish-curing, for which there are several large establishments; there are also manure factories, and a shovel and spade manufactory.

Spittal (2), ha., pas. of Glentham, Hemswell, and Bishop Norton (q.v.), N. Lincs., 8 s. of Kirton Lindsey. A yearly fair for cattle is held here on Nov. 25.

Spittal (3), pa., Mid Pembs., 4½ N. by E. of Haverfordwest; ac. 2,803; soil fertile. The church of St. Mary is E. Eng., with a Norm. font. The Baptists, Wesleyans, and Congregationalists have chapels. The place is supposed to take its name from a hospitium established by the monks of St. Davids, traces of which remain. There are also remains of several ancient forts. Scolton is a seat.

Spittle (2), ha., pa. of Fangfoss (q.v.), E.R. Yorks., 4 N.W. of Pocklington. It is the site of an ancient hospital.

Spittle (3). [SPITTAL (1).]

Spittlegate, or Spitalgate, eccl. pa. and tp. within the mun. bor. of Grantham (q.v.), S.W. Lincs.; ac. 2,052. The church of St. John the Evangelist is in E. Eng. style. Here are some extensive agricultural, mining, electrical, and general engineering works, breweries, ironworks, and a corn-mill; malting and brick-making are also carried on.

Spixworth, pa. and vil., E. Norf., about 4 N. of Norwich; ac. 1,224; soil gravel and sand, overlying sand. The church of St. Peter, a plain E. Eng. building, has several monuments to the Peck and Longe families, including in the chancel a marble monument with two recumbent figures (1635) to William and Alicia Peck. S. Hall is a handsome mansion of red brick, a little south-west of the church, in a well-wooded park.

Spodden, stream, S.E. Lancs., rises 2½ S. of Bacup, and runs 6 S. by E. to the Roch, which it joins immediately below Rochdale.

Spofforth, pa., tp. (extending into the pa. of Kirk Deighton, and formerly called "Spofforth-with-Stockeld"), and vil., W.R. Yorks., 3 N.W. of Wetherby; ac. of pa. 13,182, of tp. 5,466; soil loamy, overlying gravel and clay. The church of All Saints (rebuilt 1855) is in Norm. style, and contains a recumbent figure of John de Plompton, one of the Knights of Malta. The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have chapels. The charities are small. Here are the remains of an ancient castle, dismantled in 1461. Stockeld Park is a seat.

Spofforth-with-Stockeld. [SPOFFORTH.]

Spondon, pa., tp., and vil., S. Derbys., 3½ E. by S. of Derby; ac. of pa. 3,890, of tp. 3,287; soil loam, clay, and gravel, overlying clay and gravel. The church of St. Werburgh (restored 1892) is chiefly Dec., with a western tower of the E. Eng. period; in the north aisle is a mural monument with bust to Elizabeth, wife of Henry Gilbert of Locko (d. 1665); there are three stone stalls in the chancel, and a piscina in the east wall. The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel. The charities amount to about £282 yearly, for distribution in fuel, clothing, and money, and there are four almshouses. Here is a large colour manufactory and a tar distillery. Locko Park and S. Hall are seats.

Spoonbed Hill (929 ft.), pa. of Painswick (q.v.), Mid Gloucs. It commands a fine view of the valley of the Severn. On a clear day portions of twelve cos. can be seen from the summit. It is crowned by a British earthwork, still in excellent preservation; Roman coins have been found within it, and during the Civil War it was held by the troops of Charles I. on several occasions.

Spooner Row, ha., pa. of Wymondham (q.v.), S.E. Norf., about 10 S.W. of Norwich. S. was formerly inhabited by makers of spoons and other ware.

Spooyt Vane, The. [GLEN WYLLIN.]

Sporle-with-Palgrave, pa. and vil., S.W. Norf., 2½ N.E. of Swaffham; ac. 4,168; soil various, overlying clay and marl. The church of the Virgin Mary, which has been restored at different times, is a large and handsome building of stone of the E. Eng. and Dec. periods. In the south aisle is a piscina, and a fresco representing the legend of St. Katherine of Alexandria. There was formerly a church at Little Palgrave, but it has long since gone to decay. Here are Primitive Methodist and Baptist chapels. The charities are of the annual value of £92. Here was once a Benedictine priory, founded in the reign of Henry II. as a cell to the abbey of Saumur.

Spotland, eccl. pa. and large tp., pa. of Rochdale (q.v.), S.E. Lancs., extending from the Roch to the Irwell; ac. 14,174. The church of St. Clement, within the bor. of Rochdale, is a stone building erected in 1835. There are some charities. The streams of S., its mines of coal, and quarries of slate and freestone, are prolific sources of wealth and prosperity to its inhabitants. Baizes and flannels, with almost every variety of cotton fabric, are here manufactured. In the year 1610 there were five fulling-mills turned by the "Spodden Brook water and divers men were in trade." Now the streams are thickly studded with mills, and their slopes adorned with the seats and residences of wealthy owners.

Spratton, pa., tp., and vil., Mid Northants, 6¾ N.W. of Northampton; ac. of pa. 2,248, of tp. 2,169; soil clay and marl, overlying stone. The church of St. Luke (restored 1846–47) is of Norm., Trans., E. Eng., and later periods, and the chancel retains piscina, sedile, and a low side window; there is also a piscina in the north aisle; in the south aisle are two founders' tombs of the Dec. period, and in the north chancel aisle a low embattled altar-tomb with a recumbent effigy of Sir John Swynford, Knight (d. 1371). On the south side of the churchyard stand the base and shaft of a stone cross of the 14th cent. There is a Baptist chapel. The town and charity estate, producing £60 yearly, is applied for apprenticing, distribution to the poor, and for other purposes. Broomhill, S. Grange, and S. Hall are seats.

Spreyton, pa. and vil. between the Teign and Taw, Mid Dev., 8 E. of Okehampton; ac. 3,547; soil heavy, overlying clay. The Perp. church of St. Michael (anciently belonging to Cowick Priory, near Exeter) passed into the hands later of the Abbey and Convent of Tavistock. There is a Bible Christian chapel. The charities are small.

Spridlington, pa. and vil., Mid Lincs., 9 N.E. of Lincoln; ac. 2,232; soil loam and clay, overlying limestone and clay. The church of St. Hilary (1875) is Gothic.

Springbank, pl., pa. of and adjoining Ayton (q.v.), E. Berws., Sc. The United Presbyterians have a church.

Springburn, q.s. pa. and to., pa. of Barony (q.v.), N.W. Lanarks., Sc., 1½ N.N.E. of Glasgow, of which it forms a suburb. The q.s. pa. is partly in the city of Glasgow. The places of worship include Established, Free, and United Presbyterian churches; a Roman Catholic church, dedicated to St. Aloysius; and Baptist and Evangelical Union chapels.

Springfield (1), pa. on the Chelmer, Mid Essex, forming a north-east suburb of Chelmsford; ac. 2,898; soil light, overlying clay. The church of All Saints is Perp., and contains a fine oak screen, a Norm. font, and a brass (c. 1420). The chapel-of-ease, Holy Trinity, was built in 1843, in Norm. style. The Wesleyans have a chapel. There are four ancient almshouses, and six others were erected in later years. A vestry hall was built in 1873. The county prison is here. The charities amount to over £40 yearly.

Springfield (2), q.s. pa. on the Eden, pas. of Ceres, Cults, and Cupar, E. Fifes., Sc., and vil., pa. of Cupar, 2½ S.W. of Cupar-Fife. The inhabitants find employment in the flax and jute works. Crawford Priory, a fine mansion on the road to Cupar, is a seat.

Springfield (3), vil. on the North Esk, pa. of Lasswade (q.v.), N. Edins., Sc., 3½ S.W. of Dalkeith. There are paper mills, and S. House is a seat.

Springfield (4), vil. on the Sark, pa. of Gretna (q.v.), S. Dumfs., Sc., ½ E. of Gretna Green.

Springfield (5), vil., pa. of Shankill (q.v.), S.E. co. Antr., Ir., now included in the bor. of Belfast.

Spring Grove, eccl. pa., pas. of Heston and Isleworth (q.v.), W. Middx., about ½ N.E. of Hounslow. The church of St. Mary was erected in 1859. The Saddlers' Company's Almshouses (1859) are known as "Honnor's Home." Here are the premises of the Borough Road Training College for Teachers (undenominational). Spring Grove House is a seat.

Springhead, vil., pa. of Rochdale (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., about 1½ S.E. of Oldham. It is a very rising neighbourhood, and contains large cotton factories; it stands on an eminence of nearly 800 ft. above the level of the sea, commands a fine prospect, and has some spacious mansions, the seats of manufacturers in the neighbourhood. There is a pretty Gothic Congregational chapel (1850), with Sunday schools attached.

Springholme, small vil., pa. of Urr (q.v.), S.E. Kirkcuds., Sc., 1 E. of Kirkpatrick, on the road from Dumfries. In the neighbourhood is a woollen manufactory.

Springkell, estate with seat of same name, pa. of Kirkpatrick-Fleming (q.v.), S. Dumfs., Sc., 4 S.E. of Ecclefechan.

Springside Colliery, vil., pa. of Dreghorn (q.v.), N. Ayrs., Sc., about 3 N.W. of Kilmarnock.

Springthorpe, pa. and vil., W. Lincs., 5 S.E. of Gainsborough; ac. 1,142; soil stiff clay, overlying clay. The church of SS. George and Laurence, the only church in England with this dedication (restored 1865), exhibits features of the earliest Norm. and E. Eng. periods, with a good deal of modern work; the tower is reputed to be Saxon; the inner doorway of the porch is a fine example of ornate Norm. Suspended in the chancel are a maiden's funeral crown and gloves, cut out of white paper, said to be memorials of a girl named Mary Hill, who was killed in 1814 through the unwary manner in which she pulled one of the bell ropes. On the left-hand side of the vestry doorway is a slab of the 15th cent., built into the wall.

Springvale, vil. and bathing-place, pa. of Freshwater (q.v.), I. of W., about 2 S.E. of Ryde. The houses in this vil. are erected along the seashore, overlooking the Channel, Ryde pier, Southampton Water, and the Hants and Sussex coasts; to the east are the wooded heights at the back of Sea View. St. Clare, a castellated mansion, is a seat.

Sproatley, pa. and vil., E.R. Yorks., 7 N.N.E. of Hull; ac. 1,380; soil and subsoil clayey. The church of St. Swithin (restored 1886) was built 1820, on the site of the old building, in Gothic style, two ancient tombstones being discovered during the digging of the foundations; there is a brass to Thomas English, of Hull. The Wesleyans have a chapel. A charity bequeathed by Mrs. Bridget-Biggs in 1773 produces about £300 yearly, which is partly used as an endowment for the schools; and there are some other small charities.

Sproston, tp. and vil. on the Dane, pa. of and 2 E.N.E. from Middlewich (q.v.), Mid Chesh.; ac. 874. There are Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist chapels.

Sprotborough, or Sprotbrough, pa., tp., and vil. on the Don, W.R. Yorks., 3 W.S.W. of Doncaster; ac. of pa. 3,967, of tp. 2,733; soil loam and lime, overlying limestone. The church of St. Mary is Gothic, and contains several altar-tombs and other monuments of the Fitzwilliam and Copley families, including one with the effigies of a knight and his dame (temp. Henry III.), and a brass to William Fitzwilliam (1474); two flags and other relics, believed to have belonged to the army of Charles I., are preserved, and there is a remarkable stone chair of the 13th or 14th cent., with figures of Thor and Saturn. The pa. has several charities; and there was a hospital, founded in 1361 and dedicated to St. Edmund. S. Hall, a seat, was built by Sir Godfrey Copley (temp. Charles II.), in the Classic style, and contains a large library and a good collection of pictures.

Sproughton, pa. and vil. on the Gipping, S.E. Suff., 3 N.W. of Ipswich; ac. 2,393; soil mixed, overlying gravel. The church of All Saints (restored) is an ancient pile of flint. The poor have a yearly charge of £1 6s. out of a field at Whitton. Elizabeth Bull in 1618 left a cottage, to be occupied by two deserving poor widows, members of the Church of England. The Chauntry, a seat, stands on an eminence commanding prospects of Ipswich, the vale of the navigable Gipping, and surrounding neighbourhood. Here is a fine lake called Beech Water, the area of which is several acres, surrounded by beech and other trees.

Sprouston, pa. and vil. on the Tweed, N.E. Roxbs., Sc.; ac. 8,635; soil near the river rich black loam, generally clayey. The vil. is on the south bank of the Tweed, about 2½ E. of Kelso.

Sprowston, extensive pa. and straggling vil., E. Norf., 2 N. of Norwich; ac. 2,576; soil extremely light, subsoil generally gravel, with patches of clay at varying depths, from which excellent bricks are made. The church of SS. Mary and Margaret (restored 1890), an ancient edifice of flint and stone, contains several handsome monuments, amongst the most interesting of which, but in a state of great dilapidation, are four to the Corbet family (1559–1617), others to the Micklethwaits (1805), and several mural tablets, including one in the chancel to Sir Thomas Adams, Bart., Lord Mayor of London in 1645 (d. 1667). The church of St. Cuthbert, a chapel-of-ease, is in E. Eng. style. A sum of £30 yearly is expended for fuel for the poor. There are two corn mills in the pa. S. Hall, a fine mansion of red brick, pleasantly situated on the Wroxham Road, is a seat.

Sproxton (1), pa. and vil., N.E. Leics., 9 N.E. of Melton Mowbray; ac. 2,360; soil clay and ironstone, overlying stiff clay and yellow limestone. The church of St. Bartholomew (restored 1882–84) is in E. Eng. style; in the churchyard is an ancient stone cross, which once stood on a foot-bridge over a small stream near the vil. There is a Wesleyan Methodist chapel. In the vicarage grounds is a hermitage, at the entrance to which is a grotesque figure and an inscription.

Sproxton (2), tp., pa. of and 2 s. from Helmsley (q.v.), N.R. Yorks.; ac. 5,311. The church of St. Chad is a structure of the Tudor period; it was formerly standing at West Newton Grange, in the pa. of Oswaldkirk, and had been used as a barn, but was given by the Earl of Feversham to the vicar of Helmsley, who took it down and rebuilt it as a chapel-of-ease at Sproxton in 1879. On the north side of the church is a small window containing a fragment of old stained glass, formerly in Harome church, representing the "Crucifixion."

Spur Ness, bold headland forming the south extremity of the island of Sanday (q.v.), N.E. Ork., Sc., 19 N.E. of Kirkwall.

Spurness, Holms of, group of islets in Spurness Sound (q.v.), N.E. Ork., Sc., 18½ N.E. of Kirkwall.

Spurness Sound, channel, N.E. Ork., Sc., 19 N.E. of Kirkwall. The channel lies between the islands of Sanday on the N.N.W. and Stronsay on the S.S.E., the distance between the two being upwards of 2 miles.

Spurn Head, or Spurn Point, pa. of Kilnsea (q.v.), E.R. Yorks. It is a low headland of gravel and sand, accumulated by the sea and wind, on the north side of the mouth of the Humber. On the Point are two lighthouses, under the management of the Trinity House, London; there is also telegraphic communication with Hull. Here are cottages for a few seamen who have charge of the lifeboats.

Stable Hills, promontory in Derwentwater Lake, S. Cumb., on the east shore, about 1 S. of Keswick.

Stacka Bay, inlet, pa. of Rushen, south-west coast of I. of M., 4 W. by S. of Castletown. The beach is strewn with masses of rock torn from the cliffs above. There are also several caves, one of which, called the Fairy Hole, can be entered by a boat. On the beach stands the celebrated Sugar Loaf (q.v.).

Stackallan, pa. on the Boyne, Upper Slane bar., N. co. Meath, Ir., 3 N.E. of Navan; ac. 2,351. The Protestant church was built when the land here was the property of the ancient family of Barnewall, and over the door is an inscription commemorating one of that family and his wife; in the church is a tablet to Baron Hamilton, who distinguished himself at the battle of the Boyne (1690). S. House is a seat, and the Meath militia are allowed to encamp in the park for annual training.

Stack Castle Rocks, or The Stacks, group of three rocks in pa. of Castlemartin, off south coast of Pembs., 1½ W.N.W. of St. Govan's Head. The rocks, which are lofty and precipitous, are situated only a few yards from the mainland. They are frequented by innumerable sea-birds, the most common being the razorbill, which nests here in May, June, and July.

Stack, Loch, a loch at the foot of Ben Stack, pa. of Eddrachillis (q.v.), W. Suths., Sc. North-west from the loch runs the river Laxford, which, as well as Loch S., abounds with fish.

Stack of Scarlet, detached rock on west side of entrance to Castletown Bay, S.W. I. of M., 1 S. by W. of Castletown. The rock consists of an immense mass of black basalt, and is between 40 and 50 ft. in height.

Stackpole Elidor, pa. on the sea-coast, S. Pembs., 8½ S.E. of Milford; ac. 2,988; soil mostly productive. The church of St. Elidyr and St. James (restored 1855) is E. Eng. and later, with remains of E. Norm. work; it contains some ancient monuments, including the recumbent figure of an armed knight, which is very well preserved. The pa. contains almshouses. Stackpole Court is in the pa. of St. Petrox (q.v.), but the grounds reach into this pa.

Stack Rock, South, islet off west coast of Anglesey, 3 W. of Holyhead. A deep channel, 30 yds. wide, runs between the rock and the main island. A lighthouse has a revolving light, visible 20 miles. The chasm is crossed by a suspension chain bridge with a span of 110 ft., constructed by the Trinity House in 1827. The lighthouse has greatly facilitated the navigation in this neighbourhood, which was formerly very perilous. The coast scenery here is picturesque.

Stacks Mountains, mountain range (1,170 ft.) on the border of Trughanacmy and Clanmaurice bars., N. co. Kerry, Ir., 5½ E.N.E. of Tralee.

Stacksteads, vil., pa. of Whalley (q.v.), E. Lancs., about 1½ S.W. of Bacup. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in stone quarries and in the manufacture of cotton and woollen fabrics.

Stacks, The, two rocks off west coast of Calf of Man, pa. of Rushen, S.W. I. of M., 6½ W. by S. of Castletown. The rocks are pyramidal, rising to a height of about 100 ft., and are separated from the main island by a channel 50 ft. in width, through which the sea rushes with great violence. Viewed from the seaward side they present a very picturesque appearance.

Staffa, small island of the Inner Hebrides, pa. of Kilninian and Kilmore (q.v.), W. Args., Sc., about 1½ mile in circumference, lying midway between the islands of Iona and Ulva, in the bay formed by the western side of Mull. It is remarkable for its caves, which attract a large number of visitors, for whose accommodation a regular steamship service is in existence from Oban. The island is about 8 miles from the coast of Mull and about 50 miles from Oban, and presents an uneven tableland resting on cliffs of variable height—the highest point occurring between the "Great Cave" and the "Boat." The caves are numerous, but those that occur on the south and north sides are remarkable neither for their beauty nor for magnitude; and five on the north-east are distinguished chiefly for causing loud reverberations when the surge of the sea breaks into them, resembling the distant discharge of heavy ordnance. Proceeding towards the south from the landing-place, the objects of chief interest are—first, the Scallop (or Clamshell) Cave; second, Buachaille, or Herdsman; third, the Causeway and the Face, or Colonnade; fourth, Fingal's (or Great) Cave; fifth, the Boat Cave; sixth, the Cormorants', or Mackinnon's Cave. At the Scallop (or Clamshell) Cave the columns on one side are bent so as to form a series of ribs, not unlike the inside of a ship; it is 30 ft. in height, 16 to 18 ft. in breadth at the entrance, and its length is about 130 ft. The rock Buachaille ("the Herdsman") is a pile of columns about 30 ft. high, visible only at low water. The Causeway, here presenting an extensive surface, is formed of the broken ends of columns, once continuous to the height of the cliffs. The Great Face is formed of three distinct beds of rocks of unequal thickness, inclined towards the east with an angle of about nine degrees. It is only with the morning sun that the Great Face of S. can be seen in perfection, as the general surface is undulating and uneven; great masses of light and shadow are thus produced, so as to relieve that which, in direct light, appears a flat mass of strong wall. The Cormorants, or Mackinnon's Cave, is easy of access, and terminates in a gravelly beach, where a boat may be drawn up. The Boat Cave is accessible only from the sea. S. is visited five or six times a week by the steamboat from Oban; the visitors are generally landed at Fingal's Cave, and stay about an hour on the island.

Stafford, parl. and mun. bor. and pa. (co-extensive), capital of the co., U. and mkt. to. (s.), head of petty sess. div. and Co. Co. dis., W. Staffs., situated near the centre of England, 27 N.W. of Birmingham. The ancient name was "Betheney," by which it is mentioned in the Saxon Chronicle. About 1050 S. contained a royal mint, some of the coins of which are still in existence. The charter of incorporation was confirmed by King John in 1206. The town was formerly encompassed by walls and had a castle, erected by the Conqueror, both of which were destroyed or dismantled by the Cromwellian general, Sir William Brereton, Bart., in 1643; its four gates have also been demolished. It is believed that S. first sent members to Parliament in the 13th cent. S. had formerly two pas.—St. Mary and St. Chad; these for civil purposes have been amalgamated and now constitute the pa. of S. St. Mary's Church (formerly collegiate, with a dean and thirteen canons, on a foundation attributed to King John) is a large and very fine cruciform building of stone, of the Trans., E. Eng., and later periods, with slight indications (at the west end) of Norm. work. It was restored in 1844–45 under the direction of Sir Gilbert Scott, and further restored during 1877–79. The font, which appears to be coeval with the earliest part of the edifice, is a quaint and massive structure with a quatrefoiled basin, each division of which bulges considerably outwards and is separated from those adjoining it by grotesque figures; the basin is placed on a slab of the same shape supported by crouching lions and other animals, and has two nearly obliterated inscriptions. In the north transept is an altar-tomb with recumbent effigies to Sir Edward Aston of Tixall (1568) and Joan (Bowles) his wife (1562); around the tomb are the figures of their children. Near this is a canopied mural monument to James, fifth Lord Aston of Tixall, Baron of Forfar (1751). Affixed to one of the pillars of the chancel is a monument to Barbara, wife of Sir Thomas Crompton, judge of the High Court of Admiralty (1641). There is also a marble bust to Izaak Walton, the author of "The Compleat Angler," who was born in this pa. August 9, 1593, baptised here Sept. 21, 1593, died at Winchester Dec. 15, 1683, and was buried in the cathedral there, Dec. 17. St. Chad's, the oldest ecclesiastical building, is of various periods, but chiefly Perp.; the original aisles were destroyed, it is said, in 1622, the arcades built up, and the whole of the walls and ceilings of the portico that remained plastered over, concealing the beautiful work of the original structure. Izaak Walton built a wall around this churchyard, part of which still remains. This church formerly possessed the privilege of sanctuary, and in 1280 a trial was held here on behalf of the Archbishop of Canterbury. There are also eccl. pas. with modern churches, a Catholic church, and Nonconformist places of worship. The grammar school existed before the time of Henry VIII., by whom it was suspended, but was refounded in 1550 by Edward VI. New buildings were erected in 1862, and ten years later the school was reorganised. The County Council building, in Martin Street (1895), is a large structure in English Renaissance style; the Shire Hall faces the Market Square and contains an assembly room, used for public meetings and on Saturdays for the corn market; the Borough Hall (1876–77) is a large and lofty building in the French Gothic style of the 14th cent.; the Oddfellows' Hall (1892) is in Renaissance style. The Market Hall includes meat, fish, and vegetable markets. Fairs are held on the Tuesday before Shrove Tuesday and April 3 (cattle), May 14 (pleasure, cattle, cheese, and wool), Saturday before June 29 (cattle, cheese, and wool), last Monday in July and first Monday in September (cheese and wool), October 2 (great fair for cheese, cattle, sheep, and wool), and December 4 (cattle, horses, cheese, and wool). The William Salt Library, in Market Square, was presented to the bor. in 1872; there is also a free library in Eastgate Street, in which are stored the collections of the Wragge Museum. The theatre, in Martin Street, is a commodious building. The County Technical Institution is a brick structure in Classic style. In this bor. are the headquarters of the county constabulary, H.M.'s prison, a home for discharged female prisoners, and the county infirmary. The trade consists chiefly of the manufacture of ladies' boots and shoes; salt is also made here from brine discovered accidentally about 1880, during sinking operations in search of a water-supply for the town. The brine has been utilised for baths. The poor have bequests amounting to about £100 a year. The almshouses called "The College," in Mill Street, were founded about the middle of the 17th cent. In S. were formerly many ecclesiastical establishments; of the priory of St. Thomas, founded in 1180, there are some remains on the riverside. S. Castle, situated on the Newport road, on a wooded knoll, commanding an extensive view, was built 1810–15 on the site of the ancient fortress, but was never completed, and is now partly ruinous. S. Common, north of the town, is the sole remnant of the large tracts of common land, enclosed 1800. A pleasant promenade, ornamented with trees, has been formed between the Marston and Stone roads. Stone Flat, a portion of the common, is used as a recreation ground. Coton Field, north-east of the town, is one of the commons over which anciently the S. burgesses held the right of common; part of it is now formed into garden allotments, the remainder being subject to the control of the corporation for the benefit of the Borough Funds.

having the Irish Sea within 50 miles on the north-west, but sheltered by the neighbouring land and hills; it is bounded on the north-east by the Dove and by Derbys., on the south-east by Warws., on the south by Worcs., on the west by Salop, and on the north-west by Chesh. The shape is that of an irregular diamond, with the greatest length from north to south. The length is 53 miles, the breadth 35 miles, and the area is 748,433 ac. The land is mostly the basin of the Trent, which rises here; but the south-west is watered by feeders of the Severn, the main stream of which is near on the south-west. North S. is high and hilly, with much barren ground, but contains some excellent pasture and dairy lands; the vale of the Trent is rich, but the whole shire is much broken by hills. The scenery of North-East S. is very fine; the most beautiful part of Dovedale is here. This land was first held by the Iberians, perhaps by the Silures, who were driven eastward by the Welsh. These latter were pressed by the Belgians. At the time of the Roman inroad the tribe near here seems to have been the Cornavii. The Romans held it, and settled it as part of their province of Flavia Cæsariensis, and had several towns, one whereof was Etocetum (or Wall), on Watling Street. On the fall of the Romans the Welsh kings lorded for a time, but were driven out by the English, who had several small commonwealths here, which afterwards became the great kingdom of Mercia, the Middle English, of which this part was latterly named S. Here seems to have been a chosen seat of the worship of the great deities Weden (or Woden) and Thur, and many towns are named after them. On the establishment of Christianity, Lichfield became a bishopric and for some time the archbishopric of the Mercians. In S. are the ruins of many castles, and in Chartley Park are the remains of a breed of wild cattle. Of late years S. has been chiefly known for the growth of its manufactures, which by the labours of Wedgwood, Brindley, Watt, and Boulton have acquired a high reputation. The towns of the south are each the seat of several of the branches of the hardware manufacture. The mineral productions are very varied and valuable. Coal is found over a great part of the shire, as is iron. Anthracite coal is found near Walsall; peacock coal (so-called from its prismatic colours) near Newcastle, cannel coal at Longton, hæmatite iron ore at Wednesbury, basalt at the Rowley Hills, casting sand at Bilston, fire-clay for glass houses and fire-bricks at Kingswinford, alabaster at Tutbury; freestone at Tixall, Wrottesley, and Hollington; stone known as "Rowley Rag" at Tividale, near Tipton; black chalk at Langley Close, potters' clay near Newcastle. Besides these are salt, millstone rock, pipe-clay, iron pyrites, oil shale, Silurian limestone, and gypsum. Upon these productions much of the employment of the population depends, the south and south-west being the seat of the great iron manufactures of Birmingham, Wolverhampton, Walsall, and West Bromwich, and the north-west of The Potteries (q.v.). The mun. bors. are Burslem, Burton-on-Trent, Hanley, Lichfield, Longton, Newcastle-under-Lyme, Stafford, Stoke-on-Trent, Tamworth, Walsall, Wednesbury, and West Bromwich. Other towns are Bilston, Brierley Hill, Cannock, Cheadle, Darlaston, Leek, Rowley Regis, Rugeley, Sedgeley, Stone, Tipton, Tunstall, Uttoxeter, and Willenhall. The co. is traversed by many lines of railway; and by means of the London and North Western, the Great Western, Great Northern, and Midland, and their branches, is brought into communication with all parts of the country. The rocks of S. are very varied in age and mineralogical composition. The dis., in fact, forms a passage ground between the wild and picturesque hills found further to the west in the old rocks of Wales, and the softer, newer formations which constitute the plains and gentle slopes of the eastern and southern counties; it contains strata representative of both these regions, but in the Coal Measures (which lie between) it has a source of mineral wealth which is peculiarly its own. The oldest strata in the co. are shales and limestones of Upper Silurian age; these form the basis on which the Coal Measures rest, and they crop out and occupy the surface near Walsall and at a few other localities in the co., and at two points just outside its southern border. The Coal Measures consist of an alternation of shales and sandstones with certain beds of coal and ironstone. There are in the co. four detached areas or coal-fields—the Goldsitch coal-field in the extreme north-east, the Cheadle coal-field in the valley of the Churnet, and the North and South S. coal-fields. Altogether the Coal Measures of North S. are 5,000 ft. thick. In the upper div. (about 1,000 ft. thick) there is at Fenton a band of limestone containing a tiny curled-up shell—Microconchus carbonarius—which everywhere characterises these beds. Under these beds are about 3,000 ft. of sandstones, shales, and ironstones, with about 40 seams of coal, together above 150 ft. in thickness. The southern coal-field extends from Brereton on the north to the Clent Hills on the south, and Wolverhampton on the west to Walsall on the east; it consists of about 800 ft. of Upper Coal Measures, mostly reddish sands and clays, underneath which lie some 500 ft. of Middle Coal Measures, resting on Silurian rocks, all the inferior carboniferous strata being absent. Eruptive masses of basalt or dolerite occupy a large area about Rowley Regis and other spots; many thousands of tons yearly are got for paving purposes. There can be no doubt that these masses were injected in a fluid state from several vents at some period after the formation of the Coal Measures. Stretching irregularly round the southern terminations of both the North and South S. coal-fields are certain reddish sandstones, conglomerates, and breccias, of Permian age. Further south they form the Clent Hills; and the remarkable beds of polished and striated pebbles of trap, greenstone, slate, limestone, etc., are believed to have come from the westward (perhaps from the Longmynd), and to afford evidence of Glacial action in those times. Red sandstones and pebble beds of Triassic age occupy the whole of the centre of the co. from east to west. They are very difficult to distinguish from the Permian rocks; and the presence of the outliers of the Rhætic beds and Lower Lias at Needwood Forest and north of Abbot's Bromley probably indicate the former extension of this formation over the greater part of the co. In barrows that have been opened evidence has been found—in the flint arrowheads, celts, and stone hammers—of the existence of the New Stone Age. Of men of the Old Stone Age, whose implements were of the rudest description (mere chipped pebbles), no traces have yet been found in the co. For parl. purposes the co. has seven divs.—Burton, Handsworth, Kingswinford, Leek, Lichfield, and North-Western and Western S.—each returning one member.

Stafford, West, pa. and pretty vil. near the Frome, S. Dors., 2½ S.E. of Dorchester; ac. 995; soil black loam, overlying gravel. The church (dedication unknown) is a building of stone, with a small embattled western square tower; over the porch is the date 1640, in which year it is supposed to have been rebuilt. Floyer's charity of £9 3s. 4d. yearly is distributed in money among the poor, aged, and infirm inhabitants of the pa. S. House is a seat.

Stagenhoe, ha., pa. of St. Paul's Walden (q.v.), N. Herts., about 5½ S. of Hitchin. S. Park is a fine well-timbered estate.

Stags, reef off south-west coast of Cornw., about ½ S.W. of Lizard Head. The S. are situated on the north-west side of the Man-of-War Rocks.

Stagsden, pa. and vil., W. Beds., 5 S.W. of Bedford; ac. 3,386; soil strong, stiff, and cold clay, overlying blue clay and chalkstone. The church of St. Leonard is Trans. Dec. and Perp.; on the north side of the church are the remains of a rood-loft and an arched recess; the chancel retains a piscina; a monumental brass to the Cocke family dates from 1617. There is a Congregational chapel. Pillow-lace is made here. The vil. has a chalybeate well, but it has long been in a neglected condition.

Stags of Arran, group of rocks off coast of Boylagh bar., N.W. co. Don., Ir., 10 N.N.W. of Dungloe. The S. are 1½ N.W. of the island of Owey, and 4½ N.N.E. of that of Aran. They rise 25 ft. above the sea from the midst of deep water.

Stags of Broadhaven, group of seven rocks (300 ft.) off coast of Erris bar., N.W. co. Mayo, Ir., 2 N. of Benwee Head. The rocks rise precipitously from the sea, forming a striking and picturesque feature in all views of the coast.

Stags of Castlehaven, group of rocks off coast of West Carbery bar., S.W. co. Cork, Ir., 1 S. by E. of Toe Head. The rocks are 3½ S.S.W. of the entrance to Castle Haven. They are lofty and rugged, and rise from the midst of deep water.

Staholmog, pa., Lower Kells bar., N. co. Meath, Ir., 4 S.W. of Nobber; ac. 2,109. There is a Catholic church.

Staigue Fort, pa. of Kilcrohane (q.v.), S. co. Kerry, Ir., about 11 miles from Waterville. This is one of the most wonderful antiquarian remains in Ireland. According to Wilde, "a date of 2,000 years cannot be considered too old for it, and though larger forts of this kind are known in the country, nothing surpassing it in the construction of the staircase encircling the interior is to be found. It is an enclosure, nearly circular; the stones are put together without any mortar or cement; the wall is 13 ft. thick at the bottom, and 5 ft. 2 in. broad at top at the highest part, where some of the old coping-stones still remain. It has one square doorway, and in the substance of this massive wall are two small chambers. They formed part of the original plan, and were not, like other apertures in some similar structures, filled-up gateways. Around the interior of the wall are arranged ten sets of stairs. They lead to narrow platforms, on which the warders or defenders stood."

Stain, ha., pa. of Withern (q.v.), E. Lincs., 4 N.W. of Alford. S. was formerly a pa., but the church has been destroyed for many years, and the living is incorporated with Mablethorpe.

Stainborough, or Stainbrough, tp. and vil., pa. of Silkstone (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., 3 S.W. of Barnsley; ac. 1,719. The church of St. James (rebuilt 1841) is Gothic. S. was a Roman settlement. Wentworth Castle, a seat, is a fine building in Classic style, erected early in the 18th cent., and contains a valuable collection of paintings.

Stainburn (1), eccl. pa. and tp., pa. of Kirkby Overblow (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., 3½ N.E. of Otley; ac. 3,157. The church of St. Mary the Virgin is in Norm. style, with a font said to date from the Saxon period. There is a Wesleyan chapel.

Stainburn (2), tp. and small vil., pa. of and 1 E. from Workington (q.v.), W. Cumb.; ac. 1,209. The reservoirs for supplying Workington with water are in this tp.

Stainby, pa. and vil., S.W. Lincs., 9 S. of Grantham; ac. 1,550; soil loam, overlying red limestone and rock. The church of St. Peter (restored 1865) is E. Dec., with some features of the Trans. period.

Staincliffe, eccl. pa., pa. of Batley (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., 1½ N. of Dewsbury. Christ Church (1867) is in Gothic style. There are Wesleyan, Primitive Methodist, and Baptist chapels. The staple manufacture of this place is blankets.

Staincross, vil. with railway station, pa. of Darton (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., about 2 N.W. of Barnsley. There is a Primitive Methodist chapel.

Staindrop, pa., tp., and small to., S. Dur., 19 S.W. of Durham; ac. of pa. 13,298, of tp. 2,004; soil alluvial deposit, overlying millstone grit. The church of St. Mary (restored 1849) is of Trans. Norm., E. Eng., and later periods. The 14th-cent. chancel is lighted by large Perp. windows, and retains its piscina and E. Eng. sedilia; over the chancel arch is a Saxon dial, and there are two Saxon windows. The richly-carved stalls and desk belonged to the hospital founded here in the reign of Henry IV., the buildings of which, now long destroyed, abutted on the north wall of the nave; the Trans. Norm. nave dates from about 1200, and the arcades have circular columns, some of the caps being foliaged. The 14th-cent. belfry stage of the tower overhangs the lower portion, and is carried on corbels. This church is the burial-place of the Nevills of Raby, and their tombs here (of the 14th, 15th, and 16th cents.) are among the finest examples of the kind in the co. There is a monumental sarcophagus in the chancel to the second Earl of Darlington (d. 1792) and his wife (d. 1800); amongst more recent monuments and memorials is a mural one with bust by Nollekens, surrounded by carved books and MSS., to John Lee (d. 1793). Adjoining the churchyard on the north is a mausoleum erected by the second Duke of Cleveland. A complete list of the rectors and vicars is preserved here from 1131 to the present date. There are Congregational, Primitive Methodist, and Wesleyan chapels; and the Society of Friends have a meeting-house. The Scarth Memorial Hall contains reading and club rooms. There are twelve almshouses. S. House is a seat.

Staines, pa. and U. and mkt. to. (F.), on the banks of the Thames where the Colne falls into it, and on the Great Western Road, S.W. Middx., 6 S.E. of Windsor; ac. 1,769 and 174 water; soil alluvial, overlying gravel. A handsome stone bridge (erected in 1832, and opened by William IV. and Queen Adelaide) connects S. with Egham. The distance from S. Bridge to London Bridge by land is 20 miles, and, owing to the circuitous course of the Thames, 34 miles by water. S. is said to derive its name from the boundary stone (dated 1285), standing in a meadow above the bridge, marking the ancient jurisdiction of the City of London over the western portion of the Thames. This memorial was repaired in 1781, and placed on a pedestal raised on three steps and bearing the names of various Lord Mayors who have visited the spot. The church of St. Mary the Virgin (which occupies the site of the ancient church built in 675) was erected (with the exception of the tower, built by Inigo Jones in 1631) in 1828, and is in a debased Gothic style. There is an eccl. pa. with a modern church, and various Nonconformist bodies have places of worship. The town hall (1880–81), in Market Square, is a building of white brick with stone dressings, surmounted on the north front by a turret containing a chime clock with three illuminated dials; it also contains a large hall in addition to the usual offices. Two breweries, a linoleum manufacturing company, and mustard mills afford employment for many persons. Fairs are held on May 11 (for horses and cattle) and on September 19 (for onions and toys). In the pa. is a rifle range, formed by a company for the use of metropolitan Volunteers. The commons in S. pa. cover 350 ac., and a scheme has been sanctioned for their management. There are several charities and gifts in connection with this pa., distributed in money, bread, meat, and coals, varying in amounts. S. was identical with the Roman station Ad Pontes, and various remains of the Roman period have been met with in the vicinity, as well as axe-heads and other relics of an earlier date.

Stainforth (1), eccl. pa., tp., and vil., pas. of Arncliffe, Giggleswick, and Kirkby-in-Malham-Dale (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., 3 N. of Settle; ac. 3,693. The church of St. Peter is in Perp. style. There are waterfalls, known as Stainforth Force or Foss. Taitlands is a seat.

Stainforth (2), tp. and vil. on the Don, pa. of Barnby-upon-Don (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., 7 N.E. of Doncaster; ac. 2,243. There was a chapel here in the 14th cent., but all traces of the old building have disappeared. The present chapel of St. Matthew was erected 1815. The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have chapels. A small amount of barge-building and repairing is done here.

Stainland, eccl. pa., tp., and small to., pa. of Halifax (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., 5 N.W. of Huddersfield; ac. 2,335. The church of St. Andrew was originally undenominational; it has been almost entirely rebuilt, and in 1888 was reopened and consecrated. There are Congregational and Wesleyan chapels, and a Mechanics' Institute. The manufactures are woollen, worsted, cotton, paper, and pasteboard. Large mills give employment to upwards of 1,000 hands.

Stainley, North, with Sleningford, eccl. pa., tp., and vil., on the south bank of the Ure, pa. of and 4 N.W. from Ripon (q.v.), W.R. Yorks.; ac. 4,244. The church of St. Mary is modern. The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel. Castle Dykes, about ½ s., is an ancient moated earthwork enclosed on the east, south, and west by a double vallum including a fosse. The site has been excavated, and several very interesting remains discovered; in 1870 a bathroom was exposed, which later on was found to form part of once existing buildings of great splendour, comprising an entrance-hall, numerous baths, hypocausts, tiles, and pottery; in the débris were found some skeletons. The Bishop of Ripon's palace is in this tp.

Stainley, South, with Cayton, pa. and vil., W.R. Yorks., 5 S.E. of Ripon; ac. 2,013; soil clay, loam, and gravel. The church of St. Wilfrid was built 1842, in E. Eng. style. Here is a Wesleyan chapel.

Stainmore, eccl. pa. and tp., pa. of Brough (q.v.), E. Westmd., 1 mile from Barras station; ac. 10,229. The tp. is arranged in two divs., North and South. The chapel of St. Mary was erected in 1873, and there is a Primitive Methodist chapel. The chapel of St. Stephen, South Stainmore, was rebuilt in 1842. A Roman road passes through this div., and an inscribed stone has been found. There are traces of a Roman camp. Angill Castle is a seat.

Stainton Market. [MARKET STAINTON.]

Stainton-with-Hellaby, pa. and vil., W.R. Yorks., 7 S. of Doncaster; ac. 2,788; soil clay and loam, overlying limestone. The church of St. Winifrid was built in the 12th or 13th cent., and contains several old monuments. The charities are small. S. was a Roman settlement. Lambcote Grange and Hellaby Hall are now farms.

Stair (1), ha., pa. of Crosthwaite (q.v.), S. Cumb., 3 S.W. of Keswick.

Stair (2), pa. and vil. on the right bank of the Ayr, W. Ayrs., Sc.; ac. 5,376; soil mostly stiff clay, on a retentive subsoil. The surrounding country abounds with coal. The vil., about 2½ S. of Tarbolton, is romantically situated, and contains a pa. church, some good mansions, and numerous other dwellings. S. gives the title of earl and viscount to the Dalrymple family. Barskimming is a seat with fine grounds. In a secluded spot on this estate Burns composed the poem entitled "Man is made to Mourn."

Stairfoot, vil. with railway station, pa. of Darfield (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., about 2 S.E. of Barnsley. Here are extensive glass bottle works.

Staithes, vil. with railway station, pas. of Hinderwell and Easington (q.v.), N.R. Yorks. The vil., 1½ N. of Hinderwell, is picturesquely situated on a creek running up between the cliff called Colburn Nab on the north and Penny Nab cliff on the south. The old national school has been licensed for divine worship. The Catholic church of our Lady Star of the Sea (1885) has attached to it a good residence for the priest. Here are also Congregational, Wesleyan, and Primitive Methodist chapels. The inhabitants are principally engaged in fishing, in which an extensive business is carried on. The celebrated circumnavigator, Captain Cook, was apprenticed in this vil. to a grocer, but only remained a few months when he left and went to sea.

Stalbridge, pa. and mkt to., N. Dors., near the Somerset border, 7 E. of Sherborne; ac. 5,867; soil chiefly limestone, overlying limestone and gravel. The church of St. Mary, a building of stone, chiefly of the Late Perp. period, stands in a commanding position at the north end of the to., and is a conspicuous landmark in the Vale of Blackmore. Here are Congregational and Wesleyan chapels. There is a charity of about £70 a year, devoted to the maintenance of three pensioners, resident in the pa. and members of the Church of England. A market is held every alternate Monday, when there is also a cattle sale; and the fairs for cattle are on May 6 and Sept. 4. In the centre of the town is an ancient sculptured cross of excellent workmanship and proportion; it is, however, much dilapidated. Robert Boyle, the eminent chemist and philosopher, lived here. S. Park lies on high ground in the north-west of the town and commands extensive views of the surrounding country; there is now no residence, the old manor house having been pulled down about 1820.

Staley. [STAYLEY.]

Stalham, pa. and to., E. Norf., 8 S.E. of North Walsham, on the road to Yarmouth; ac. 1,792; soil fine strong land, overlying brick-earth, sand, and gravel. The church of St. Mary (restored) is a fine structure of flint with stone dressings. There is a brass to the Riches family (1624), and another with figures of a civilian and his wife (c. 1460). There are Baptist and Wesleyan chapels. Here is a Corn Hall, and a police station. The river Ant affords facilities for landing coal, corn, malt, and all kinds of merchandise. S. and Sutton broads form a sheet of water connected with this river, three-quarters of a mile from south-west to north-east, and 1 mile from west to east; it is mostly overgrown with reeds, but there are two channels, one to S. and the other to Sutton. The rent of the poor's allotment is distributed in money, and there are some smaller charities.

Stalisfield, pa. and vil., N.E. Kent, 7 S.W. of Faversham; ac. 2,293; soil loam and clay, overlying chalk and clay. The church of St. Mary is Dec., and a Perp. oak screen separates the chancel from the nave. There is much coppice wood.

Stallingborough, pa. and vil., N.E. Lincs., 4 N.W. of Great Grimsby; ac. 4,420 land, and 1,490 water; soil good strong loam, overlying clay. The church of SS. Peter and Paul (restored 1874) is a plain edifice of brick; there are several monuments of the Ayscough family, including an altar-tomb with effigies of Sir William Ayscough (Askewe), the father of Anne Ayscough, who was burned at Smithfield, and Dame Margery (Hilliard), his second wife; there is also an alabaster tomb, with semi-effigy, to Sir Francis Ayscough, his son, who gave his sister Anne up to the authorities; this Sir Francis was sheriff of Lincs. in 1544, and had three sons. To the second son, Sir Edward Ayscough (d. 1612), and his wife Esther (Grantham), there is a fine altar-tomb, with effigies and many coats of arms. Colonel Harrison, a Parliamentary officer slain in the fight at Riby (1645), is buried in the churchyard. There are Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist chapels. The charities are small. On the shore is a lighthouse and coastguard station.

Stalling Busk, eccl. pa. and ha., pa. of Aysgarth (q.v.), N.R. Yorks., 4½ S.E. of Hawes. The church (dedication unknown) is a small and plain building of stone.

Stalmine, eccl. pa., pa. of Lancaster (q.v.), N.W. Lancs., 9 N.E. of Blackpool. The church of St. James is modern; in the churchyard is a sun-dial dated 1690.

Stalmine-with-Stainall, tp., pa. of Lancaster (q.v.), N.W. Lancs., about 5 N. of Poulton-le-Fylde; ac. 2,583.

Stalybridge, parl. and mun. bor. on the Tame, containing parts of the pas. of Ashton-under-Lyne (q.v.), S.E. Lancs., and Stockport and Mottram-in-Longden-Dale, N.E. Chesh., 7½ E. of Manchester. The bor. contains several eccl. pas. with modern churches, a Catholic church, and places of worship for various Nonconformist bodies. The town hall (1831) is a spacious edifice of stone of the Doric order; in addition to the usual court-rooms and offices, it contains a large assembly-room and rooms for the free library (opened in 1889). The Mechanics' Institute (1861) is a building of red brick with stone dressings; it contains a library, news-rooms, class-rooms, and a new laboratory (1890). Attached to the institute is a Field Naturalist and Microscopical Society. The Market Hall (1866) is in Renaissance style, and in 1881 a Fish Market was erected. Markets are held on Saturday, and fairs on the last Monday in each month. The annual prize fair takes place on the first Saturday in September, and the wakes on the first Sunday after July 17. The Baths, in Italian style, were presented to the bor. in 1870, and are endowed with £100 a year. The District Infirmary, in Elizabethan style, stands on an elevated site fronting the park. Connected with this institution, which has an income of about £2,700, are a nurses' home and a children's hospital. There is a Liberal Club in Albert Square, and the Foresters and Oddfellows have halls. The interest of about £200 is distributed in clothing every year. S. is one of the oldest seats of the cotton manufacture, and contains many extensive mills, which give employment to the greater part of the population. There are also machine works, iron foundries, and cut and wrought nail works; and the woollen manufacture is carried on to a limited extent. Stamford Park is a public recreation ground, comprising about 64 ac. The mansion, formerly called Highfield House, is a fine Elizabethan edifice, and Stambridge, Great, pa. and vil., S.E. Essex, 5½ n. of Southend; ac. 2,593 land and 244 water; soil heavy, overlying gravel and clay. The church of St. Mary the Virgin and All Saints (restored 1881) is of various periods, retaining some Saxon, Norm., and Perp. work.

Stambridge, Little, pa. and vil. on the Roche, S.E. Essex, about 6 n. of Southend; ac. 600; soil clay and marl, overlying clay. The church of St. Mary has been removed. There are extensive flour mills.

Stamford (1), mun. bor. and mkt. to. (F.) on the Welland, mainly in S. Lincs., but partly in Northants, 12½ n.w. of Peterborough; ac. 1,766. S. formerly returned two members to Parliament, but in 1867 the number was reduced to one, and in 1885 it was disfranchised. S. at one period had fourteen churches, besides priories; but there are now only six, including St. Martin's. The church of St. Mary (restored 1859), on St. Mary's Hill, is reputed to be the mother church of S., and is E. Eng., Dec., and Perp.; the tower (E. Eng.) is covered with arcading, richly and deeply worked; the spire is Dec., and dates from about 1300; the north chantry (commonly called "the golden choir") has a panelled, carved, and painted roof, with an inscription on the cornice to William Hickman, alderman of S. (1467), and Alice his wife; in this chantry is a canopied Dec. altar-tomb with the recumbent effigy of a knight, and opposite a very rich altar-tomb, also canopied, bearing recumbent effigies of a knight and lady; the sides are enriched with figures of the Apostles and an angel with a shield; the tomb is of the period of Henry VII., and the effigies are said to represent Sir David Phillips and his wife. All Saints' (restored 1857) is E. Eng. and Perp.; in the north aisle is a brass with effigy in gown and mantle, standing on two woolpacks, of John Browne, merchant of the Staple of Calais (d. 1442), and Margaret his wife (d. 1469), and there are other brasses in the church to some of their descendants. In 1857 the base of an E. Eng. chantry was discovered 15 ft. below the floor level; several brasses, some ancient tiles, a piscina, and stoups were also met with. The church of St. John the Baptist, in St. John Street, is chiefly Perp.; a great part of the beautiful ancient glass still remains in the windows of the north aisle, and there is a very rich screen; there are some ancient brasses. St. George's (restored 1888), in St. George's Square, is E. Eng., Dec., and Perp.; there are portions of ancient glass. St. Martin's, Stamford Baron, is in the co. of Northants, but in the bor. of S., and is Perp.; there is a large amount of ancient glass; in this church is the splendid mausoleum of the Burghley family. St. Michael's, in High Street, is E. Eng. The Catholic church (1864) is in Broad Street. There are Congregational, Wesleyan, Baptist, and Primitive Methodist chapels. The town hall, on St. Mary's Hill, was rebuilt in 1821; the Corn Exchange (Broad Street) is a handsome and roomy building, with stalls for salesmen. The Literary and Scientific Institution (1842), on St. Peter's Hill, contains a library, and an interesting museum is attached. Several fairs and cattle markets are held. An extensive trade is carried on in corn, coal, malting, timber, stone, and slates. There are agricultural implement and machine manufactories, breweries, and cart and road-waggon building works. Truesdale's almshouses (founded 1700 by Thomas Truesdale and re-erected 1833), afford shelter, food, and clothing to sixteen aged poor of the pas. of St. John and All Saints. Snowden's almshouses (1604) are for eight poor aged widows, each of whom receives 5s. 6d. a week; and other distributions are made half-yearly. Browne's Hospital was founded in the reign of Richard III., but not completed till that of Henry VII., in 1493, by William Browne, for a warden, confrater, and twelve poor; it is endowed, and produces £2,735 yearly, and, after the expenses of the charity are defrayed, the residue is given to the S. Endowed Schools trustees; the building (Broad Street) is Late Perp., and the chapel has a four-light window filled with fine ancient glass. Daniel Lambert, the celebrated fat man, is buried in the new burial-ground of St. Martin. Near Hudd's Hill are the ruins of the Benedictine monastery of St. Leonard, said to have been founded by St. Wilfrid, Bishop of York, about the middle of the 7th cent. Burghley House, in a fine park, is a seat; the house was built in 1575.

Stamford Bridge, small to., pa. of Catton (q.v.), E.R. Yorks., about 8 E.N.E. of York, pleasantly situated on the east bank of the Derwent, here crossed by a railway viaduct of fifteen arches of brick, the centre one being of iron. The road also crosses the river by an ancient stone bridge of three arches. A chapel-of-ease was erected in 1868. The Wesleyans have a chapel, and there is a reading-room. The school was founded and endowed in 1787. The battle of S. B., between Harold II. and Tostig his brother, was fought here Sept. 25, 1066, when Tostig and his ally Hardrod, a King of Norway, were slain, and their forces defeated; human remains, supposed to be those of soldiers killed in the engagement, have been met with on the site. Burtonfield House, a modern building in a pleasant park surrounded with plantations, is a seat.

Stamfordham, pa. and vil. on the Pont, S. Northumb., 12 W.N.W. of Newcastle; ac. 15,916. The church of St. Mary (largely rebuilt in 1849) is E. Eng.; in the chancel are two mutilated effigies, believed to be those of members of the Fenwick family. Here are United Presbyterian and Wesleyan chapels. The charities are small. There is a market cross, erected by Sir Edward Swinbourne in 1785; and in 1775 a stone coffer was found containing coins of Edward III., Richard II., and David II. of Scotland. The endowed school was founded in 1663 by Sir Thomas Widdrington. Fairs are held on the Thursdays before April 26, August 26, May 12, November 12, and on the last Thursday in March and the first in October. Fenwick Tower stood about 1 S.W. of S.; but only portions of the tower remain, which are now built into a farmhouse.

Stamford Hill (1), eccl. pa., pa. of Hackney St. John, forming a north-east suburb of London, E. Middx., 4¼ N. by E. of St. Paul's. The hill is a gentle eminence crossed by the main road, and commands a fine view of London. On either side of the way are many pleasant villas and detached houses. The church of St. Thomas the Apostle (erected about 1577) is in Basilican style.

Standerwick, vil. (formerly a pa., but now for civil purposes amalgamated with the pas. of Beckington and Berkeley), N.E. Somerset, 4 E.N.E. of Frome. S. Court is a plain mansion erected in the reign of Queen Anne, and occupies an elevated position commanding fine views. Here are the remains of an ancient encampment.

Standford (1), or Stanford, pa. and vil. (on the ancient Roman road called "Stane" or "Stone Street"), E. Kent, 4 N.W. of Hythe; ac. 1,191; soil a rich loam. The church of All Saints (rebuilt 1878) is E. Eng., and has a piscina and an aumbry in the chancel. The Wesleyans have a chapel. There is a small charity. At a short distance are the ruins of the ancient mansion of Westenhanger, where, it is said, the Fair Rosamond was kept for some time.

Standford (2), or Sandford, ha., pa. of Headley (q.v.), E. Hants, 3 N. of Liphook.

Standground, pa. and tp., N. Hunts., extending into Cambs., and vil., wholly in Hunts., 18 N.E. of Huntingdon; ac. of pa. 5,689, of tp. 2,290; soil rich loam, overlying clay and gravel. The church of St. John the Baptist (restored 1872) is chiefly Dec., with a few remains of an E. Eng. character. The chancel has three graduated sedilia under a canopy, a large double piscina, a low side window with a canopied seat near it in the chancel wall, and a blocked square aperture looking to the nave; on the north side is a long stone seat and an aumbry, and in the chantry a squint. In the south wall of the chancel is a brass inscribed to Robert Smith (d. 1558) and Alice, wife of Thomas his son (d. 1595); on the wall opposite is a brass to Elias Petit, vicar (d. 1634). There are other memorials to the Coveney, Sly, Thompson, Benyon, and Forster families. The Baptists and Primitive Methodists have places of worship, and there is a memorial hall and reading-room. The charities amount to about £25 yearly for distribution among the poor. At the south-east border of the pa. are the remains of a fortification, supposed to have been erected during the Protectorate, now called "Horsey Grange." In the vicarage garden is an ancient cross, 5 ft. 2 in. in height, discovered on the Farcet Road, where, till 1865, it formed a bridge over a ditch. The Manor House is a seat.

Standish (1), extensive pa. and vil., S.W. Lancs., 3½ N. of Wigan; ac. 15,376; soil clay, overlying clay, stone, and coal. The church of St. Wilfred (restored) is Late Perp., and was built in 1584 by Richard Moodie, the first Protestant rector. In the church is an altar-tomb with a recumbent effigy of Richard Moodie, who is represented in his Franciscan habit, and a memorial to Sir Edward Wrightington, Knight, of Wrightington (d. 1658). In the rectory grounds are some yews, said to be 600 years old. The Catholic church of St. Marie is a plain building; there is also a Wesleyan chapel. The endowed school was founded in 1603; the education is now elementary. Here are very valuable and extensive mines of cannel and other coal. The Wigan Water Works are in the pa. Fairs are held on June 29 and November 25. S. Hall is a seat.

Standish (2), pa. and vil., Mid Glouces., 6 S. of Gloucester; ac. 3,022; soil clay, sand, and loam, overlying blue lias and oolite. The church of St. Nicholas (repaired 1867) is Dec. S. House is a seat.

Standish-with-Langtree, tp., pa. of Standish (q.v.), S.W. Lancs., about 3½ N. of Wigan; ac. 3,262 and 3 water.

Standlake, pa. and vil. on the Windrush, S.W. Oxon, 10 W. of Oxford; ac. 2,245; soil stonebrash, overlying gravel. The church of St. Giles (restored 1881–91) is of different periods; the chancel is E. Eng., with a Late Norm. chancel arch; the church contains several monuments of the Strickland and Western families, and some good oak carving; outside the south wall of the chancel is an E. Eng. sepulchral recess. There are Baptist and Primitive Methodist chapels. The charities amount to about £86 yearly, and the school has a small endowment. Remains of a Roman settlement were discovered here in 1837. Gaunt House, an ancient moated house, was garrisoned for the king, but was taken in 1645. Cokethorpe Park is a seat.

Standlinch (formerly extra-parochial), pa., S. Wilts., 6 S.E. of Salisbury; ac. 703 and 10 water; soil chalk and gravel, overlying chalk. The church (founded 1147) is unendowed; it is a very small E. Eng. edifice. The trustees appointed by Parliament for purchasing an estate to be annexed to the title of Earl Nelson (conferred on the brother of Lord Nelson in 1805) bought S. House and Park, after which it was named Trafalgar House; it is a large brick mansion, and the park and pleasure grounds, which are well wooded and extend over an area of 80 ac., are watered by the Avon; from the higher grounds on the eastern side the prospect is very fine and varied.

Standon (1), pa. and vil., W. Staffs., 8 S.W. of Stoke; ac. 2,620; soil loam and clay, overlying clay and sandstone. The church of All Saints (rebuilt 1847, with the exception of the tower) is Norm. and Perp. There are two altar-tombs to Roger Broughton and Maria his wife (1617), and to Francis Roos and Elizabeth his wife (1500); monuments to Nicholas Hyde (rector in the time

Standon (2), pa. and vil. on the Rib, E. Herts., 8 N.E. of Hertford; ac. 7,714 land, 4,431 water; soil varied, overlying chalk and clay. The church of St. Mary is Dec. A very remarkable feature in the church is the elevation of the chancel, which is fourteen steps above the nave. On the south side of the chancel is the fine monument of Sir Ralph Sadlier; it bears his effigy, recumbent and fully armed, beneath a covered arch supported on Corinthian columns; above are his arms, and on the lower part of the tomb the figures of his children in alto-relievo; on brackets over the tomb are two helmets, and by its side the pole of the standard which he captured at the battle of Pinkie (1547); here also hang his sword, stirrups, and spurs; at the back is a long inscription, with the date of his death (1587); on the north side is the tomb of his son and heir, Sir Thomas Sadlier (d. 1606), with effigies of himself and his wife Gertrude; against the wall of the north aisle are the figures in brass of John Feld (d. 1477) and John his son, with an inscription (d. 1474). There is also a brass with kneeling effigy to John Rugge-Wyn (d. 1412) and his wife Margery (1403); an inscription on brass to Sir William Coffyn (d. 1538), and the figure of a man in armour, with rhyming verses to Richard Emerson (d. 1562); a 15th-cent. brass effigy of a civilian and six figures of children in shrouds, and part of the brass of Philip Astley (d. 1467) and of his four wives; on the chancel floor are several slabs to the Aston family (1714–39). The principal charities are those of John de Standon, producing £44 15s. yearly; of Thomas Fisher, yielding £88 9s. 10d. (both of which are applied to public uses); and a yearly sum of £18 15s. for the general uses of the poor. Other smaller bequests realise a yearly income of about £88, for distribution in money and kind. The national school is endowed. The boys' school, master's house, and infants' school are formed from an ancient building, probably of the 14th cent., once a hospice of the Knights Hospitallers of St. John of Jerusalem. S. Lordship is a seat.

Stanegate. [STANGATE.]

Stanfield, pa., Mid Norf., 6 N.W. of Dereham; ac. 903; soil and subsoil various. The church of St. Margaret is E. Eng. and Perp. Here is a Primitive Methodist chapel. The fuel allotment produces £15 a year for the poor.

Stanford (1), pa. and vil. on the Avon, W. Northants, 3 S.W. of Welford; ac. 2,051; soil loam and clay, overlying clay. The church of St. Nicholas is E. Dec.; the lower portion of the chancel screen is original, and was discovered on the removal of the hall and vicarage pews in 1878; the upper part and doors were purchased from Lutterworth church; a good Perp. screen encloses the tower arch, and the pulpit is partly constructed of fragments of screen work from Lutterworth; some ancient seats with misereres remain in the chancel, and a single bench end in the north aisle; the embroidered velvet covering of the communion table is also ancient, and the chairs on either side have finely-carved panels; the priest's door retains its ancient ironwork. The church has very fine stained glass, dating from before 1327 to the 16th cent. In the south aisle is a wooden bracket marking the place of a chantry altar, and close by is a richly-carved piscina; on the north side of the chancel is a marble tomb inscribed to Dorothy (St. John), widow of George Egeocke (d. 1670); the side windows of the chancel date from about 1340, and the north-east window of the nave from 1340 to 1360. On the south side of the chancel is a fine marble bust of Sir Verney Cave, Bart., who died in 1734; in the nave is an altar-tomb with recumbent effigies in marble to Sir Thomas Cave, Knight (d. 1558), and Elizabeth (Danvers) his wife, with the figures also of six sons and eight daughters. In the north aisle is a monument to Sir Ambrose Cave, brother of the preceding, and Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster to Queen Elizabeth (d. 1568), and at the head of it a quaint memorial to his daughter Margaret and her husband Henry Knollys, Esq. In the chancel is a canopied tomb with marble effigy to Sir Thomas Cave, Knight (d. 1613), and his wife Eleanor (St. John), and near it a cenotaph to their son Richard (d. 1606); one other monument bears a singular colloquial epitaph, and the date 1640. The interest of £2,000 in Consols is divided yearly between eight poor widows of S. and of Swinford, Leics. S. Hall is a seat standing in a fine park. It is a fine mansion, erected in the reign of Queen Anne, and contains some rare stained glass. The chapel is dedicated to St. Thomas à Beckett, and on the ceiling is depicted the assumption of that saint; the gates enclosing the sacrarium, brought from Milan Cathedral, are highly wrought; the walls of the staircases in the mansion are hung with fine paintings of the Dutch, Flemish, and Italian schools; other rooms contain splendid specimens of tapestry, representing battles and mythological subjects, and in one are portraits by Vandyke of Charles I. and Queen Henrietta Maria; in the library are preserved MSS. relating to the royal house of Stuart, and some relics from the battlefield of Naseby; here also are the original journals of the House of Lords from the reign of James I. to that of James II.

Stanford (2), pa. and vil., S.W. Norf., 6 S.W. of Watton, on the road to Brandon; ac. 2,665; soil light and sandy, overlying marl and chalk, with clay in places; the pa. was formerly a rabbit warren. The church of All Saints is E. Eng.; the north aisle and chancel, till then in ruins, were rebuilt in 1852.

Stanford Bishop, pa., E. Herefords., on the border of Worcs., 3 S.E. of Bromyard; ac. 1,514; soil clayey and loamy, overlying clay and rock. The church of St. James (restored 1884) is E. Eng., with portions of Norm. date; on the north side of the church is a huge yew-tree, supposed to be over a thousand years old.

Stanford Dingley, pa. and vil., N. Berks., 10 N.W. of Reading; ac. 927; soil loam and gravel, overlying chalk. The church of St. Denis (restored 1870) is an ancient building with a curious Perp. tower; in the chancel (rebuilt 1768) is a pointed Norm. arch and some plain Norm. work; there is a brass (dated 1444) to Margaret Dyneley, and another to John Lydford (d. 1610); some of the old wall-paintings are in good preservation, and in the chancel wall there are some fine tiles of early date.

Stanford-in-the-Vale, pa., tp., and vil. on the Ock, W. Berks., 4 E.S.E. of Faringdon; ac. of pa. 3,895, of tp. 2,927; soil loam and clay, overlying clay and stone. The church of St. Denis (restored 1835) was built about 1200, and is an E. Eng. and Dec. structure; the chancel contains some old glass, a fine piscina, a brass to Roger Campdene (priest, 1379), and a squint; the oak font is Elizabethan; in the nave is a monument to Captain Francis Knollys (d. 1640), and in the chancel a memorial to John Heigham (d. 1632), Marshal of the Hall to James I. and Charles I. In the churchyard is a 13th-cent. coffin-slab. The Congregationalists and Primitive Methodists have chapels. There are several charities, and the school has a small endowment. In the neighbourhood are traces of several Roman stations. Here are some stone pits. The Manor House (built 1618) contains some singular panel paintings. S. Place is a seat.

Stanford-le-Hope, pa. and vil., S. Essex, 6 N.E. of Grays; ac. 2,384 land, 683 water; soil mixed, overlying gravel and sand. The church of St. Margaret (restored 1878) is of various periods, the chancel (which retains three sedilia and a piscina) being fine Perp. work; in the chancel is also a Perp. altar-tomb; the S. chapel, an appendant to the manor of Hasingbrook, contains a piscina; the basement of the tower was formerly a chantry; the font is fine E. Eng. work; in the S. chapel are many memorials of the Fetherston and Scratton families; in the chancel are memorials to Richard Champion (d. 1599), Thomas Alleyn (d. 1677), and outside the west wall an elaborate tomb to James Adams (d. 1765); during the restoration a curious fresco was laid bare. The Peculiar People and the Wesleyans have chapels. There are several small charities.

Stanford-on-Teme, pa. and vil. on the Teme, W. Worcs., 13 N.W. of Worcester; ac. 1,278; soil red marl and clay, overlying gravel. The church of St. Mary (renovated 1894) was built 1760, in place of a former edifice; the chancel contains the 14th-cent. alabaster tomb of Humphrey Salwey, removed from the older church. There is a hermitage in Southstone Rock, where there was formerly a chapel dedicated to St. John the Baptist. S. Court is a seat.

Stanford Regis, ha., pa. of Bishops Frome (q.v.), E. Herefords., 3½ S.E. of Bromyard.

Stanford Rivers, pa. and vil., W. Essex, 3 S.W. of Ongar; ac. 4,402; soil clay or heavy loam, overlying clay, gravel, or sand. The church of St. Margaret is chiefly Norm., and contains in the south wall of the nave a brass with kneeling figures of a lady and six children, and an inscription to Anne Napper (d. 1584); in the chancel is another brass to Catherine Mylcaster (d. 1609); there is also a brass with effigy to Thomas Greville (d. 1492), another to Robert Barrow (d. 1503), and figures of a man in armour and his wife (c. 1540). Several members of the Stuart family, Earls and Marquises of Bute, were buried here, but with the exception of two they have been removed to Roath in Glamorgs. Here is a Congregational chapel. There is a small charity.

Stanford-upon-Soar, pa. and vil., S. Notts., separated from Leics. by the Soar, 13 S. of Nottingham; ac. 1,520; soil loam, overlying clay. The Dec. and Perp. church of St. John the Baptist was restored 1894. A number of brasses (some of them of great interest) have been stolen, but there remains a 15th-cent. one of a priest, as well as several marble monuments and other memorials. In the churchyard is a fine old yew. S. was a Roman settlement. S. Park is a seat.

Stanfree, ha., pa. of Bolsover (q.v.), N.E. Derbys., about 6 N.E. of Chesterfield. Here is a mission church.

Stangate, or Stanegate, ha. on the Blackwater, pa. of Steeple (q.v.), E. Essex, about 4 N.W. of Southminster. It formerly had a church; a portion of the ruins is still standing, the original piscina remaining almost intact. A priory of Cluniac monks was founded at S., and was in existence in 1176; it was suppressed by Wolsey. Ramsey Isle was anciently part of S., and had a church, now destroyed.

Stangate Creek, branch of the Medway, N. Kent, just E. of the Isle of Sheppy, from which it is separated by the Swale and a small promontory of land. It is navigable, and at Funton is a quay.

Stanghow, tp., pa. of and 2½ S.W. from Skelton (q.v.), N.R. Yorks.; ac. 2,350.

Stanhope, very extensive pa. and mkt. to., W. Dur.; ac. 60,875 land and 320 water. The land where cultivated is mainly cut up into small pasture farms; subsoil limestone. The pa. extends from the pa. of Wolsingham on the south-east to the borders of Cumberland on the west, and is intersected from east to west by the valley of the Wear, and enclosed on both sides by lofty eminences and moorlands. The to., 26 N. of Darlington, occupies a sheltered situation on the north side of the Wear. The church of St. Thomas (restored 1868) is chiefly Norm. The rectorship of S. is noteworthy from the large number of eminent men who have held the living; among others may be named Bishop Tunstall, of the Reformation period; Bishop Butler (author of the "Analogy"); Bishop Thurlow, brother of Lord Chancellor Thurlow; Bishop Philpotts; and Dr. Keene, Bishop of Chester. The churchwardens' accounts are well kept from the year 1612, and show that at the Restoration a rate of 20s. in the pound was levied to restore the church, and two years later a further rate of 10s. in the pound was levied to place two new bells in the tower. There are Primitive Methodist and Wesleyan chapels. The town hall is a building of stone, erected about 1854, and comprises a large hall used for public meetings, a police station and court. The trade of the to. is, to a great extent, dependent on the numerous limestone quarries in the neighbourhood. A market was formerly held here, and the market cross was restored in 1871. The savings bank (1866) is a commodious building, containing also reading-room, library, and lecture hall. The S. agricultural show is held annually on the second Friday in September, and an horticultural show in August; fairs are held here on the Thursday before Easter and the second Friday in October. The endowment of the school is now applied to technical education; there is a charity of £12 for educating poor boys, and a sum of £8 yearly for the poor. S. Dene is a recreation ground, and comprises a large extent of woodland intersected by walks. S. Castle, a modern building in a park, is a seat.

Stanhope Burn, stream, pa. of Drumelzier (q.v.), S. Peebs., Sc., rises near Dollar Law, and flows for nearly 5 miles in a N.W. direction to the Tweed, which it joins about 6 N. of Tweedsmuir church.

Stanion, pa., N. Northants, 6 N.E. of Kettering; ac. 1,550; soil mixed, overlying clay and rock. The church of St. Peter is Gothic; in it is a huge bone, 6 ft. high, called "the Dun Cow's rib," of which nothing is known. Bell's charity of £3 3s. yearly is for distribution in bread.

Stank, ha., pa. of Sigston (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., about 3 N.E. of Northallerton.

Stanks, ha., pa. of Barwick-in-Elmet (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., about 6 N.E. of Leeds.

Stanley (1), eccl. pa. and vil. on the Calder, pa. of and 2 N.E. from Wakefield (q.v.), W.R. Yorks. The church of St. Peter was built 1825, in Perp. style. There are Wesleyan, Primitive Methodist, and Congregational chapels. Taylor's and Foster's charity amounts to £210 yearly. S. has two almshouses and several hospitals. There was formerly a Roman station. The neighbourhood is connected with stories of Robin Hood and his men. Earthenware was made here; there are several collieries, and brick-making, band and twine spinning, and the manufacture of alum are carried on. Hatfield Hall, S. Grange, and Moor House are seats.

Stanley (2), eccl. pa., pa. of West Derby (q.v.), S.W. Lancs., 3 E. of Liverpool. The church of St. Anne (1833) is in Classic style. There are Catholic, Congregational, and Wesleyan chapels.

Stanley (3), eccl. pa. and vil., pa. of Brancepeth (q.v.), Mid Dur., 6½ N.W. of Bishop Auckland. The church of St. Thomas is in E. Eng. style. There are Primitive Methodist and Wesleyan chapels.

Stanley (4), tp. and chap., pa. of Spondon (q.v.), S. Derbys., 6 N.E. of Derby; ac. 1,026. The church of St. Andrew (restored 1875) is a small and ancient edifice of stone; the small round-headed Norm. door in the south wall gives evidence of the existence of a church here in the 12th cent.; the nave has a small piscina, and there is an octagonal 14th-cent. font; the carved oak pulpit is of Jacobean date. On the floor, close to the pulpit, is a brass inscribed to Sir John Bentley, Knight (d. 1621).

Stanley (5), ha., pa. of Leek (q.v.), N. Staffs., about 8 N.E. of Stoke. The mission church of St. Agnes was opened in 1868. The art of glazing earthenware by means of salt was accidentally discovered at a farmhouse near here in 1680 by a servant who was boiling salt in water.

Stanley (6), ha., pa. of Lanchester (q.v.), N. Dur., about 9 S.W. of Newcastle-on-Tyne. There are Primitive and Wesleyan Methodist chapels and a Catholic school.

Stanley (7), q.s. pa. and vil. on the Tay, pas. of Auchtergaven and Redgorton (q.v.), E. Perths., Sc., 6 N. of Perth. The q.s. pa. is partly in Kinclaven pa. The vil. grew up round the cotton mills established in 1785. After many vicissitudes of fortune the industry is now in a flourishing condition. S. occupies an elevated site, and offers great advantages as a health resort. It contains Established and Free churches, a Temperance Hall, and a public library. S. House has been modernised at various times, and part of the mansion was rebuilt after a fire in 1887, but there are portions of the existing structure dating from the early part of the 15th cent. It owes its name to the Lady Emily Stanley, daughter of the Earl of Derby, who married a Marquis of Athole at the beginning of the 18th cent. The house was long the abode of the Nairnes, a family which eventually became united to that of Atholl. It is situated beside the Tay, in grounds celebrated for their beautiful trees, the yews and beeches being especially fine.

Stanlow, pa. on the Mersey, W. Chesh., 9 N. of Chester; ac. 697. The Manchester Ship Canal runs through the pa. At S. Point was formerly a Cistercian abbey, founded in 1172 and translated to Whalley in 1296.

Stanmer, pa., S. Sussex, 4 N. of Brighton; ac. 1,346; soil chalk. The church (dedication unknown) was rebuilt 1838, in E. Eng. style. S., pleasantly situated in a fine undulating park, is a seat.

Stanmore, Great, pa. and vil., N.W. Middx., 10 N.W. of London; ac. 1,470; soil various, subsoil chalk. The church of St. John the Evangelist (built 1849–50) is in Dec. style. At the east end of the north aisle is a monument with recumbent effigy by Nicholas Stone to Sir John Wolstenholme, Knight (d. 1639). In the old church was buried Sir John Wolstenholme, Knight (d. 1670), and John Wolstenholme, to whom with his wife Dorothy (Vere) there is a stately monument of white marble with recumbent effigies, now in the tower. There are several other interesting memorials in the tower and south aisle. The now roofless building of the old church stands at a short distance to the west. In the centre of the grass-grown floor is an elaborate tomb to the Holland family of S. Hill, and here were buried Colonel Lord Henry Beauclerk (d. 1761) and John Drummond, J.P. (d. 1774). In the churchyard is the grave of Charles Hart, a tragic actor of the 17th cent. There is a Baptist chapel. The public buildings include a Memorial Institute and a cottage hospital. There is an extensive brewery. Bentley Priory occupies a delightful position, commanding very extensive views—the deer-park, gardens, terraces, and lake covering over 250 ac.; it derives its name from a priory of Austin Canons existing here as early as 1243, on the site of which Roman coins have been found. George IV., when Prince Regent, accompanied here Alexander I. of Russia and Frederick William IV. of Prussia to meet Louis XVIII. on his way back from Hartwell, Bucks., to reascend the throne of France. In a summer-house on the margin of an Italian garden to the south Scott is said to have revised the proof-sheets of "Marmion," and near it Rogers is believed to have written some part of his "Pleasures of Memory." S. Park is also a seat.

Stanmore, Little, pa. and vil., N.W. Middx., adjoining Great Stanmore; ac. 1,572. In recent documents the pa. is always mentioned as "Little S. alias Whitchurch," and the church rectory and adjacent houses are popularly known as Whitchurch. The church of St. Lawrence (erected, with the exception of the tower, about 1715) is an edifice of brick in the Italian style. The decorators and artists employed on the work were the celebrated wood-carver, Grinling Gibbons; his father-in-law, the ironworker; the celebrated Antonio Verrio, and Bellucchi and Laguerre. The organ, built by Father Schmidt in Queen Anne's reign, was rebuilt and enlarged in 1878; the case is adorned with two groups of cherub heads said to be by Gibbons' own hand. Handel was for three years chapel master at the Palace of Canons, and his "Acis and Galatea," the "Chandos Anthems," the oratorio of "Esther" and two "Te Deums" were produced during this period. The mortuary chapel is also decorated with wall-paintings by Verrio, and contains the remains of more than sixty members of the Brydges and Grenville families, including a fine monument to the Duke of Chandos, who died at Canons in 1744, with his statue in Roman costume, between kneeling effigies of Mary (Lake) his first wife, and Cassandra (Willoughby) his first duchess and second wife; here also was buried his second duchess Lydia Catherine (Vanhattem), who died in 1750. The monument room was restored by the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos in 1865. William Powell, the "Harmonious Blacksmith," of Edgware (d. 1780), was parish clerk during the time Handel was organist of this church; his gravestone in the churchyard is carved with representations of an anvil and hammer and the musical notes which form the running bass of "the melody called the Harmonious Blacksmith." Near the church are the Lake almshouses, founded previous to 1693 for seven poor persons, but the endowment now only supports four; this charity had an income of £33 yearly, augmented in the year 1875 by a legacy of £1,000; each inmate receives 7s. per week. Here formerly stood Canons, the residence of the celebrated Duke of Chandos, built by him at a cost of £250,000. It was begun in 1715, and was a magnificent pile of stone three storeys in height, in Italian style and quadrangular in plan, with a central court; the principal avenue leading to the mansion from Edgware was a mile long. In 1747 this palace was pulled down, and the materials disposed of by auction. The house now called Canons was built with some of the materials of the original house.

Stanton and Newhall, tp., pa. of Stapenhill (q.v.), S.W. Derbys., about 6 N.W. of Ashby-de-la-Zouch; ac. 1,613. Here are coal-pits and brick-fields. S. House, standing in a park, is a seat.

Stanton-by-Bridge, pa. and vil. overlooking the Trent valley, S. Derbys., 6 S.S.E. of Derby; ac. 1,433. The church of St. Michael (restored 1866) was rebuilt about 1275. The arcade of the aisle, with its windows, is Dec.; at the east end of this aisle is a piscina. Several fragments of incised slabs of the 12th cent., a cross, and a coped tomb-stone were discovered during the restoration; against the south chancel wall is an alabaster slab, with the incised figures of a man in plate armour and a lady, being the upper part of an altar-tomb formerly in the nave. In the north wall of the aisle, beneath a plain arch, is the stone effigy of an ecclesiastic, probably of the 14th cent. Clarke's charity of £23 yearly is for apprenticing boys and for educational purposes.

Stanton-by-Dale, pa. and vil., S.E. Derbys., 7 E. of Derby; ac. 1,437 and 25 water; soil clay and sand, overlying chiefly clay. The church of St. Michael (restored 1872) is E. Eng. and Dec. There are two piscinæ; on the outer wall of the chancel are some fragments of incised crosses. In the vil. are almshouses for twelve poor people. Here are extensive ironworks. S. Hall is a seat.

Stantonbury, pa. on the Ouse, N. Bucks., 4 N.E. of Stony Stratford; ac. 784; soil gravel and sand, overlying clay. The church is a small Norm. building. There is a Baptist chapel.

Stantonbury Hill. [Stanton Prior.]

Stanton Drew, pa. and vil., N.E. Somerset, 7 S. of Bristol; ac. 2,061; soil sandy, overlying red sandstone. The church of St. Mary (renovated 1889) is Perp., with a 13th-cent. tower; the curious font is Late Saxon or E. Norm.; there are several monuments to the Foster and Lyde families in the Strachey chapel, and the mortuary chapel of the Coates family is at the east end of the church. Here is a Wesleyan chapel, and a Friends' burial-ground dating from 1669. In a field near the church are several circles of huge stones, believed to commemorate a battle fought here by King Arthur; also a solitary stone called the "King Stone" or "Hautville's Quoit." The old copper works were converted into paper-mills. John Locke is said to have resided here. Bellaton House and Stanton Court are seats.

Stanton Fitzwarren, pa. and vil., N. Wilts., 5 N. of Swindon; ac. 1,112 and 12 water; soil stone-brash, overlying stonebrash and clay. The church of St. Leonard (restored 1865), surrounded by trees and evergreens, is E. Eng. and Dec.; the chancel has a beautiful Norm. arch, and retains a piscina and credence table; here also are brasses to Robert Hippisley (1691) and Thomas Hippisley, a former rector (1706). About ½ E. of the railway station a Roman tessellated pavement was discovered during the construction of the railway. Stanton House is a seat.

Stanton Harcourt, pa. and vil. standing amid fine woodland scenery, S. Oxon, separated from Berks. by the Isis, 5 S.E. of Witney; ac. 3,554; soil gravel, overlying rock. The church of St. Michael is of various periods. The E. Eng. chancel retains a piscina of the same date, and on the north side is a Dec. altar-tomb still retaining traces of colour, and below the elaborate cornice is a series of mutilated shields of arms; this tomb is supposed to be that of Isabel, daughter of Richard de Camville, who in 1192–93 married Sir Robert de Harcourt. West of this, under an obtuse arch in the wall, is the monument of Maud, daughter of John, Lord Grey of Rotherfield, and wife of Sir Thomas de Harcourt (1394); the tomb bears her effigy habited in heraldic surcoat, mantle, and reticulated headdress, and on the front are four shields of arms. The chancel is divided from the nave by an E. Eng. wood rood-screen, especially noticeable as the oldest rood-screen as yet known in this country. The north transept retains a piscina, the platforms of two altars, and four heads as brackets, and the doorway has a stoup. The nave is Norm. with two original north and south doorways, the former having a stoup, and four small Norm. windows. On the south side of the chancel is a chapel of rich Perp. work belonging to the Harcourts, erected in the time of Henry VII., and filled with monuments of the Harcourt family from that period down to the present time, one having an inscription by Dr. Friend, and below it the well-known lines of Pope. In the north transept is a small round marble slab with the arms of Harcourt impaling Beke, and believed to commemorate Sir Richard de Harcourt (d. 1293); in the south transept is an altar-tomb with shields of arms to Sir Simon Harcourt, Knight (d. 1547). The font is Perp.; in the chapel there are 15th-cent. brasses with effigies. In the chancel is a large brass with effigy (vested) to Sir Henry Dodschone, vicar (d. 1519), and another to Elen, wife of John Camby (d. 1516), with two children. There is a chapel belonging to the Catholic Apostolic Church, and the Wesleyans have a preaching-room. Charities amount to about £23 yearly. The remains of the ancient manor-house of the Harcourts (erected, it is believed, about the time of Edward IV., and now occupied as a farmhouse) are immediately west of the church; the building originally surrounded a quadrangle. The existing remains consist of an embattled tower 54 ft. 6 in. in height, with a stair turret at the south-west angle; the basement of the tower is in part occupied by the domestic chapel; over the chapel are three chambers, one above the other, the uppermost retaining the name of "Pope's Study," having been occupied by the poet during his residence here in 1716–18; and one of the windows long retained a pane of red-stained glass upon which he wrote the following inscription—"In the year 1718 Alexander Pope finished here the fifth volume of Homer;" this relic, removed from its casement, is now preserved at Nuneham Courtney. In this pa. are the Devil's Quoits (q.v.). The village stocks are still standing a short distance north of the church.

Stanton Hill, ha., pa. of Skegby (q.v.), W. Notts., 3¾ W. of Mansfield.

Stanton-in-Peak. [Stanton (3).]

Stanton Lacy, pa. and vil. on the Corve, S. Salop, 3 N.W. of Ludlow; ac. 5,745; soil loam, overlying limestone. The church of St. Peter (restored) has some Saxon work in the nave and transept; there are two piscinæ, a 14th-cent. font, a brass to a former vicar, and some stone and marble tablets. The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have chapels. The charities are small. Downton Hall is a seat.

Stanton, Long, pa. and vil. on the Corve, S. Salop, 10 W. of Bridgnorth; ac. 2,725; soil stiff, subsoil clay. The church of St. Michael (restored 1869–70) is E. Eng., and contains some traces of mural paintings. The charities are small.

Stanton, Long, All Saints; Stanton, Long, St. Michael. [Long Stanton, etc.]

Stanton-on-the-Wolds, pa., S. Notts., 8 S.E. of Nottingham; ac. 1,406; soil stiff clay and sand, subsoil various. The church of All Saints (restored 1889) is a very small building. There are charities of about £40 yearly. The Manor House, formerly surrounded by a moat, is now occupied as a farmhouse. Colonel John Hutchinson made his escape from a window at the back of this house when surprised by Royalists.

Stanton Prior, pa. and vil., N.E. Somerset, 6 S.W. of Bath; ac. 841; soil stonebrash, overlying stone and clay. The church of St. Lawrence (restored 1869) is Norm. The Wesleyans have a chapel. There is a charity of £16 yearly. On Stantonbury Hill is an ancient entrenchment.

Stanton St. Bernard, pa. and vil., Mid Wilts., 6½ E. of Devizes; ac. 1,979; soil marl, overlying chalk. The church of All Saints (rebuilt 1833, excepting the tower, which dates from the 13th cent.) is in Gothic style. Here is a Baptist chapel.

Stanton St. Gabriel, pa. and vil. on the coast, S.W. Dors., 5 E. of Lyme Regis; ac. 1,052; soil and subsoil gravelly. The church of St. Gabriel was built in 1841 in place of the old church, now a ruin.

of Oxford; ac. 2,606; soil clay and loam, overlying sand and clay. The church of St. John the Baptist (given by the Empress Maud to Reading Abbey) is E. Eng. and Dec.; the chancel is a fine specimen of the former period, and contains some good glass, an Easter sepulchre, and a piscina; the chancel-arch is Late Norm.; in the north aisle is a fine screen, a Dec. piscina, a locker, and a water drain; in the south aisle is an aumbry; the tower is Perp. There is an endowed school, and a charity of £21. Woodperry is a seat.

Stanton St. Quintin, pa. and vil., N.W. Wilts., 5 S.W. of Malmesbury; ac. 1,744; soil brash, overlying clay. The church of St. Giles is chiefly Norm.; the chancel was rebuilt in the 15th cent.

Stanton, Stoney. [STONEY STANTON.]

Stanton-under-Bardon, tp., pa. of Thornton (q.v.), W. Leics., 9 N.W. of Leicester; ac. 1,406. There is a Wesleyan chapel. At Cliff Hill, 1 N.E. of the tp., is a large granite quarry.

Stanton-upon-Hineheath, pa. and vil. on the Roden, N. Salop, 9 N.N.E. of Shrewsbury; ac. 5,662; soil sandy loam, overlying sandstone and marl. The church of St. Andrew (restored 1892) contains some Norm. work. There are several small charities. Woodlands is a seat.

Stanway (1), pa. and vil., N.E. Essex, 4 W. of Colchester; ac. 3,329; soil gravel and sand, subsoil very light. The church of St. Albright or Ethelbert (restored 1880) was originally a wayside chapel, erected for the use of pilgrims and others travelling along the adjoining Icknield Street; it incorporates portions of E. Norm. date. The old church of All Saints, remains of which are still standing, has been in disuse since the time of Cromwell, and was unroofed and the lead and timber used during the Civil War; it was built in the time of Edward I. or II. All Saints' Church, on the Maldon road, is a modern building. The fact of the pa. church having been a wayside chapel seems to confirm the explanation of the name of "Playing Stalls" (applied to a field near the church) as the scene of Miracle Plays, and a tradition which marks the adjacent White Hart Farm as the Pilgrims' Hospice. A fair is held here in April.

Stanway (2), pa. and vil., N. Gloucs., 11 E. of Tewkesbury, on the road to Stow; ac. 3,787; soil marl, overlying clay and gravel. The church of St. Peter is E. Eng. Robert Dover, who instituted the "Cotswold Hill Games," died here in 1842, and is buried in the churchyard. Charities of £22 are yearly distributed to the poor. S. House, a 17th-cent. mansion, is a seat; the main entrance was designed by Inigo Jones.

Stanway (3), ha., pa. of Leintwardine (q.v.), N. Herefords., 5 S.E. of Hopton Heath.

Stanwell, pa. and pleasant vil., intersected by a stream, W. Middx., 2½ N.E. of Staines; ac. 3,999; soil chiefly gravel, overlying gravel. The church of St. Mary (restored and its north aisle rebuilt 1863) is E. Eng., Dec., and Perp. On the north side of the chancel is a stately monument of marble with life-sized kneeling effigies to Sir Thomas Knyvett.

VILLAGE GREEN, STANWELL.

Knight, first and only Baron Knyvett (d. 1622), and Elizabeth (Hayward) his wife; a canopied monument to Thomas Windsor (d. 1486) has disappeared. On the south side are two stone stalls, a piscina, and an arcade of eight recessed seats, supposed to have been anciently used by the monks of Chertsey Abbey. Dr. Bruno Ryves, author of "Mercurius Rusticus," was vicar here during the Civil War, when he was deprived, but was replaced at the Restoration, and died 1677. S. Place is a seat.

Stanwick (1), pa. and vil., N.R. Yorks., 8 W. of Darlington; ac. 6,083; soil clayey and loamy, overlying clay. The church of St. John (restored 1868) is E. Eng. The chancel retains a sedile on the south side, and at the east end of the south aisle is a recumbent marble figure in armour of Sir Hugh Smithson, Bart., and another of his lady; on the north-east wall is a marble monument with a recumbent figure. Here are the remains of very extensive entrenchments, called the "Jack Dyke Arches," the ramparts of which in the field adjoining the church are about 5 ft. high. A collection of bronze ornaments, fragments of house furniture, and weapons of war, together with some large iron hoops (presumed to be wheel-tyres), were found near here, and have been deposited in the British Museum. S. Hall is a seat, and contains a valuable collection of paintings.

Stanwick (2), pa. and vil., E. Northants, 1¼ N.E. of Higham Ferrers; ac. 2,000; soil mixed, overlying limestone and clay; there is also a little ironstone in the pa. The church of St. Lawrence (restored 1856) is E. Eng. and Perp. There are Wesleyan and Baptist chapels. Needham's charity, producing £3 yearly, is for poor housekeepers not receiving parish relief; the church land produces about £21 yearly. Richard Cumberland (1732-1811) the dramatist was born here. S. House is a seat.

Stanwick St. John, tp., pa. of and adjoining Stanwick (q.v.), N.R. Yorks.; ac. 1,397.

Stanwix, pa., N. Cumb., forming a suburb of Carlisle; ac. 6,493; soil various, overlying loam. S. is connected with Carlisle by a stone bridge over the Eden. The church of St. Michael (1841) is in E. Eng. style, and is believed to stand on the site of a Roman station. It was partially destroyed by fire in 1843, and was completely restored in 1892. In the north part of the churchyard the foundations of Roman buildings have been frequently met with. The charities amount to about £25 yearly. The convent of the Sacred Heart of Jesus, on St. Ann's Hill, was opened in 1892. S. has a Home for Friendless Girls. There is a large nursery, where forest trees, roses, and fruit trees are cultivated.

Stapeley, tp. and small vil., pa. of Wybunbury (q.v.), S. Chesh., 4 S.W. of Crewe; ac. 1,249.

Stapenhill, pa., tp., and vil., S. Derbys., within the bor. of Burton-on-Trent (q.v.); ac. of pa. 4,561, of tp. 1,719; soil and subsoil chiefly clay, and the land is mostly in pasture for dairy purposes. The vil. of S. is on the Trent, 1 E. by S. of Burton-on-Trent railway station. The church of St. Peter (rebuilt 1880–81) is in Dec. and Perp. styles; in the porch is an alabaster tombstone with incised effigies and a Latin inscription to William Dethick and Margaret his wife (1497). The charities are small. A British trench and remains of the Romano-British and Saxon periods were discovered in 1881, and upwards of thirty skeletons and a number of knives and spear-heads were dug up.

Staple, ti., pa. of Tisbury (q.v.), S.W. Wilts., 3 S.E. of Hindon.

Staplecross (1), vil., pa. of Ewhurst (q.v.), S.E. Sussex, about 4 N. of Battle. There is a mission church and also a Wesleyan chapel.

Staplecross (2), ha., pa. of and ½ S.E. from Hockworthy (q.v.), N.E. Devon.

Staplefield Common, eccl. pa. and vil., pa. of Cuckfield (q.v.), N. Sussex, 4½ W. of Balcombe. The church of St. Mark (1847) is in E. Eng. style. There is a Congregational chapel. Brookside, Dittons Place, Holmstead, Stanbridge Grange, and S. Place are seats.

Staple Fitzpaine, pa. and vil., S. Somerset, 5 S.E. of Taunton; ac. 2,574; soil clayey. The church of St. Peter is Perp. There are almshouses for six inmates, and several charities partly devoted to educational purposes. Teazels are largely grown here.

Stapleford (1), pa. and to. on the Erwash, S. Notts., on the borders of Derbys., 6 W. by S. of Nottingham; ac. 1,193; soil various, overlying New Red Sandstone. The church of St. Helen (restored) is E. Eng.; the apex of the spire has been twice shattered by lightning. A more ancient edifice, of which perhaps a portion of the north aisle is a relic, existed here at the time of Edward the Confessor, and was then, and continued to be till the period of the Reformation, an appendage of Newstead Abbey. Towards the end of the 15th cent. the church was thoroughly repaired, and a clerestory built with four Perp. windows. The old reredos has been removed and fixed against the north wall of the chancel, over the credence table; it is a curiously fine specimen of carving in black oak, representing "The Last Supper." The old font still remains, and there are stone sedilia and a piscina. Among the monuments is that of Gervase Teverey (d. 1639) with his recumbent effigy on an altar-tomb of black marble, figures of his four children carved in alabaster appearing in bas-relief on one of the side panels. Near the entrance to the chancel is a curiously-cut stone slab representing John Teverey and his wife, with other memorials, including one to George Jackson (1684); there is also a monument to the only son of Admiral Sir John Borlase Warren, Bart., who was killed at the battle of Aboukir. The Wesleyans, Methodist New Connexion, and Primitive Methodists have each a chapel. The Albert Hall was opened in 1879, and the S. Literary Institute holds its meetings here. S. was anciently a Roman settlement, and is now adjacent to a colliery and ironstone district, but the inhabitants are chiefly engaged in the manufacture of lace. An old stone cross, supposed to be a market cross, stands near the church. S. Hall is a seat.

Stapleford (2), pa. and vil., S. Cambs., about 4 S.S.E. of Cambridge; ac. 1,770; soil chalky, overlying chalk. The church of St. Andrew (restored 1868) is E. Eng. and Dec.; in the chancel are three piscinæ (one double), and there is a brass, dated 1617, to the Rev. William Lee, a former vicar. Here is a small Baptist chapel. The charities amount to about £30 yearly. Here are traces of a Roman entrenchment of nearly a mile in circumference. Gog-Magog Hills, a plain old mansion about 1½ N.W. of the vil., is a seat.

Stapleford (3), pa. on the Rye, E. Leics., on the Rutld. border, 4 E. by S. of Melton Mowbray; ac. 2,226; soil and subsoil chiefly gravel and clay. The church of St. Mary Magdalene, standing in S. Park and near the Hall, was erected in 1783. It contains a number of fine monuments and memorials to the Sherard family. There is an endowed almshouse and a special charity of £48 yearly. S. House, the seat of the Sherard family, comprises a deer-park of 919 ac., a lake of about 14 ac., and a heronry; wild ducks also breed here in great numbers.

Stapleford (4), pa. and vil. on the Wylye, S. Wilts., 7½ N.W. of Salisbury; ac. 2,072; soil chalk and gravel, overlying chalk. The church of St. Mary (restored 1862) is in Norm. style. The Wesleyans have a small chapel here.

Stapleford (5), pa. and vil. on the Beane, E. Herts., 3 N. of Hertford; ac. 1,354; soil gravel, clay, and chalk, overlying clay and chalk. The church of St. Mary the Virgin (restored 1874) is Perp. There is a small charity.

Staplegrove, pa. and vil., S. Somerset, 1½ N.W. of Taunton; ac. 1,062; soil stonebrash, overlying gravel. The church of St. John (restored 1857) chiefly dates from the 15th cent. There is a Congregational college. Here is a flock and shoddy factory.

Staplehill, ha., pa. of Mangotsfield (q.v.), S. Gloucs., about 4 N.E. of Bristol.

Staplehoe, Lower and Upper. [STAPLOE, LOWER; STAPLOE, UPPER.]

Staplehurst, pa. and vil., Mid Kent, 9 S. of Maidstone; ac. 5,855; soil and subsoil clay. The church of All Saints (restored 1853 and 1876) is of various periods; the tower is Perp., the chancel contains some E. Eng. work, and the south chapel is Dec.; in the south porch is a fine door, possibly dating from the 12th cent. Here are Congregational and Baptist chapels. The charities are small. The Old House and Iden Manor are seats.

Staple Inn, pa. of Central London, E. Middx., ¼ W.N.W. of St. Paul's; ac. 1. It takes its name from the Inn of Chancery belonging to Gray's Inn, which reached from Holborn Bars to Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane. This Inn (which is said to have been originally a hostel of the merchants of the wool-staple) became the property of Gray's Inn in 1529, and was sold in 1884. The main front was soon afterwards restored. The buildings now consist mainly of offices and chambers surrounding an open court. Dr. Johnson resided here in 1758.

Staple-next-Wingham, pa. and vil., E. Kent, 4 W. of Sandwich; ac. 978; soil rich loam, overlying clay. The church of St. James (restored 1868) is Dec. and Perp., and contains a piscina in the south wall of the chancel; there are several tablets to the Lynch family, and a brass with the effigy of a merchant of this name. The font has an octagonal bowl enriched with figures of angels, is elevated on two steps, and the lower part of the bowl has figures of monsters and a floriated band. The Baptists have a chapel. There is a small charity.

Staplers Heath, eminence, pa. of Arreton (q.v.), I. of W., about 1½ E. of Newport. It commands a fine view, and leads on to Arreton Down.

Staples, The. [FARNE ISLANDS.]

Staple Street, ha., pa. of Hernhill (q.v.), N.E. Kent, 5 N.W. of Canterbury.

Stapleton (1), pa. and vil. on the Frome, S.W. Gloucs., about 2½ N.E. of Bristol; ac. 2,554. Holy Trinity Church was built 1856, in Dec. style. Colston's School was founded in 1708 by Edward Colston at the "Great House," Bristol, but subsequently removed here. Here are quarries of Pennant stone. S. was a Roman settlement. Oldbury Park (an Elizabethan mansion), Stoke Park (containing some carving by Grinling Gibbons), and Wickham Court (at one time Cromwell's headquarters during the siege of Bristol) are seats.

Stapleton (2), pa. and tp. on the Line, N. Cumb., 9 N.E. of Longtown; ac. of pa. 11,764, of tp. 4,744; soil various (light and heavy), overlying clay. The church of St. Mary (1830) is in Gothic style, and the Wesleyans have a chapel. There are some small charities, most of which are applied to educational purposes. Coal is obtained in this pa., but the industry is of little value.

Stapleton (3), pa. and vil., Mid Salop, 6 S. of Shrewsbury; ac. 2,352; soil sand, clay, and gravel, overlying gravel. The church of St. John the Baptist (restored 1867) is of different periods; in the churchyard is a curious tumulus, believed to be Saxon.

Starcross, eccl. pa. and watering-place pleasantly situated on the Exe, about 1½ miles from its mouth, pas. of Kenton and Dawlish (q.v.), S. Dev., 8 S.E. of Exeter. It is connected with Exmouth by ferry, and the road from Exeter to Dawlish runs through S., forming its principal street. The church of St. Paul (1828) is in Norm. style. The Western Counties Idiot Asylum is a building of grey limestone, with dressings of buff brick and Bath stone, in E. Eng. style; it consists of a central block, with north and south wings (appropriated to boys and girls respectively), the central block constituting the residence of the superintendent. The original pa. charities amount to £22 yearly, in addition to which £500 stock was placed in the hands of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners in 1881 for the benefit of seven aged parishioners, regular attendants at the church; there are also clubs for distributing clothing, coals, and blankets to the poor. Here are two good hotels. A pleasure fair is held on Whitsun Wednesday yearly. Exeleigh is a seat.

Starston, pa. and small vil., S. Norf., 18 S. of Norwich; ac. 2,168; soil mixed, overlying gravel and clay. The church of St. Margaret (restored 1870) is E. Dec., with some remains of Norm. work; in the church is a monument with kneeling effigy to Bartholomew Cotton, Clerk of Briefs in the Star Chamber (d. 1613). The charities are considerable. S. Hall, occupied as a farmhouse, is an Elizabethan building of red brick, standing in pleasant grounds and partly surrounded by a moat. S. Place, on an eminence near the church and surrounded by extensive grounds, is a seat.

Startforth, pa., tp., and vil. on the Tees, N.R. Yorks., 15 W. of Darlington; ac. of pa. 2,896, of tp. 1,010; soil loamy, subsoil clayey. The church of Holy Trinity, which stands upon an eminence, was rebuilt 1863, in Dec. style. A stone bridge across the Tees connects S. with Barnard Castle; and there is also a light and ornamental foot-bridge leading to the main street of Barnard Castle, erected in place of a previous bridge destroyed by a great river flood in 1881. Here, on the banks of the Tees, are extensive thread mills. Low S. Hall and S. Hall are seats.

overlying gravel in the northern parts and in the southern parts clay. The church of St. Andrew (with the exception of the tower) is an embattled structure of cobble stones with freestone dressings, of the Dec. and Perp. periods; the steps and doors of the rood-loft remain. Over the eastern gable of the nave is a bell-cote, still containing a fine sanctus bell. In the south aisle is a monument with recumbent effigy in armour to Sir George Wauton, Knight (d. 1606); in the chancel chapel, at the east end of the north aisle, is a mural monument to Major-General Handasyd, Governor of Jamaica (d. 1729), and another to his eldest son, the Hon. General Roger Handasyd (d. 1763), Governor of Berwick in the rebellion of 1745; there is also an altar-tomb of black marble to one of the Beverley family (1670), and several mural tablets to the Duberly family. In the chancel is an elaborate mural monument to Sir James Dyer, Knight, Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas (d. 1582), and Margaret (à Barrow) his wife. There is another monument to Sir Richard Dyer, Knight (d. 1605), Gentleman of the Privy Chamber to King James I., and Maria (Fitzwilliams) his wife (d. 1601), with full-sized kneeling effigies and shields of arms; and a mural monument to Sir Baldwin Conyers, Bart. (d. 1731), and his son, John Conyers, Esq. (d. 1729). There is a Baptist and an Independent chapel. The charities for distribution in kind and money amount to about £70 a year; there are also charities of about £6 for church purposes. Place House, an interesting 14th-cent. building, to the north-west of the church, was a manor-house; what remains of it is now a private residence and a farmhouse, but there are still traces of the moat. By the roadside, in the eastern portion of the vil. known as "The Highway," is a sun-dial on a stone column, erected in 1637. Gaynes Hall (a handsome mansion in a well-wooded park) and S. House (near the church, and surrounded by very extensive park-like grounds) are seats.

Staughton, Little, or Staughton, Parva, pa. and vil., N. Beds., 10 N. of Bedford; ac. 1,684; soil mixed, overlying clay and gravel. The church (supposed to have been dedicated to St. Margaret) is Dec. and Perp.; on the north side of the chancel is a canopied sepulchral recess; in the south aisle is a squint. There is a large Baptist chapel.

Staunton, for places not found under this spelling, see also STANTON.

Staunton (1), pa., tp., and vil. picturesquely situated in the vale of Belvoir, E. Notts., near the borders of Leics. and Lincs., 7 S.E. of Newark; ac. of pa. 2,336, of tp. 1,355; soil and subsoil clay. The Perp. church of St. Mary (restored 1894) retains a piscina and several monuments, including an altar-tomb with the effigy of a knight in armour, understood to be that of Sir Mauger Staunton (1100), as well as other tombs of similar character bearing figures of cross-legged knights. S. has been the property of a family of this name from the time of the Normans. S. Hall is a seat.

Staunton (2), pa. and vil. on the Wye, W. Glouc., 3 S.E. of Monmouth; ac. 1,446; soil various, overlying limestone. The church of All Saints (restored 1872) is Norm., E. Eng., and Dec.; the rood-stairs remain, as well as a very early stone pulpit and font, and an aumbry in the south transept. There is an almshouse with an endowment of £32 yearly. In the vil. is an ancient stone cross.

Staunton (3), pa. and vil. on the Leadon, S.W. Worcs., 8 N. of Gloucester; ac. 1,500; soil marl and loam, overlying shale. The church of St. James (renovated 1860) is of various periods; the font was formerly a Roman altar. The charities amount to about £50 yearly.

Staunton (4), ha., pa. of Dunster (q.v.), W. Somerset, about 1 S. of Minehead.

Staunton Harold, tp., pa. of Breedon-on-the-Hill (q.v.), N.W. Leics., on the borders of Derbys., 4 N.E. of Ashby-de-la-Zouch; ac. 1,682. Staunton Harold, a seat, was rebuilt about 1780, and has a private Perp. chapel adjoining.

Staunton-on-Arrow, pa. and vil. on the Arrow, N.W. Herefords., 10 W. of Leominster; ac. 2,968; soil and subsoil various. The church of St. Peter is in Gothic style. S. Court and S. Hall are seats.

Staunton-on-Wye, pa. and vil., Mid Herefords., 13 S.W. of Leominster; ac. 2,376; soil clayey, overlying gravel and sand. The church of St. Mary the Virgin is chiefly Trans.; the chancel was rebuilt 1720. A charity bequeathed 1790 is administered by twelve trustees. Kilkington was formerly a manor-house, in which, during the Civil War, Mrs. Joyce Jefferies found an asylum for a time after she had been driven out of her house in Hereford by the Parliamentary soldiers.

Staunton, White. [WHITE STAUNTON.]

Staveley (1), pa., tp., and large vil. close to the valley of the Rother, E. Derbys., 4½ N.E. of Chesterfield; ac. of pa. 10,793, of tp. 6,872; soil and subsoil clay. The church of St. John the Baptist (restored 1865) is principally E. Eng., but was much altered during the worst part of the Perp. period; in the south aisle is a mutilated piscina, and built into the outer wall of the north aisle is a richly-carved recess with a crocketed ogee arch and pinnacles; in the upper half is a painting, now much faded, of the "Resurrection." Some fragments of ancient glass remain in the east window of the chantry. On the north side of the chancel is an altar-tomb, bearing on the upper slab the full-length figure in brass of a knight in plate armour, covered by a tabard displaying the arms of Frecheville; on the margin is a mutilated inscription to Sir Peter Frecheville, knighted at the battle of Pinkie or Musselburgh (September 10, 1547), and Matilda his wife. Here also is a monument with figures of a man in armour and his wife, kneeling at desks facing each other, eight boys in long gowns also kneeling behind the one and seven girls behind the other; above is a figure of the Virgin and Child, and underneath an inscription to "Peyrs Frechwell ob. 25 March, 1503, and Maude his wyf." Under one of the arches of the chancel arcade is an alabaster slab bearing the effigy of an armoured knight, bareheaded and with clasped hands, representing John Frecheville, son of the foregoing Sir Peter (d. 1509). The remains of similar slabs, much defaced, were removed at the restoration to the chantry, or "Frecheville quire," now containing the later monuments of that family. Here also is a slab incised with the figure of an ecclesiastic standing beneath a canopy and supporting with one hand a pastoral staff, intended to commemorate John Warton, a former rector. Another incised slab, probably of the 12th cent., bears a cross with a simply-formed circular head; the head of a third incised cross is almost entirely concealed by the base of a large canopied niche designed for two figures of saints and placed in the south-east angle. There are Free Methodist, Primitive Methodist, and Wesleyan chapels. Markham Hall is a brick building, the ground floor of which is used as a market hall; the upper part contains a large hall for entertainments. The Mechanics' Institute and Reading Room occupies an ancient house near the church. There are several bequests for the benefit of the poor of the pa. and for educational purposes, amounting annually to about £230. The land in this pa. is of great value for its rich minerals and its abundant produce of coal and some ironstone, great quantities of the former being sent away by the Midland Railway, which has a station here. There is an old-established brush manufactory; spades and shovels are also made, and there are corn mills.

Staveley (2), pa. and vil., W.R. Yorks., 7 S.E. of Ripon; ac. 1,375; soil various, overlying clay. The church of All Saints (rebuilt 1865) is E. Eng.; in the churchyard is a Runic cross. Here are Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist chapels. There is a small charity. Spellow Hall is a seat.

Staveley (3), eccl. pa. on the Kent, pa. of and 4½ N.W. from Kendal (q.v.), S. Westmd. The church of St. James (1864–65) is in E. Eng. style. The tower of the ancient church, a Late Perp. edifice, is still standing. In 1621 a meeting was held here in the ancient church at the call of James Smith, High Constable, ostensibly to view a bridge, but really to protest against the action of James I., who had decided upon taking into his own hands certain estates, which were held for service in defence against Border warfare. James Smith and over one hundred others were indicted before the "Star Chamber," where the cause was heard in November, 1622, but it was not till after the King's death in 1625 that the tenants successfully asserted the validity of their title.

Staveley (4), eccl. pa. and tp., pa. of Cartmel (q.v.), N. Lancs., 1½ S. of Lakeside; ac. 4,199. The church of St. Mary is a building of stone.

Staveley, Nether, tp., pa. of and about 4 N.W. from Kendal (q.v.), S. Westmd.; ac. 2,563.

Staveley, Over, tp., pa. of and about 4½ N.W. from Kendal (q.v.), S. Westmd.; ac. 2,580.

Staverton (1), pa. and vil. on the Dart, S. Dev., 3½ W. of Totnes; ac. 5,051; soil and subsoil various. The church of St. Paul (restored) is of various periods; a carved oak screen has been restored, and an ancient rood-gallery reconstructed. The Wesleyans have a chapel. There are a number of substantial charities. In the northern part of the pa., about 2 S. of Ashburton, are the Pen Recca slate quarries. The slate yielded by these quarries is found in immense blocks of a beautiful sage-green or chocolate colour; many of the farm-houses in the surrounding district have been roofed with it since the reign of James I., and in the reign of Charles I. Ashburton church was also new-roofed with the same material. Pridhamsleigh Cave (q.v.) is in this pa. S. is noted for the excellence of its cider. The Dart, which affords excellent fishing, is crossed here by a bridge of seven arches, built 1412–13, the bishop having ordered the Archdeacon of Totnes to collect alms from the deaneries of Applepen, Moreton, and Totnes for the purpose, and promised an indulgence of forty days to the contributors, the old bridge being in a ruinous condition.

Staverton (2), pa. and vil., W. Northants, separated from Warws. by the Leam, 2¼ S.W. of Daventry; ac. 2,240; soil varies from strong clay to loam, on a substratum of rock, overlying shelly rock. The church of St. Mary the Virgin (restored 1884) is Dec. and Perp.; in the north chapel is an ancient monument with pillars of the Ionic order, enclosing a brass with figures of a man and woman kneeling at a desk, together with six sons and four daughters, and below these an inscription to Thomas Wylmer (d. 1580) and Elizabeth (Crudge) his wife; above are the arms and crest of Wylmer. In the wall between the aisle and chancel are sedilia, a piscina, and squint. In 1720 a destructive fire occurred in the vil., causing a loss of property of about £3,000. The poor's land produces £14, which is distributed to the poor in fuel during the winter; there is also the interest of a legacy of £100 and Wildgose's charity of £341 17s. 7d. invested in Consols for bread and clothing.

Staverton (3), pa. and vil., N. Glouc., 5 N.E. of Gloucester; ac. 978; soil clay, overlying clay and gravel. The church of St. Catherine, anciently of St. John the Baptist, is E. Eng. There is an iron mission church. S. Court and S. House are seats.

Staverton (4), eccl. pa. and vil., pa. of and 2 N. from Trowbridge (q.v.), W. Wilts. The church of St. Paul is a small plain stone building. Here is a Wesleyan chapel. Manufacture of woollen cloth is carried on in a large mill.

Staverton (5), large tract of forest-land, S.E. Suff., 3 E. of Woodbridge. This park, as it is called, has never been cultivated or planted.

Stavordale, ha., pa. of Wincanton (q.v.), S.E. Somerset, about 5 S. of Bruton.

Staward, ha. with railway station, pa. of Warden (q.v.), S. Northumb., about 8 W. of Hexham.

Stawell, tp. and small vil., pa. of Moorlinch (q.v.), Mid Somerset, 4½ E.N.E. of Bridgwater; ac. 955. The ancient E. Eng. chapel was restored in 1874. Here is a Congregational chapel.

Staxigoe, vil., pa. of and about 2½ N.E. from Wick (q.v.), E. Caiths., Sc. It has a fairly good harbour and a public school.

Staxton, ha., pa. of Willerby (q.v.), E.R. Yorks., 6½ S. of Scarborough. There are Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist chapels.

Stayley, eccl. pa., pa. of Mottram-in-Longden-Dale (q.v.), N.E. Chesh., and tp. extending into the pa. of Ashton-under-Lyne (q.v.), N.E. Chesh.; ac. 2,344. It lies within the bor. of Stalybridge, of which it forms a north-east suburb. The church of St. Paul is a cruciform building in Gothic style.

Staythorpe, tp., pa. of Averham (q.v.), E. Notts., 3¾ S.W. of Newark; ac. 661.

Steane, pa., S. Northants, about 2½ N.W. of Brackley; ac. 1,138; soil sand and clay, overlying brashy and heavy clay. The church of St. Peter (1620) is a small but beautiful rectangular edifice of stone; the parapet is profusely decorated. The crimson velvet coverings for the communion table, reading-desk, and pulpit, as well as the Bible and Common Prayer-Book, said to have been used "by the King himself," belonged in the reign of Charles II. to the Chapel Royal, St. James's; there are also six splendidly-bound Prayer-Books having the Royal insignia of King William III. on the covers. In the south aisle, which is separated from the nave by ornamental oak gates, are several monuments and tablets of marble to the Crewe family. On the north side is a very handsome and massive monument, consisting of marble pillars supporting a canopy surmounted by pinnacles, between which are placed the armorial bearings of Crewe, richly carved and decorated; on an altar-tomb at the base are recumbent marble figures of Sir Thomas Crewe, M.P., Speaker of the House of Commons (d. 1633), and Temperance (Bray) his wife (d. 1619); a marble tablet with arms is inscribed to John, Lord Crewe, Baron of Steane (d. 1679), and Jemima (Waldegrave) his wife (d. 1675); another fine monument commemorates Thomas, Lord Crewe, Baron of Steane (d. 1697). There is also a tablet with marble pillars, coloured and gilt, supporting trophies, to Nathaniel, Lord Crewe, Lord Bishop of Durham and Baron of Steane (d. 1721), and to his second wife Dorothy (Foster) (d. 1715); his first wife Penelope (Frowde) was also buried in the chapel in 1699. On the south side is a marble monument, consisting of an arch enclosing a female bust, flanked by niches with figures; on either side are marble pillars bearing a concave arch, enclosing and surmounted by other emblematic devices; the inscription is to Temperance (Crewe), wife of John Browne, Esq., of Eydon (d. 1634). Many ancient funeral relics, chiefly helmets, gauntlets, and standards, are suspended from the walls; here is also an early font, dug up in an adjoining field.

Stearsby, ha., pa. of and ¾ E. from Brandsby (q.v.), N.R. Yorks.

Stebbing, pa. and vil., W. Essex, 7 W. of Braintree; ac. 4,382; soil various, overlying clay and gravel. The church of St. Mary is Dec.; in the chancel are sedilia, a piscina, and a fine screen; in the south aisle is a good piscina, and there is another in the sacristy; the beautiful south porch contains the remains of a stoup. The Society of Friends have a meeting-house, and there are Congregational and Primitive Methodist chapels. The charities are small. A mound surrounded by a moat is traditionally reputed to be the site of a castle. Malting, brick-making, and flour-milling are carried on.

Stedham, pa. and vil. on the West Rother, W. Sussex, 2 N.W. of Midhurst; ac. 2,481; soil sandy loam, overlying gravel. The church of St. James was partly rebuilt and enlarged 1850, in E. Eng. style; in the churchyard is a yew-tree 28 ft. in circumference. There is a reading and recreation room. The manor of Stedeham, as it was then written, appears in Domesday Survey under the heading of "Hamesford." Rotherhill, S. Hall, and Wispers are seats.

Steel, ha., pa. of and about 3 S. from Hexham (q.v.), S. Northumb.

Steel Cross, ha., pa. of Rotherfield (q.v.), N. Sussex, 1 N. of Crowborough.

Steel Fell (1,811 ft.), mountain, W. Westmd., about 2 N. of Grasmere.

Steens Bridge, ha. with railway station, pa. of Humber (q.v.), N. Herefords., about 4 S.E. of Leominster.

Steep, pa. (extending into Sussex), tp., and vil., E. Hants, 2 N.W. of Petersfield; ac. of pa. 5,329, of tp. 2,658; soil marl, clay, and sandy loam, overlying gravel and sand. The church of All Saints (restored 1876) is Norm. and Trans.; in the chancel are several tablets to the Baker family. The Primitive Methodists have chapels in the pa. There are six almshouses. Ashford Lodge, pleasantly situated in woody grounds on the banks of a small rivulet, and Stonerwood, a modern mansion, are seats.

Steep Holme, rocky islet in the Bristol Channel, pa. of Uphill (q.v.), N. Somerset, about 6 W. by S. of Weston-super-Mare; ac. 70. It is a limestone rock, about a mile and a half in circumference, and rises perpendicularly from the sea, and inaccessible at all points except two. Githa, King Harold's mother, retired here, and on this spot Gildas wrote his history. It formerly had a priory, founded in the 14th cent. There are remains of a graveyard. The islet has a battery, manned by the Marine Artillery, and forming part of the Severn fortifications.

Steeping, river, E. Lincs., rises near Harrington, and flows in a S.E. direction for about 12 miles, past Great and Little S. and Wainfleet to the North Sea, into which it empties itself about 5 S. of Skegness.

Steeping, Great, pa. and vil., E. Lincs., about 2 S.E. of Spilsby, on the road to Wainfleet; ac. 1,685; soil chiefly strong clay, with some light loam, overlying clay. The church of All Saints is a modern brick building with stone facings. An older church of the same name, partly rebuilt in 1748, is now used only for burials. The Wesleyans and Baptists have chapels. The poor have the rent of about 4 ac. of land.

Steeping, Little, pa. and vil., E. Lincs., 3 S.E. of Spilsby; ac. 1,036; soil strong clay, overlying sand and turf. The Perp. church of St. Andrew contains a curious font of early date. There is a Wesleyan chapel. The charities amount to £20 yearly, derived from land, and are appropriated towards the maintenance of the national school. The Manor House is a seat.

Steeple (1), pa. in the Isle of Purbeck, S.E. Dors., 5 S. of Wareham; ac. 3,362; soil strong clay, with gravelly subsoil. The church of St. Michael is mostly Perp.; the south doorway is Norm. Creech Grange is a seat, partly rebuilt on the site and in the style of the old mansion. In the park is a chapel-of-ease, built from the ruins of Holme priory, and containing a Norm. chancel-arch. [CREECH BARROW.]

Steeple (2), pa. and vil. near the estuary of the Blackwater, E. Essex, 9 S.E. of Maldon; ac. 2,792; soil of heavy nature, overlying clay. The church of St. Lawrence and All Saints (1882) is in Dec. style, its walls being almost entirely composed of the materials of the old church, which was situated about ¼ W. of the vil. The Congregationalists and the Peculiar People have chapels. There are some small charities.

Steeple (3), mountain (2,687 ft.) overlooking the Vale of Ennerdale, S. Cumb. Its crags on the Ennerdale side are very striking.

Steeple Ashton, pa., tp., and large vil., W. Wilts, 4 E. of Trowbridge; ac. of pa. 6,789, of tp. 2,715; soil clay, overlying clay and stone. The church of St. Mary is Perp.; here is a 17th-cent. brass, a marble monument to the Hon. T. Beach (1774) and Helen his wife (1771), and some others. Fragments of ancient stained glass remain in some of the windows. Here are Primitive Methodist and Baptist chapels. There is a market cross, which was erected in 1679. Fossils have been found in large quantities in the pa. at various times. The charities are considerable, and are chiefly distributed to the poor in money and kind.

Steeple Aston, pa., tp., and vil. by the Cherwell, Mid Oxon, 6½ N. by E. of Woodstock; ac. of pa. 1,974, of tp. 1,076; soil and subsoil various. The church of St. Peter (restored 1842) is of various periods. The chancel is debased Perp., and has an east window of three lights, with two transoms, and a restored screen; the north chapel retains a fine Dec. east window and a piscina of the same date; on its north side is a monument by Scheemaker to Sir Francis Page, Knight, Baron of the Exchequer (1718–26) and successively Justice of the Common Pleas and the King's Bench (d. 1741), and to his second wife (d. 1730). The benches are all of carved oak of Late Perp. work, and were restored 1842; the font is round and ancient. In the church is carefully preserved an ancient cope richly embroidered with the martyrdom of saints; it was long since cut up so as to form a reredos and frontal for an altar, in which condition it exists, though somewhat decayed. In the north aisle is a brass in good preservation, dated 1525. In the chancel is buried Daniel Greenwood, D.D. (d. 1673), appointed Principal of Brasenose College, Oxford, 1647–48, by the Parliamentary Commissioners, but ejected August, 1660, by those of Charles II. About 1622 a Roman tessellated pavement was discovered here. Hill House and S. A. Grange are seats.

Steeple Barton, pa. and vil., Mid Oxon, 7 N. of Woodstock; ac. 2,893; soil and subsoil stonebrash. The church of St. Mary is chiefly Dec. and Perp. An arcade of five Dec. arches separates the nave and aisle; some of the open benches are Jacobean. In the church are memorials to the Croker family (1568–1696), Sheldons (1670–81), and Goughs (1706–27); and also to Jane (d. 1611), wife of Lawrence Humphrey, and to Sir Philip Constable, of Everingham, Yorks. (1664). The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have chapels. There are charities amounting to about £50 yearly. Maiden Bower is said to be a British earthwork; near it, on the road to Oxford, is a heap of stones, the ruins of a so-called Druidical altar. Barton Abbey is a seat.

Steeple Bumpstead. [BUMPSTEAD, STEEPLE.]

Steeple Claydon. [CLAYDON, STEEPLE.]

Steeple Gidding, pa. and vil., S. Hunts.; ac. 1,070; soil strong clay, overlying clay. The vil., situated on an eminence, is 10½ N.W. of Huntingdon. The church of St. Andrew (restored 1874) is E. Eng., with a Norm. doorway in the south porch. It contains several monuments of the Cotton family, descendants of Sir Robert Bruce Cotton, Knight and Bart., the founder of the Cottonian library, now in the British Museum.

Steeple Langford, pa. and vil. on the Wylye, S. Wilts., 9 N.W. of Salisbury; ac. 3,896; soil loam, overlying chalk and flint. The church of All Saints (restored 1875) is E. Eng., and has a squint in the chancel arch. There are some small charities.

Steeple Morden, pa. and vil., S.W. Cambs., on the borders of Herts., 5 N.W. of Royston; ac. 3,766; soil clay and gravel, overlying clay. Coprolites are dug in this pa. The church of SS. Peter and Paul is E. Eng. and Dec. Here is a Wesleyan chapel.

Steepleton Iwerne, or Steepleton Preston, pa., N. Dors., about 4 N.N.W. of Blandford; ac. 818; soil light loam, overlying chalk and gravel. The church of St. Mary is E. Eng., with a Norm. chancel arch. S. House, in a park of 90 ac., is a seat.

Steeton (1), eccl. pa. and tp. (Steeton-with-Eastburn), pa. of Kildwick (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., 2½ N.W. of Keighley; ac. 2,066. The church of St. Stephen is in E. Eng. style. The Primitive Methodists and Wesleyan Methodists have chapels. There is a Mechanics' Institute and Public Library. A worsted mill and a saw-mill and bobbin factory afford employment to several hundred persons. A Victoria Jubilee Tower was erected June, 1887, on Hawkcliffe Crag. S. Hall is a seat; a portion of the house is reputed to have been built before the Conquest, a chapelry having been attached about 1300 in connection with Bolton Priory. Park House is also a seat. S. (in Domesday "Stiveton") owes its name to a Saxon named Stephen, who possessed it before the Conquest.

Steeton (2), tp. consisting of two farms, pa. of Bolton Percy (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., 3 E. of Tadcaster; ac. 1,141. This place (anciently belonging to the family of De Steeton) became afterwards the seat of Sir Guy Fairfax, appointed one of the judges of the King's Bench (1478). Here he built a castle, which continued to be the principal seat of the family until the beginning of the 18th cent., when they removed to Newton Kyme; he died in 1495. S. Hall, where Lord Fairfax, the Parliamentary general, slept the night before the battle of Marston Moor (July 2, 1644), is now in the occupation of a farmer; the chapel, which adjoined the house, has been pulled down, the most interesting relics of this place being now deposited at Newton Kyme.

Stenigot, small pa., E. Lincs., pleasantly situated on the acclivities of a beautiful dale, 7 S.W. of Louth; ac. 1,321; soil clay, overlying chalk. The church of St. Nicholas is a plain modern edifice. The nave of the E. Eng. church has been dismantled, and the chancel fitted up as a mortuary chapel.

Stenkrith Bridge, over the Eden, near the North-Eastern Railway station at Kirkby Stephen (q.v.), N. Westmd. Here the river forms a noisy and foaming cataract. The scenery above and below is highly picturesque. On either side are tall shrub-clad cliffs, interspersed with huge masses of rock; and the current, pouring over a ledge of irregular and broken rocks, falls into the gulf and sends up sheets of white foam. The rocks in the river bed contain a large number of holes, and in some places these cavities are so wide as to receive the whole river, which in some seasons is thus rendered quite dry.

Stennes, q.s. pa., pas. of Firth and Stennes and Sandwick, in the west of Mainland, W. Ork., Sc., 8 W. by S. of Kirkwall. The pa. is divided from Stromness and Sandwick on the west and north-west by the Loch of Stennes and part of the Loch of Harringay. The Established church was erected in 1793. The Free church has a station here. The House of Stennes, an ancient grey edifice, occupies the site of the building wherein Jarl Havard was murdered by his wife Ragnhild in the 10th cent. The celebrated Stones of S. consist of two groups, situated on the opposite sides of the narrow channel separating the Loch of S. from that of Harringay. The smaller circle, to the south-east, originally comprised 15 stones, about 12 ft. in height; of these, four only are left—two remaining upright; the circle is about 100 ft. in diameter. Near it is a monolith, 8 ft. in height, called the "Stone of Odin"; it contains a hole, within which hands were joined in confirmation of an oath; the stone is mentioned in "The Pirate." The Ring of Brogarth or Brogar seems to have had 60 stones, 13 of which remain upright, whilst 10 lie on the ground. It is about 350 ft. in diameter, and is surrounded by a deep entrenchment. The famous Maeshowe (q.v.) is also in this pa.

The derivation of the name (formerly "Stibenhede," "Stebenhythe," and "Stebunhethe") is uncertain; but the last syllable is the Anglo-Saxon hyth (harbour). The population consists to a large extent of sailors and persons connected with maritime trade. The church of St. Dunstan, rebuilt by Wren after the Great Fire, is in Perp. style, with a low broad tower, above which rise a turret and dome; it contains carved woodwork by Grinling Gibbons and a memorial of the celebrated admiral Sir John Leake (d. 1720). Among those who have held the living were Richard Fox (d. 1528), Bishop of Winchester; John Colet (d. 1519), Dean of St. Paul's; and the celebrated Nonconformist Matthew Mead (d. 1699), who was ejected at the Restoration. There are several other eccl. pas. with modern churches. S. contains a Jewish synagogue and burial-ground. Among the many charitable institutions are the German and Portuguese Jews' Hospitals, Deacon's City Paupers' House, Trinity Almshouses, and the central buildings of Dr. Barnardo's Homes for Destitute Children (founded in 1866). The antiquary John Strype (d. 1737), the Shakespearian critic George Steevens (d. 1800), and Dr. Richard Mead (d. 1754), son of Matthew Mead, were natives.

Stetchworth, pa. and vil., E. Cambs., 3½ S. of Newmarket; ac. 2,813; soil various, overlying chalk. The church of St. Peter is debased Perp.; the chancel retains a piscina. In the church is a marble monument with effigies on a background of black marble, erected by Sir Richard Gorges, Bart., second Baron Gorges of Dundalk, and Bridget (Kingsmill) his wife, to their son Henry (d. 1674). Here is an iron Congregational chapel. Lord Gorges' charity of £33 yearly is for two old men and two old women, each of whom receives 2s. weekly and a biennial gift, the men of a coat and the women a gown, and they live in almshouses rent free. There is also an allotment charity of 25s. yearly, distributed in money to the poor. S. House, in a fine, well-wooded park, with ornamental water in the foreground, and approached by an avenue of trees, is a seat.

Steuartstown. [STEWARTSTOWN.]

Stevenage, pa. and small to. on the Great North Road, N. Herts., 4 S.E. of Hitchin; ac. 4,543. The town consists chiefly of the High Street, about ¾ mile long, running north and south. The church of St. Nicholas, situated on rising ground about 1 N.E. of the town, is approached through a pleasant avenue of trees, alternately lime and chestnut, planted in the 18th cent.; it is an ancient Gothic building of flint. The church of the Holy Trinity, at the south end of the town (1861), is modern Gothic. There are also Wesleyan and Baptist chapels. The grammar school was founded in 1558, and the endowments have since been increased. A pleasure fair is held on Sept. 22 and 23. Straw-plaiting is carried on in a small way in the town and surrounding villages. The Public Hall, in Orchard Road, was built in 1872. There are charities amounting to £19 19s. for distribution in bread and clothing; and also almshouses founded in 1501 by Stephen Hellard, rector of this parish. Six widows are now resident. By the side of the London road, ½ S. of the town, are six hills or barrows, supposed to be of Danish origin. Woodfield is a seat.

Stevenston, pa. and to., N.W. Ayrs., Sc.; the pa. is situated on the Firth of Clyde, and includes the greater part of the town of Saltcoats, from which the town of S. is 1 E.; ac. 3,771; soil in some of the lowlands tolerably fertile and of loamy quality, but in the upper parts stiff clay, and near the Firth are many sandhills. The pa. abounds with valuable seams of coal. The Established church is a large modern building; the old church belonged to the Abbey of Kilwinning. There are also Free and United Presbyterian churches. Here are extensive ironworks, works for the manufacture of Steventon (1), pa. and vil., N. Berks., 4 S.S.W. of Abingdon; ac. 2,401; soil loam, overlying clay. The church of St. Michael and All Angels is chiefly E. Eng., with Dec. and Perp. windows; the font also is Perp.; in the chancel are sedilia and a finely-ornamented piscina. In the churchyard is a cross, restored in 1836. There is a Wesleyan Methodist chapel. The charities amount to about £90 yearly, and part is applied to educational purposes. There was anciently a Benedictine priory here, founded by Henry I.; and an old causeway runs through the parish.

Steventon (2), pa. and vil., W. Hants, 7 S.W. of Basingstoke; ac. 2,100; soil clay, overlying chalk. The church of St. Nicholas is Gothic. S. Manor, in a well-timbered park, is a seat.

Stevington, or Steventon, pa. and vil. on the Ouse, N.W. Beds., 5 N.W. of Bedford; ac. 1,800; soil clay, overlying limestone and marl. The church of St. Mary (restored 1871–72) is Dec. and Perp.; in the pavement of the nave is a brass with effigy of a knight in armour; in the church are two small figures representing the drinking of ale customary in this church at one period. The chancel retains a piscina and squint, and inside the porch is a stoup; on the north side of the church is a low side window. A few yards eastward of the church is a spring of water called "the Holy Well," never known to have been frozen or dry. Here is a Baptist meeting-house, established during the time of John Bunyan, and also a Primitive Methodist chapel. In the centre of the vil. is an ancient cross with a modern capital. There are almshouses (built 1654, and rebuilt 1839) for five poor persons, who receive 2s. each per week. Of the castle, erected here in the time of King John, there are now no traces; but various ruins exist in the vicinity of this vil. Pillow-lace is largely made here, and rush-plaiting is also carried on. A little south of the church was the large and ancient manor-house, which once served as a hospitium for the invalids and pilgrims frequenting the Holy Well, and subsequently was used as a farmhouse; on its site a capacious farmhouse has been erected.

Stewartfield, vil., pa. of and 2 S. from Old Deer (q.v.), E. Abers., Sc. It has a Free church, a United Presbyterian church, and a Congregational chapel.

Stewarton (1), pa. and vil. on the Annick, in the dis. of Cunninghame, N. Ayrs., Sc.; ac. 13,626. The pa., about 10 miles in length and from 3 to 4 in breadth, is a rich agricultural district, and has long been famous for its dairy produce. The vil. lies about 15 S. by W. of Glasgow. There are Established and Free churches, one each for United Presbyterians and Independents, and a Methodist chapel. The Cunninghame Institution has an extensive library and reading-room. A hospital was erected and presented to the burgh in 1895. The chief industries are carding and spinning for the carpet and bonnet trades, the manufacture of Scotch bonnets, military forage-caps, and hosiery, spindles and flyers, and bee-boxes for apiaries. Fairs are held on the Wednesday before the last Thursday in October, for cattle (this being the largest fair for Ayrshire dairy stock in Scotland); summer fair Monday before first Tuesday in May (for cattle), and horse fair on the Wednesday before Skeir Thursday, and first Wednesday in May.

Stewarton (2), vil., pa. of Kirkcolm (q.v.), N.W. Wigs., Sc., 6 N.N.W. of Stranraer.

Stewartstown, or Steuartstown, a flourishing little mkt. to. (W.) and head of petty sess. div., pa. of Donaghenry, S.E. co. Tyr., Ir., 6 N.N.E. of Dungannon. The place derived its original name (Steuartstown) from Sir Andrew Steuart, to whom James I. granted the surrounding district; in the year 1608, or soon afterwards, he erected a castle —or, rather, converted other buildings into one—of which there are some remains, but they have long been in a neglected state, and retain scarcely any traces of their original character. The to. consists of a spacious square and three principal streets. The market-house stands in the centre of the to., which at one time carried on an extensive trade in the manufacture of linen and union cloth, and likewise in lime, quarried in the neighbourhood; it now derives a good inland business for the supply of the neighbourhood, and additional advantages, from its position as a place of thoroughfare. The Protestant church of Donaghenry was destroyed by fire in 1877, and has been rebuilt. There is a Catholic church, and places of worship for Presbyterians and Methodists. Fairs are held on the first Wednesday after the 12th of each month. There is some fine scenery in this district, which is studded with seats. About 2 miles from the to., in an extensive and improved demesne, with a fine park, is Stuart Hall, the seat of the Earl of Castlestuart, who derives his titles of Baron and Earl from this place. Other seats are Drumcairne, Mullantean, Prospect House, and S. House.

Stewkley, pa. and vil., N.W. Bucks., 1½ S.E. of Buckingham; ac. 4,330; soil clay and gravel, overlying clay. The church of St. Michael and All Angels (restored 1862) is a fine specimen of Norm. work, of which period the west front is an interesting example; in the chancel is a piscina; the priest's door in the chancel is E. Eng. The church of Holy Trinity was built in 1866. The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have chapels. There are several small charities.

Stewton, small pa., E. Lincs., 2½ S.E. of Louth; ac. 1,002; soil loam and clay, overlying clay. The church of St. Andrew is E. Norm.; the chancel arch is a very early example, and, previous to alterations about 1851, some of the original windows remained; the arches of the south door and the blocked-up north door are also of very early date.

Here is a Free Methodist chapel. Bricks, tiles, and sanitary and drain pipes are made here.

Steyning, pa., U. and mkt. to., and head of petty sess. div., Mid Sussex, about 5 N.W. of Shoreham; ac. 3,419; soil chalky marl, overlying green sand. The place is named in the will of King Alfred as "Stenningham," and there was a mint here in the reign of Harold. S. was formerly a borough by prescription, and formed part of the borough of New Shoreham until 1885. The church of St. Andrew (restored 1889–91) is a large and curious but incomplete structure of flint and stone, of the Norm. and E. Eng. periods, with a western tower of Perp. date. A large and lofty arch, beautifully carved with the zigzag pattern, divides the chancel from the nave; and the arches of the arcades are likewise richly ornamented with the dog-tooth and zigzag work, the design varying on every arch. The tower arch is a work of the Trans. period. In the south wall of the chancel is a brass with arms to Elizabeth, wife of Jonas Michael Clearke (d. 1613). The vicarage house stands on the site of the ancient Benedictine priory of SS. Cuthman and Mary Magdalen, once belonging to the abbey of Fécamp, in Normandy, and is a good specimen of a parochial manse. It has some carved wainscoting, bearing the arms of Richard de la Wich (St. Richard) of Chichester (1245–53); FitzJames, Bishop of London (1506–22); and the arms and cognizances of Henry VIII. and Queen Catherine. The Wesleyan chapel dates from 1877. The Public Hall, in the High Street, was built in 1886; a portion is used by a proprietary club, and contains a library and billiard and reading rooms. Here are two breweries and an extensive parchment manufactory. The market is held every alternate Monday for cattle and corn, a fat stock sale on alternate Wednesdays, and a considerable cattle fair on October 11. The charities amount to about £60 a year, of which £10 is distributed to the poor and the rest applied to the maintenance of the church.

Steynton, pa. and vil., S.W. Pembs., 1½ N.E. of Milford; ac. 6,801. The church of St. Peter, mostly rebuilt 1883, is in Gothic style; the ancient tower remains. The building was occupied by a garrison during the Civil War of the 17th cent. A tombstone dating probably from the later period of the Roman occupation has been discovered in the churchyard. The pa. contains a Congregational chapel. St. Botolphs and Scovestou Hall are seats.

Stibbard, pa. and vil., N.W. Norf., about 4 S.E. of Fakenham; ac. 1,607; soil chiefly heavy, overlying brick-earth and clay. The church of All Saints (restored 1861) is Dec. Here is a Wesleyan chapel. The sum of £46 yearly is applied to the relief of the poor, and a charity of £1 6s. 8d. is yearly distributed in coals. Sennowe Hall is a seat standing in a large and picturesque park, through which the Wensum flows.

Stibbington, pa. and vil. on the Nen, N. Hunts., 9 W. of Peterborough; ac. 1,447; soil rich loam, overlying gravel and clay. The church of St. John the Baptist (renovated 1848) is Norm. and E. Eng.; the west door has a very fine arch with enriched Norm. work. The rectory is an Elizabethan mansion. The old stocks are still in good preservation on the main road. S. Hall, erected 1625, is a seat.

Sticker, ha., pa. of and 1½ S.W. from St. Mewan (q.v.), Mid Cornw.

Stickford, pa. and vil., E. Lincs., 6 S.W. of Spilsby, on the road to Boston; ac. 2,190; soil loamy, with a little sand, overlying loam and clay. The church of St. Helen (restored 1863–64) is E. Eng. There are Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist chapels, and charities amounting to £15 yearly for the benefit of the poor.

Stickillin, pa. on the Dee, Ardee bar., S. co. Louth, Ir., 2 E. of Ardee; ac. 1,356.

Stickle Gill. [MILL BECK (4).]

Sticklepath (1), chap. and vil., pa. of Sampford Courtenay (q.v.), W. Dev., 4 N.E. of Okehampton. The chapel-of-ease was rebuilt in 1875, in E. Eng. style. The gable of the Wesleyan chapel bears an ancient stone cross.

Sticklepath (2), ha., pa. of Combe St. Nicholas (q.v.), W. Somerset, 3 N.W. of Chard.

Stickle Tarn, mountain lake under Langdale Pikes, W. Westmd. It lies about 1,500 ft. above the sea, and is dammed at its foot.

Sticklinch, ha., pa. of West Pennard (q.v.), E. Somerset, 4 S.W. of Shepton Mallet.

Stickney, pa. and vil. on the borders of the East and West Fens, E. Lincs., 8½ N. of Boston; ac. 2,015; soil rich loam and sand, overlying clay and loam. The church of St. Luke (restored 1853–55) is E. Eng. There are Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist chapels. Four poor women receive 4s. a week each.

Sticks Pass, mountain pass (2,450 ft.) over the lower slopes of Helvellyn, S.E. Cumb. and N.W. Westmd.; it extends from Thirlmere to Ullswater, and crosses the border of the two counties not far from its highest point.

Stidd, formerly a pa., now amalgamated with Ribchester (q.v.), N.E. Lancs. Here are the remains of a Norm. chapel belonging to a Preceptory of the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem. The Catholic chapel is dedicated to SS. Peter and Paul. There are almshouses for five aged poor.

Stiffkey (1), pa. and vil., N. Norf., near the North Sea, about 3½ E. of Wells; ac. 2,227 and 1,685 water; soil light, subsoil chalky. The church of St. John the Baptist (restored 1879) is Dec. and Perp.; the chancel (1848) contains a piscina, and there is a brass to Margaret Bramche (d. 1479). The church of St. Mary, the ruins of which stood in the churchyard until 1883, has altogether disappeared. On Warborough Hill are remains of entrenchments; and at Camping Hill, a mile to the east, is a green knoll, supposed to have been also entrenched. S. Hall was formerly a large castellated mansion, with massive circular towers at the angles, erected by Sir Nicholas Bacon, Keeper of the Privy Seal to Queen Elizabeth; and considerable remains still exist.

Stiffkey (2), river, N. Norf., rises about 2 N. of Fakenham and flows in a N. direction for about 10 miles, past Walsingham and Stiffkey pa., to the North Sea, which it enters near Morston.

Stifford, pa. and vil., S.E. Essex, 10 S.E. of Romford; ac. 1,547; soil loamy, overlying gravel and chalk. The church of St. Mary (restored 1862) is E. Eng.; the rood-screen has been lost, but the beam is now incorporated in the reredos, above which is a good Dec. window; the chantry chapel retains a small piscina; the font is E. Eng. In the sacrarium is a flat stone with an inscription in Lombardic letters to David Tillebery (d. 1330); there are several brasses, the oldest of which probably dates back to 1370–75; the pulpit, retaining an hourglass frame, is dated 1611. During the restoration frescoes were disclosed in the chantry and nave.

Stillingfleet, pa. and vil. on the Ouse, E.R. Yorks., 7 S. of York; ac. 4,377; soil loam, overlying clay. The church of St. Helen (restored 1877) is partly Norm.

Stillingfleet-with-Moreby, tp., pa. of Stillingfleet (q.v.), E.R. Yorks.; ac. 2,586. M. Hall, a seat, is a Tudor building.

Stillington (1), pa. and vil. on the Foss, N.R. Yorks., 10 N. of York; ac. 4,658; soil and subsoil sandy and clayey. The church of St. Nicholas is Norm. There are Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist chapels. S. Hall is a seat.

Stillington (2), eccl. pa. and tp., pas. of Redmarshall, Grindon and Sedgefield (q.v.), S.E. Dur., 5 S. of Sedgefield; ac. 760. The church of St. John is modern.

Stillorgan, pa. and vil. with railway station, Rathdown bar., S.E. co. Dub., Ir., 5 S.E. of Dublin, on the road to Bray; ac. 693. The church is a neat but small edifice of stone. There is also a Catholic church, a monastery, parochial and national schools, a dispensary, and a convalescent home. Here are reservoirs for the Vartry water-supply to Dublin. In the vicinity are numerous villas, chiefly the residences of the higher class of merchants and others from the city.

Stilton, pa. and vil., N. Hunts., 4 N.W. of Holme; ac. 1,612; soil chiefly clay land, overlying gravel. The church of St. Mary (restored 1887–88) is E. Eng. and Perp.; at the entrance to the chancel are brasses with effigies to Richard Curthoyse (d. 1573), Anne his wife (d. 1606), and Thomas and John Curthoyse, their sons, dated 1590 and 1618. There are Wesleyan and United Methodist chapels, and Gospel and Temperance halls. The "Bell" inn is an old post-house, bearing the date 1642. There are six almshouses and various small charities. The Fens are immediately contiguous on the east, and an extent of 3 miles is called "Stilton Fen." S. is celebrated as giving its name to the well-known English cheese.

Stinchar, river, S. Ayrs., Sc., rises in pa. of Barr (q.v.), near Loch Skelloch, and flows for nearly 30 miles in a S.W. direction to the Irish Sea, which it joins close to Ballantrae. It is a good salmon and trout river.

Stinchcombe, pa. and vil., S.W. Glouc., 2 W.S.W. of Dursley; ac. 1,290; soil loam, overlying clay and lime. The church of St. Cyr (partly rebuilt 1855) is Dec. There is a small charity. The Manor House, Peer's Court, and Stancombe are seats.

Stinsford, pa. on the Frome, S. Dorset, about 1 E. of Dorchester; ac. 1,999; soil black loam, overlying chalk and gravel. The church of St. Michael (restored 1883) is partly Norm. The charities amount to about £20 a year. Kingston House, in Corinthian style, and S. House are seats.

Stiperstones, ridge of hills (ranging from 1,500 to 1,650 ft.), S.W. Salop, forms the abrupt termination of a line of mountains extending south-west into Radnors. Lead is procured in considerable quantities from several places at the base of these hills, and the Romans are known to have worked many of these mines.

Stirchley, pa. and vil., E. Salop, 3 W. of Shifnal; ac. 833; soil loam, overlying clay, ironstone, and coal. The church of St. James (enlarged 1858) is Norm., with a fine Norm. chancel arch. The charities are small. There are collieries, and forge and rolling mills.

Stirling, pa. (extending into Clacks.), parl. and royal burgh, co. and mkt. to. (F.) on the Forth, E. Stirls., Sc.; ac. of pa. 1,378. S. is one of the Stirling district of parl. burghs (the others being Culross, Dunfermline, Inverkeithing, and Queensferry), returning one member. S.—the Beeches of the Romans—is a very ancient town; its first charter was granted by Alexander I. in 1119. The limits of the burgh have been enlarged, and now include St. Ninians and other small villages and hamlets. There are four Established, one Episcopal, four Free, and three United Presbyterian churches, and chapels for Wesleyans, Baptists, Congregationalists, and Roman Catholics. The East and West congregations of the Establishment worship in the old pa. church, known as the Grey Friars Church, built (1494) by James IV.; the chancel was added a little later by Cardinal Beaton, who was murdered at St. Andrews (1545), though some accounts attribute it to the archbishop of the same name, uncle of the cardinal. The North Church, in Norm. style, is in Murray Place, where also is the Free North Church, with a fine spire. Holy Trinity Church, in Albert Place, is another handsome edifice. A monument in Grecian style has been erected, in front of the United Presbyterian church, to the founder of that body (1740). The Municipal Buildings are in King Street; the front is circular in form, and the small portico at the entrance is surmounted by a statue with the inscription, "Loyalty," "Liberty," "Wallace." The Corn Exchange, near the head of King Street, a large structure, is used as a grain market. In 1882 The Arcade, a glass-roofed thoroughfare between Murray Place and King Street, was built; it contains a number of shops and two halls, the larger licensed for stage plays, and the Lesser Arcade Hall for small meetings. In 1883 a new Public Hall was erected in Albert Place; it contains a large hall fitted for dramatic performances, for which there is a licence, and a smaller hall. The old Town House, in Broad Street, has a tower with a clock and a set of musical chimes. Behind it, in St. John Street, is a military prison. The County Court House is in Viewfield Place, opposite to which is a fountain of granite erected in honour of Queen Victoria's Jubilee. The Smith Institute, in Dumbarton Road (1873), is a stone building with portico front, and was founded and endowed by the late Thomas S. Smith, Esq., of Glassingall; the building contains a reading-room, library, museum, and picture gallery, all of which are open to the public free, the Provost and others being appointed trustees. The S. Tract Depôt, in Dumbarton Road, is a very fine building. S. has long been celebrated for its schools and hospitals; some of the latter are foundations of long standing, and are well endowed. Cowan's Hospital, for decayed Guild Brethren, was founded by John Cowan in 1639. The old bridge, erected in the 9th cent., is an unusual specimen of bridge work, still showing the four original arches; it rises, as nearly all old bridges did, to a point in the centre, and its ends still retain the towers in which its gates worked. There is another bridge over the river, known as the New Bridge (1831); and the railway viaduct crosses near them. Kildean Bridge was an old wooden bridge further down the stream, and of this there are scarcely any vestiges. The chief manufactures of S. are carpets, tartans, tweeds, winceys, and shawls, for which it has been long noted; and these branches engage a considerable number of weavers. The other industries are tanning, iron-founding, and agricultural-implement making; there are also carriage-building establishments, perambulator and iron bedstead manufactories, and a wool factory. Fairs are held on the first Friday in February (for horses); the last Friday in May (for cattle and horses); the first Friday in March, April, and May (for cattle); the third Friday in October and the last Friday in May (for hiring servants). Some shipping trade is carried on, and during the summer river steamers from Leith afford communication with Edinburgh. S. Castle, which stands at the end of a steep ridge of rock, is one of the fortresses appointed by the "Act of Union" to be kept in a state of repair; it is entered from the town across an esplanade and over a drawbridge, by which the inner courtyard is reached, around which are the royal buildings, consisting of the palace built by James V., a building of stone ornamented with grotesque carving; the Parliament House, erected by James III.; and the chapel, built by James VI. In the castle is the "Douglas room," in which James II. (who was born in this building) stabbed the eighth Earl of Douglas. The other royal personages connected with this fortress were Alexander I. of Scotland, who died here in 1124; James VI., who was crowned here at the age of thirteen months; and Charles II., crowned at Scone in 1651, who occupied S. on his way to Worcester. The Regent Lennox was killed during an attack made on the town by Mary's adherents in 1571. James VI.'s eldest son, Prince Henry, was baptised in the castle chapel. There is a walk round the castle rock entered from the town. Between the castle and the church are The Valley (where tournaments took place) and The Gardens, in which is a curious mound known as the King's Knot; here also is the King's Park and the New Cemetery. Argyll's Lodging, on the east side of the Castle Wynd, is a fine house, erected in 1632 by the Earl of Stirling; in it King Charles II. lodged in 1651. Mar's Work, in Broad Street, has some fine windows and much old Gothic work taken from Cambuskenneth Abbey. The first of these houses is used as a military hospital; the second is in ruins. The castle stood many sieges, and was the centre of not a few battles. The town in 1147 was given to the English to secure the terms of the Treaty of Falaise, and restored to the Scotch by Richard I.; but in 1297 the English, in an attempt to regain it, were defeated by Wallace at S. Bridge, and their army (under the Earl of Surrey) was cut to pieces. In 1304 Edward I. after a severe siege took the castle and town. In 1314 Robert Bruce besieged it, and, a relieving army under Edward II. having been destroyed at Bannockburn, the fortress surrendered; but Edward III. having extorted from Baliol in 1333 a surrender of the principal fortresses of Scotland, in 1339 the Scotch again took it, and then for two centuries it remained in their possession undisturbed, until Queen Mary's adherents made an attempt on it in 1571, and the Earl of Ruthven and his brother took it in 1583. The Covenanters held it in 1639, and the Duke of Argyll occupied it in 1715 for the Hanoverian Government. In 1745 Prince Charles Edward unsuccessfully attempted its capture; this ended its vicissitudes, and it is now a military depôt. On the esplanade of the castle stands a statue of King Robert Bruce, occupying a commanding position in front of the castle, and overlooking the battlefields of Stirling and Bannockburn.

Stirling Bridge. [CHAPEL AND STIRLING BRIDGE.]

Stirling District. [STIRLING.]

Stirlingshire, a midland co. of Scotland, marking the commencement of the Highlands; it is bounded on the west and south-west by Dumbarts., on the south by Lanarks. and Linliths., on the north by Perths., and on the east by Clacks. and Linliths. From its position at the head of the Firth of Forth it is to some extent a seaboard co. The figure of the co. is extremely irregular; its length from east to west is 36 miles, but, following the curvature of its form from its east to its north point, it will measure upwards of 45 miles; its breadth varies from 12 to 20 miles, except where it turns towards the north, and here the distance across is very trifling. The shire comprises an area of 447 square miles, or 286,338 ac. Originally part of the Pictish possessions, S. appears to have passed under the rule of the Romans about A.D. 80, and they have left traces of their long occupation in camps, etc., while the Wall of Antoninus runs across the south portion of the co. Abandoned by the Romans in 410, it again fell under the Pictish rule until these were expelled by the Saxons and Scots. About 1060 it became more settled under Malcolm (Canmore), though even then it was subject to Norman raids; while two centuries later Edward I. extended his forays thus far, capturing the castle of Stirling in 1296. The victory of Stirling Bridge in 1297, and that of Bannockburn in 1314, checked the English for a time. [STIRLING.] In the 12th cent. David I. erected several religious houses, particularly that at Cambuskenneth, and these communities tended to civilise the rude manners of the inhabitants. The part of the co. adjacent to Loch Lomond is mountainous; east from this the land becomes flat, or gently inclining towards the Forth or the Endrick. In the centre of the co. the ground is again elevated into a series of hills, many of which have their sides and even their summits clothed with a fine grass sward, which affords excellent pasturage for sheep. The eastern division of the co. consists of carse land, in many places quite flat, and in others presenting a succession of inclined planes, gradually rising towards the south from the rich valley of the Forth. Almost every variety of soil to be met with in Scotland occurs in S.; but the most common and the most fertile is the alluvial (or carse) land, which occupies many thousand acres on the banks of the Forth. In this species of soil there are beds of shells, clay, marl, and moss. In the western and central districts, on the banks of the rivers, the land is generally of a light and gravelly description, while patches of rich loam form the surface in other parts of the co. Large crops of oats, barley, beans, turnips, potatoes, etc., are raised, and the culture of artificial grasses has also been very generally adopted in this co. The extensive ranges of moor in the upland district are exclusively devoted to the feeding of sheep, which are of the old black-faced (or Highland) breed; there are comparatively few cattle reared, the co. being supplied from the Highlands. The co. has valuable mineral productions, the most abundant of which are coal, ironstone, limestone, and sandstone. The principal coal-pits are in the southern base of the Lennox Hills; but coal is also obtained in the eastern district, in the vicinity of the Forth and Clyde Canal, and in such quantities as not only to be sufficient for home consumption, but to admit of exportation. Ironstone, limestone, and sandstone are found in the same districts with the coal. Veins of silver were discovered and wrought about a century ago, but the working of them was soon discontinued; copper, lead, and cobalt have likewise been raised at different periods, but not to any considerable amount. The staple manufacture of this co. is iron goods, both cast and malleable, the chief seat of which is at Carron, near Falkirk. The making of nails for carpenters' work is also carried on in several pas. (especially in that of St. Ninians). At St. Ninians are likewise manufactured tartans; at Stirling, carpets, tartans, and shawls; and at Bannockburn tweeds are produced: while in other towns and localities are calico-printing works, large distilleries, tanneries, breweries, chemical and other establishments. The Forth is the principal river; the other streams are the Avon, the Endrick, and the Kelvin. Loch Lomond (q.v.) is the principal lake. Ben Lomond lies to the east, about halfway up the loch, and the western side is skirted by large mountains for most of its length. The Forth and Clyde Canal and the Union Canal pass through the co. There are also numerous springs; but the most noted are the Airthrey Wells at Bridge of Allan, the waters of which contain saline and other properties. The North British and Caledonian railways, with their branches, pass through the co.

Stithians, pa. and vil., S.W. Cornw., 4 S.S.E. of Redruth; ac. 4,291; soil poor loam, overlying granite. The church of St. Stythians (restored 1873) is Dec. and Perp.; the rood-stairs remain in the north wall, and over the entrance thereto is a brass plate with admonitory verses to pastors and people (but without date). There are Wesleyan and Free Methodist chapels. A fair for horses and cattle is held on the Monday nearest to July 13.

Stittenham, tp., pa. of Sheriff Hutton (q.v.), N.R. Yorks., 7 S.W. of Malton; ac. 1,340. The poet John Gower (d. 1402), the friend of Chaucer, is said to have been born here (1320).

Stivichall, pa. and vil., N.E. Warws., 9 N.E. of Leamington; ac. 860; soil sandy loam, overlying red sandstone and marl. The old church of St. James (originally a member of St. Michael in Coventry, and appropriated to the monks of that priory in 1260) was pulled down in 1810. A new church erected in its place was opened in 1817; it retains the Norm. font from the old building. S. Hall is a seat.

Stixwould, pa. and vil. on the Witham, Mid Lincs., 8 S.W. of Horncastle; ac. 2,250; soil sandy loam, overlying sand and clay. The church of St. Peter (rebuilt 1831) is Gothic; there is an ancient oak screen and font. In the churchyard is an old cross. Part of the foundation mounds of an ancient convent remain. A stone coffin complete, and one in fragments, were discovered in digging a drain on the Abbey Farm in 1850, and are now placed close to the tower of the church.

The greater part of the pa. is hilly and of a pastoral character; but adjacent to the Tweed and the Lyne the land is well cultivated, and some of it finely planted, the latter character of improvement especially in the grounds surrounding the seat of S. Castle, a modern and beautiful edifice a short distance from the pa. church, within view of the Tweed.

Stoborough, liberty, pa. of Wareham Holy Trinity (q.v.), S.E. Dors., 1 S. of Wareham. There is a bridge over the Frome leading to Wareham.

Stobs, pl. on Slitrig Water, pa. of Cavers (q.v.), S.W. Roxbs., Sc., 3½ S. of Hawick. S. Castle is a picturesque mansion.

Stobswood, vil., pa. of Morpeth (q.v.), E. Northumb., about 2 N. of Ulgham.

Stock (1), pa. and vil., Mid Essex, 5 S.W. of Chelmsford; ac. 2,723; soil light, overlying white sand and gravel. The church of All Saints (repaired 1847–48) is Dec., and contains a brass to Richard Twedye (d. 1574), the founder of the almshouses, with his effigy in armour. The Congregationalists have a chapel. There are four almshouses (founded by Richard Twedye mentioned above) for four poor knights; two of this pa. and two of the pa. of Boreham. Lilystone Hall, formerly a seat, is now held in trust for the use of Catholics, and has a Catholic chapel attached. From this place "Stock bricks" derive their name.

Stock (2), ha., pa. of Churchill (q.v.), N. Somerset, 7 N.E. of Axbridge.

Stock (3), ha., pa. of Bracewell (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., 8½ S.W. of Skipton.

Stock and Bradley, tp., pa. of Fladbury (q.v.), E. Worcs., 6 E. of Droitwich; ac. 1,111.

Stockbridge (1), pa. and U. to. on the Test (here crossed by a bridge of three arches), W. Hants, 8½ N.W. of Winchester; ac. 1,118; soil peat, loam, and chalk, overlying chalk. The town consists principally of one wide street. The church of St. Peter (erected 1866), in the centre of the town, is in E. Eng. and Dec. styles. The chancel of the old church, which alone remains, situated at the east end of the town, is now used as a mortuary chapel, the churchyard still being used for burials. Here are Congregational, Primitive Methodist, and Baptist chapels. The river Test is celebrated for the excellence of its trout and eels; there are two fishing clubs, the Houghton and the Stockbridge. An important sheep and lamb fair is held here on July 10. S. is celebrated for its races, which are held on the downs in the immediate vicinity of the town, where horses are trained. Danebury and Worlbury Hills are ancient encampments near S.

Stockbridge (2), dis. to the north of the city of Edinburgh, Sc. It contains several flour-mills, and has in its borders the Edinburgh Academy, Fettes College, Craigleith Poorhouse, Tanfield Hall, etc.

Stockbury, pa. and vil., N. Kent, 6½ N.E. of Maidstone; ac. 2,951; soil stone and clay, overlying chalk and clay. The church of St. Mary Magdalen is E. Eng., with some Perp. work, and contains 17th-cent. brasses. The Bible Christians have a chapel. There are several small charities.

Stockcross, eccl. pa. and vil., pa. of and 1 N.W. from Speen (q.v.), S. Berks. The church of St. John, which stands on an eminence, was erected in 1839. There is a Wesleyan chapel.

Stock Dale, valley, W. Westmd., near Ambleside; it extends from Ambleside to the Kirkstone Pass, and is traversed by Stock Gill.

Stockerston, pa. bounded on the east by the Eye, S.E. Leics., 3 N.W. of Hallaton; ac. 1,534; soil principally clay, overlying clay. The church of St. Peter (restored 1887) is E. Eng., and contains two ancient recumbent effigies of stone; here are some ancient brasses, and at the west end of the south aisle is a tomb to Thomas Walker (d. 1784) and a stone in the floor to Sir Thomas Burton (d. 1659). S. Hall is a seat.

Stock Gaylard, or Stoke, formerly a separate pa., but now for civil purposes amalgamated with Lydlinch, N. Dors., 8 S.E. of Sherborne; ac. 849; soil mostly clay, overlying gravel. The church of St. Barnabas (rebuilt 1885) is Gothic; beneath a recessed Gothic arch, on the south side of the nave, is a monument of the founder, a stone effigy of a man (recumbent) completely armed, supposed to be Sir Ingelramus le Waleys, Knight (d. about 1275). Stock House is a seat.

Stock Gill, stream, W. Westmd., rises near the Kirkstone Pass, and flows in a S.W. direction to Ambleside, and thence into the Rothay, forming the cascade known as S. G. Force on its way.

Stock Gill Force, waterfall on the stream of Stock Gill, N.W. Westmd., about ½ E. of Ambleside. The water falls about 60 ft., and is separated by a large rock into two channels.

Stockham, tp., pa. of and 3 S.E. from Runcorn (q.v.), N.W. Chesh.; ac. 331. There is a small charity.

Stockingford, eccl. pa. and vil., pa. of and 2 W. from Nuneaton (q.v.), N. Warws. The church of St. Paul was built in 1824. The Wesleyans have a chapel. Here are several collieries and manufactories of blue bricks, tiles, and pipes.

Stocking Pelham. [PELHAM STOCKING.]

Stockland, pa. and large scattered vil. in a vale between the Otter and Yarty, E. Dev., 14 S. of Taunton; ac. 5,850; soil chiefly clay, overlying marl. The church of St. Michael (restored 1888) is E. Eng. There is a Wesleyan chapel. Charities amount to about £85 yearly. There are two grist mills. A stock fair is held annually on the first Wednesday after June 11. In the pa. are well-preserved remains of a Danish camp.

Stockland Bristol, pa., N. Somerset, 7 N.W. of Bridgwater; ac. 803; soil red clay, overlying stone. The church of St. Mary Magdalene (rebuilt 1865) is in E. Eng. style. The mission church of St. Andrew was built in 1882.

Stockleigh English, pa. and vil., Mid Dev., 5½ S. by E. of Crediton; ac. 1,123; soil loam and clay, overlying shale. The church of St. Mary the Virgin (restored) is E. Dec. S. Court is a seat.

Stockleigh Pomeroy, pa. and vil., Mid Dev., 8 N.N.W. of Exeter; ac. 1,239; soil clay and red marl, overlying marl, interspersed with veins of rock and beds of skillet. The church of St. Mary the Virgin is chiefly Perp. The earlier portions of the fabric were originally E. Eng., and a Norm. doorway with enriched mouldings is still extant; there is a Jacobean pulpit and the remains of a Perp. screen.

Stockley, tp., pa. of Brancepeth (q.v.), Mid Dur., 6½ S.W. of Durham; ac. 2,343.

Stocklinch, pa. (formed by the amalgamation of S. Magdalen with S. Ottersay), S. Somerset, 7 N.E. of Chard; ac. 500; soil clay, overlying lias stone. The church of St. Mary is E. Eng., and that of St. Mary Magdalen is Gothic. There are some small charities.

Stocklinch Magdalen, formerly a pa., S. Somerset, now amalgamated with S. Ottersay to form the pa. of Stocklinch (q.v.).

Stocklinch Ottersay, formerly a pa., S. Somerset, now amalgamated with S. Magdalen to form the pa. of Stocklinch (q.v.).

Stockport, parl., co., and mun. bor. (extending into Lancs.), and pa., tp., and mkt. and manufacturing to., N.E. Chesh., about 5½ S.E. of Manchester; ac. of pa. 28,786, of tp. 1,324. The to. is situated on the Mersey, here formed by the junction of the Goyt and Tame, and is most irregularly built, being in some parts precipitous, with an ascent from the north; and around this acclivity on the south bank of the river the houses rise in successive tiers from the base to the summit. These precipitous ascents and descents are partially avoided by a number of bridges which connect the different parts of the town. The magnificent viaduct of the London and North Western Railway, which literally passes over the town, comprises twenty-two arches, each of 63 ft. span, carrying four lines of rails, at a height of 108 ft. from the river. Tramways are laid from S. to Manchester. The church of St. Mary the Virgin (rebuilt, with the exception of the chancel, in 1817) was originally E. Eng.; the east window is a good example of Dec. work. The chancel (dating from the end of the 13th cent.) is singularly beautiful in design, and retains sedilia and a piscina. There are also several eccl. pas. with modern churches; and the Catholics and various bodies of Nonconformists have places of worship. The grammar school was founded in 1487; in 1830 the Goldsmiths' Company erected new school buildings with residences for the masters, and in 1880 further endowed the school with £290 a year. The technical school was opened in 1889. The courthouse, in Warren Street, was originally a warehouse; it is now used as a town hall, and comprises court-rooms, mayor's parlour, and the usual offices. The baths (1888), in Italian style, are under the control of the corporation; the Mechanics' Institute (1862) is also in Italian style. In St. Peter's Square is a bronze statue of Richard Cobden, M.P. for S. 1841–47. A market-house was erected in 1851, but is little used; the upper part of the building is occupied by the free library (opened 1875). The market day is on Friday, chiefly for agricultural produce; but more trade is done on Saturday. Monthly fairs are held, and there is a weekly cattle sale. The Reform Club was built in 1889, and has the lower part arranged for shops. S. has foundries, machine works, breweries, and flour mills; but the staple trade of the to. is the spinning and manufacture of cotton, and the making of hats. Among the charitable institutions are the Infirmary; the Institution for the Blind, the Deaf, and the Dumb; and the Infectious Diseases Hospital. Warren's almshouses accommodate four old men. The charities for distribution are considerable. Vernon Park (with a free museum), Edgeley Park, and Hollywood Park are public recreation grounds.

The Mersey at Stockport.

Stockport Etchells, tp. and small vil., pa. of and 4½ W.S.W. from Stockport (q.v.), N.E. Chesh.; ac. 1,610. There are Congregational and Primitive Methodist chapels. The Manchester Royal Lunatic Hospital, situated here, was built in 1848.

Stocksbridge, to., pas. of Ecclesfield and Penistone (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., 10 N.W. of Sheffield. The Fox Memorial Church was erected 1888–89, in Perp. style. The Roman Catholics, Congregationalists, Wesleyans, and Primitive Methodists have chapels. There is a Working Men's Institute. Coal abounds in the neighbourhood, and the coke-burners supply the Sheffield market. There are steel wire works also.

Stocksfield Hall, formerly a separate tp., but now for civil purposes amalgamated with Broomley, on the south bank of the Tyne, pa. of Bywell St. Andrew (q.v.), S. Northumb., about 2 S.W. of Ovingham.

Stockton (1), or Stockton-on-Tees, mun. and parl. bor., pa., tp., head of Co. Co. dis. and petty sess. div., and a river port, near the mouth of the Tees, S. Dur., 10 S.S.W. of Hartlepool; ac. of pa. 5,419, of tp. 334. The to., which is seated on a thick bed of diluvial clay, overlying a stratum of sandstone, and is of high antiquity, originally consisted of one long street, with several smaller ones branching off in various directions. Fine views are obtained from many points in the vicinity, embracing the Cleveland Hills and Roseberry Topping. Two fine bridges across the Tees connect S. with Thornaby-on-Tees (q.v.), formerly known as "South Stockton." The bor. of S. was closely connected with the castle, and may boast of equal antiquity; the first charter is supposed to have been granted by King John in 1201. The church of St. Thomas (restored 1893) is a spacious brick building of the time of Queen Anne; there are also several eccl. pas. with modern churches, a Catholic church (from the designs of A. W. Pugin), a Jewish synagogue, and places of worship for various Nonconformist bodies. The town hall, in the High Street, is a large rectangular structure, surmounted by a clock tower. In the same street are the Borough Hall (1852) and the Exchange Hall (1873–74), the property of a company. There are three theatres—the Royal, the Grand, and the Empire. The Free Public Library was opened in 1877. The Literary Institute comprises lecture, reading, and chess rooms, and has a good library. The Freemasons' Hall was erected in 1875. The Corporation Baths and Washhouses, opened in 1859, were reconstructed in 1892. Among the charitable institutions are the hospital, in a south-west suburb, a red-brick building in a modified Gothic style; the dispensary (founded in 1790); and the fever hospital, constructed on the pavilion system, and covering an area of 7 ac. There are almshouses (founded about 1682) for four persons; the original buildings were pulled down in 1816, when those now occupied were erected. There is a charity for apprenticing poor boys, and about £50 a year is distributed to the poor. S. has an association for providing trained nurses for the sick poor. The trade of the port extends to Holland and the ports of the Baltic, and coastwise to London, Hull, Leith, Sunderland, and Shields. The chief imports are timber, with deals, iron, hemp, flax, tallow, hides, and linseed. The exports are coal, coke, iron in its various forms, and agricultural produce. The manufactures of S. and its vicinity are various and extensive, and comprehend iron and brass founding, the making of steam engines, rope, sail-cloth, sails, and earthenware; there are also shipbuilding yards, potteries, breweries, corn mills, and some very extensive brick and tile yards. The market days are Wednesday and

STOCKTON, FROM THE RIVER.

Saturday. To the first, corn, hay, provisions, and various kinds of merchandise are brought for sale; to the latter, butchers' meat and vegetables. Cattle markets are also held weekly on the Wednesday. Statute fairs are held on the two Wednesdays next before May 13 and Nov. 23. Cattle fairs for farmers and dealers are held on the last Friday in April and on the Friday before Oct. 18. Horse races are held in the latter part of August. There are rowing and swimming clubs, and cricket and football clubs. Ropner Park, on the south side of the to., is named after its donor; it was opened in 1893 by the Duke and Duchess of York. Joseph Reed, a dramatic writer (1723–87), and Joseph Ritson, the antiquary (1752–1803), were natives. S. Castle, a fragment of which, consisting of a low but massive tower, remains at the end of the High Street, was erected at a very early date, and here (in 1214) King John visited Bishop Philip de Pictavia (Poictiers); it was rebuilt in the early 14th cent. by Bishop Kellew, and renovated in 1578 by Bishop Barnes; several other Bishops of Durham, from Farnham (1241–49) to Morton (1632–60), made this castle a refuge or retreat, but in 1644 it was captured by the Parliamentary forces, and in 1652 was completely dismantled. Near where the castle wall met the river a coin of Nero (A.D. 54–68) was found many years since on the construction of the quay.

Stogumber, pa. and small to., W. Somerset, 5 S.E. of Watchet; ac. 5,140; soil loam and clay, overlying marl and stone-brash. The church of St. Mary (restored 1875) is Perp.; in the chancel are the effigies of Sir George Sydenham (d. 1661–62) and his two wives, and a brass to Margery Windham (d. 1585); the rood-stairs remain, and in the churchyard is an ancient cross. Here is a Baptist chapel. The charities amount to £40 yearly, and there are almshouses for six poor widows. Brewing is carried on. Combe Sydenham is a seat.

Stogursey, pa. and vil. on the Bristol Channel, N.W. Somerset, about 8 E. of Watchet; ac. 5,853; soil clay, overlying stone. The church of St. Andrew (restored 1866) is partly Norm., with a fine tower; the body of the church was rebuilt temp. Henry VII.; the font is Norm.; the south transept is the burial-place of the Verney family, and contains tombs to Sir Ralph Verney (d. 1353) and John Verney. The Congregationalists and Baptists have chapels. There are almshouses, and the charities amount to about £343 yearly. Here was formerly a priory of Benedictines. There are remains of the castle.

Stoke (1), or Stoke Rochford, pa., S.W. Lincs., 6 S. of Grantham; ac. 5,086; soil loam, mixed with gravel, overlying clay. The church of SS. Andrew and Mary is chiefly Perp., with some Norm., E. Eng., and Dec. work; the south chancel chapel was built by Ralph Rochford and his wife in 1448, and the opposite one soon after by another member of that family; in the south wall of the former is a plain piscina, and below the easternmost arch of both chapel arcades is a panelled altar-tomb, the southernmost having an arched canopy; at the east end of the north chapel is a fine sepulchral memorial consisting of a large freestone slab, on which are cut in high relief effigies of a knight and lady of the early part of the 14th cent. In the chancel is a brass with effigies to Henry Rochforth, Esq. (d. 1470), and his wife Elizabeth (Scrope), with five sons and three daughters; another slab has a brass with effigies and inscription to Olyver Sentjohn (d. 1503) and to Elizabeth (Bygod) his wife; a third brass is inscribed to Sibella Seyntjohn, daughter of Oliver Seyntjohn (d. 1493). There are various monuments to the Cholmeley and Turnor families, the inscriptions and monuments to the Cholmeleys dating from 1631 to 1880. Of the Turnor monuments the best is one of black marble attached to the north wall of the north chancel chapel and inscribed to Sir Edmund Turnor (1707) and Elizabeth his wife (1679); there are monuments to this family to 1853. Here are almshouses, founded by Sir Edmund Turnor in 1677, for six poor people, each of whom receives 1s. weekly and coals. The charities are of £13 yearly value. S. R. Hall, a fine mansion in Elizabethan style, occupies the site of a former residence; and in front of it is an obelisk with the inscription on a panel—"In honour of Sir Isaac Newton." In the park there is also a splendid waterfall from a spring which rises here from the limestone rock; Roman remains have been at various times discovered here.

Stoke Bardolph, tp. and vil. on the Trent, pa. of Gedling (q.v.), S. Notts., 5 E. of Nottingham; ac. 1,054. The chapel (1844) was built on the site of a more ancient edifice. Here is the Nottingham corporation sewage farm. There is a ferry across the Trent to Shelford. In this tp. was formerly a castle of the Lords Bardolph, from whom the place takes its adjunctive name.

Stoke Bishop, eccl. pa. and vil., pa. of Westbury-on-Trym (q.v.), S.W. Glouc., 2 N.W. of Bristol. The church of St. Mary Magdalene is in E. Eng. style.

Stoke Bliss, pa. (extending into Worcs.), tp., and vil., N.E. Herefords., 7 N. of Bromyard; ac. of pa. 2,063, of tp. 1,163; soil mixed, overlying clay and marl. The church (dedication unknown), restored 1854, is E. Eng. A small Dame's School is maintained by endowment, and there is a charity amounting to about £26 annually.

Stoke Bruern, pa., tp., and vil., on the Grand Junction Canal, S. Northants, 4 N.E. of Towcester; ac. of pa. 2,633, of tp. 1,270; soil clay, overlying clay. The church of St. Mary (restored 1881) contains a screen and pulpit of carved oak; in the chancel is a brass with male effigy and inscription to Richard Lightfoot (d. 1625); there are piscinæ in both aisles. The charities amount to £35 yearly. Stoke Park, a seat, was burnt down in 1886, but rebuilt in 1890.

Stoke-by-Clare, pa. and vil., S. Suff., 2½ S.W. of Clare; ac. 2,428; soil chiefly light loam and clay, overlying chalk. The Stour flows on the south side of the pa., and separates it from Essex. The church of St. John the Baptist (restored 1871) is Perp.; the rood-stairs remain. There are several tablets to the Elwes family, whose vault is in the church, and a tombstone to John Elwes, the miser (1759). There are some brasses, and wall-paintings may be traced. There are several charities for distribution, and an almshouse for poor parishioners. Here was formerly a Benedictine priory, a cell to the abbey of Bec, in Normandy, which was converted into a college in 1415. At the Dissolution it was purchased by the Elwes family. Stoke College stands on the site of the priory, of which there are some remains. During the reign of Mary some of the leading Reformers were concealed in the college by Dr. Parker, the last Dean, and the second Archbishop of Canterbury after the Reformation.

Stoke-by-Nayland, pa. and vil. near the Stour, S. Suff., 6½ S.W. of Hadleigh; ac. 5,331; soil alluvial, subsoil gravel. The church of St. Mary is Perp., and contains many fine brasses. Stoke Charity, pa. and vil., N. Hants, about 7 N. of Winchester; ac. 1,839; soil loam, overlying chalk. The church of St. Michael is Norm.; the tower has a low shingled spire. The church contains some remarkable tombs.

Stoke Climsland, pa. and vil. on the Tamar and Inny, E. Cornw., 9 W. of Tavistock; ac. 8,732; soil loam, overlying clay and slate. The church (dedication unknown) is Dec.; the chancel retains a piscina; there are monuments to Ezekiel Helier (d. 1614), John Bagwell (d. 1623), and to the families of Clarke, Hawton, Knight, Kekewich, and Call. There are Wesleyan, Bible Christian, Plymouth Brethren, and Free Methodist chapels. A fair is held on May 29. Whiteford House is a seat.

Stoke D'Abernon, pa. and vil. on the east bank of the Mole, Mid Surrey, 7 W. of Epsom; ac. 2,038; soil marl, overlying chalk and gravel. The church of St. Mary (restored 1866) is Norm., and contains several brasses, one of which, the famous brass of Sir John d'Aubernoun (1277), in the chancel, is the earliest example of the kind; the figure of the knight is 6 ft. 4 in. in length and is vested in a hood and coat of ringed mail, with leggings of the same and a loose surcoat; he stands upon a couchant lion, and bears on his left arm a shield with the arms of d'Abernon, and under his right supports a tall spear with heraldic pennon, and a heavy sword depends from his girdle. The inscription formerly surrounding the slab is now lost. Near this is the large brass of his son, also Sir John D'Aubernoun (1327), in a mixed suit of chain and plate armour, covered by a tunic. There are other brasses to Sir William D'Aubernoun (1358); Elyn, daughter of Sir Edmund Bray (1516); Thomas Lyfelde, Esq., and Francis his wife (1592); Sir John Pymoke, priest (1521); and one of a woman, undated. In the Norbury chapel are two tombs with effigies, one of which commemorates Sarah, wife of Sir Francis Vincent (1608), and the other Sir Thomas Vincent (1613) and Jane his wife (1619). In a recess in the wall is the kneeling figure of Sir John Norbury, founder of the chantry chapel, executed at the cost of his descendant, Sir Francis Vincent, in 1633; the surcoat and helmet of Sir John Norbury are preserved in the chancel. The pulpit is ancient, very richly carved, and the old hourglass stand of iron is now fixed in the wall. The east window is emblazoned with the heraldry of the different families who have successively held this manor from the time of the Conquest to 1620. The charities amount to about £14 yearly for clothing. The Chase, The Manor House, and Woodlands Park are seats.

Stoke Damerel, pa. and suburb of Devonport, S.W. Dev.; ac. 1,815 land, 565 water. The church of St. Andrews is a Perp. building, to which large additions were made in 1750. There are two mission chapels—St. Barnabas' and St. Bartholomew's; and Primitive Methodist and Wesleyan chapels. The Royal British Female Orphan Asylum is here. There are several charities, including Hewett's, Chambers', and Williams'. The Royal Albert Bridge, built by Isambard K. Brunel, crosses the Tamar to Saltash.

Stoke Doyle, pa. on the Nen, N. Northants, 2 S.W. of Oundle; ac. 1,536; soil clay and limestone. The church of All Saints (1727) is in Classic style, and contains various monuments. The charities amount to about £7 yearly.

Stoke Dry, pa., S. Rutld., on the border of Leics., 2 S.W. of Uppingham; ac. 992; soil rich loam, overlying chiefly blue lias clay, part gravel. The church of St. Andrew is E. Eng., and has a very curious porch, and over it a parvise with mullioned window; in the church are numerous monuments. Sir Everard Digby (one of the Gunpowder Plot conspirators) was born here in 1581.

Stoke Earl [EARL STOKE.]

Stoke, East (1), pa. and vil. on the Frome, S.E. Dors., 3 W. by S. of Wareham; ac. 4,593; soil sand and gravel, subsoil mostly gravel. The church of St. Mary (erected 1828) is in Perp. style. An ancient hexagonal font which belonged to the old church has been preserved. Binnegar Hall is a large mansion in E. Jacobean style. Hethfelton, another seat, is situated in beautifully-wooded grounds, especially notable for some fine specimens of the cedar of Lebanon.

Stoke, East (2), pa. and vil. near the Trent, E. Notts., 4 S.W. of Newark; ac. 1,687; soil loam, overlying clay. The church of St. Oswald (partly restored 1874) is E. Eng. Here was fought the decisive battle between Henry VII. and Lambert Simnel in 1487. In 1646 S. was devastated by the plague. S. Hall, a seat, stands on the site of an old monastic institution.

Stoke, East (3), ha., pa. of Stoke-under-Hamdon (q.v.), S. Somerset, about 7 W. of Yeovil.

place of interment for his family) is a monument to Gregory Hascard, D.D., Dean of Windsor (1708); on the north-west side is a private entrance through the cloisters from Stoke Park. There are eight ancient stained windows, some bearing the arms of the former owners of the park; the chancel contains a rich sedile and piscina. The churchyard—the scene of Gray's celebrated "Elegy in a Country Churchyard"—has some fine yews and cypresses; a plain flat stone covers the remains of Gray and his mother and aunt, and bears an epitaph to these relatives written by himself; in the wall beneath the east window of the Hastings chapel, opposite to his grave, is a small stone indicating the place of his interment, and in Stoke Park, opposite the church, is a monument erected to his memory by Mr. Penn, and inscribed with lines from the "Elegy"; the poet died July 30, 1771. There are two chapels-of-ease in the pa. The hospital near Stoke Park (founded in 1557 by Sir Edward Hastings, endowed, and rebuilt in 1765) contains a chapel and apartments for three men and three women, each of whom receives 7s. per week from the funds of the charity; and there are other charities. Stoke Park was once the seat of Lord Chief Justice Coke, who entertained Queen Elizabeth here in 1601; the mansion, designed by Wyatt, is in Italian style and has a very fine interior; the park, of about 500 ac., is well wooded and stocked with deer, and ornamented with a handsome sheet of water. Ditton Park (a moated house), Sefton Court, Stoke Court, and Stoke Place are also seats. The manor of Stoke derives its name of Stoke Poges from its heiress Amica (or Amice de Stoke) having married Robert Pogis, a knight of the shire in the 12th cent.

Stoke Point, headland, S. Dev., about 6 S.E. of Plymouth. It is the west limit of Bigbury Bay, and commands a beautiful view.

Stoke Prior (1), pa. and vil. on the Birmingham and Worcester Canal, E. Worcs., 2 S. of Bromsgrove; ac. 3,622; soil clay and light loam, overlying clay, marl, and gravel. The church of St. Michael (restored 1895) is Norm., with later additions; it contains brasses to Robert Smith (1609) and his wives, and to Henry Smith (1606), who gave the proceeds of £100 for educational purposes, and 40s. for six sermons to be preached yearly. The school is licensed for worship. The Stoke farm reformatory for boys is in the pa. The salt works cover 30 ac., and attached thereto are extensive waggon works for building and repairing the vans and trucks employed in carrying salt and coal. There are nearly 200 cottages for the workmen—from 500 to 600 in number—and a dispensary provided by the company. There are flour mills and a stone quarry in the vil.

Stoke Prior (2), pa. and vil. by the Lugg, Mid Herefords., 11 N. of Hereford; ac. 2,333; soil mostly loam, with clay in some parts, overlying clay. The church of St. Luke, originally Norm., was rebuilt in 1863, in Dec. style. In the churchyard is a tombstone to the memory of Elizabeth Howls, buried there 1331, being the first who was interred in it. The incumbent has a claim in respect of this pa. and Docklow called Trug Wheat, which is charged on the Bury Farm, and amounts to about £1 1s. annually; its origin is unknown. There is a Wesleyan chapel. An extensive tract of land, called Blackwardine, is supposed to have been a British fortified town named Black Caer Dun. Many Roman coins, pieces of pottery, bones, and other relics have been found on the spot.

Stoke Rivers, pa. and vil., N. Dev., 6 E. by S. of Barnstaple; ac. 2,424; soil clay, overlying rubble. The church of St. Bartholomew is Perp. There is a small Baptist chapel.

Stoke Rochford. [STOKE (1).]

Stoke Row, eccl. pa., pa. of Ipsden (q.v.), S.E. Oxon., 6 N.W. of Henley. The church is dedicated to St. John the Evangelist. There is a Congregational chapel.

Stoke St. Gregory, pa. and vil. on the Tone and Parret, S. Somerset, 8 S. of Bridgwater; ac. 2,969; soil loam, overlying sand and red marl. The church of St. Gregory (restored 1888) is E. Eng. and Perp.; in the chancel is a piscina and another in the north transept; the pulpit and reading-desk are Jacobean. Here is a Baptist chapel.

Stoke St. Mary, pa. and vil., S. Somerset, 3 S.E. of Taunton; ac. 911; soil and subsoil clay. The church of St. Mary is E. Eng. Here is a Methodist chapel. S. House is a seat.

Stoke St. Michael. [STOKE LANE.]

Stoke St. Milborough, pa., tp., and vil., S. Salop, 6½ N.E. of Ludlow; ac. of pa. 5,840, of tp. 850; soil sand and clay, overlying stone and clay. The church of St. Milburgh is of various periods. There are Primitive Methodist and Wesleyan chapels. The charities are small. Milborough Lodge is a seat.

Stokesay, pa. and vil. on the Onny, S.W. Salop, 7 N.W. of Ludlow; ac. 3,661; soil clay, lime, and gravel, overlying blue clay. The church of St. John (destroyed during the Civil War, and rebuilt in 1654) is E. Eng. The charities are small. A cattle fair is held monthly. There is a Roman encampment—Norton's Camp—near which, during the building of a farmhouse, several skeletons were found, probably those of soldiers killed during an engagement between the Royal forces and the Parliamentarians in 1645. There are also the remains of a mill mentioned in Domesday Book. S. Castle, a seat, a fine example of a 13th-cent. fortified house, is a rectangular building with two towers; it is surrounded by a moat. The gatehouse is good Tudor work; the great hall is a noble room, dating probably from 1240, with E. Eng. windows, and there are several other interesting apartments. During the Civil War the castle was garrisoned for the King.

Stokes Bay, coast vil., with railway station, pa. of Alverstoke (q.v.), S. Hants, about 2½ S. of Gosport. There is a pier.

Stokesby-with-Herringby, pa. and vil. (Stokesby) on the Bure, E. Norf., 6 N.W. of Yarmouth; ac. 2,119; soil mixed, overlying gravel, sand, and brick-earth. The church of St. Andrew is E. Eng., and there are Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist chapels. The poor's land of 20 ac. of marsh is for feeding cows. Hillborough Hall is a seat.

Stokesley, pa. and tp., U. and mkt. to. (s.), and head of a Co. Co. dis., N.R. Yorks., 10 S.E. of Stockton-on-Tees; ac. of pa. 15,936, of tp. 1,818. The to. consists principally of one wide street of half a mile in length, running from east to west. The Leven, a fine trout stream, passes through a portion of the to. and is crossed by a stone bridge of two arches. There is also an ancient stone bridge of one arch for foot passengers, and an iron bridge. The church of St. Peter was rebuilt in 1771. Here are Congregational, Wesleyan, and Primitive Methodist chapels; also a Catholic chapel, dedicated to St. Joseph. The Preston Free Grammar School bears the name of its founder; the school-house (1832) is in Gothic style. The town hall is in the centre of the to.; it contains a spacious room for magistrates and county court, as well as an assembly room and parish library. Fairs for cattle are held on the Saturdays before Palm and Trinity Sundays; hirings for servants are held on the two Saturdays before Martinmas and May-day. To the south and east are the high range of aluminous hills, continued from the eastern moorlands, which abound with ironstone.

Stoke, South (1), pa. and vil., S.E. Oxon., 11 N.W. of Reading; ac. 3,370; soil chalk and gravel, overlying chalk. The church of St. Andrew (restored 1856) is Dec.; the chancel is separated from the nave by a fine pointed arch, and from the aisles by arcades of six pointed arches. In it is buried Griffin Hicks, D.D., chaplain at the Hague to Elizabeth, Queen of Bohemia, and Dean of Lichfield (d. 1659). There are a number of small charities.

Stoke, South (2), pa. and vil., N.E. Somerset, on the Wilts border, 2½ S. of Bath; ac. 864; soil stone-brash, overlying freestone. The church of St. James (restored 1845) is chiefly Dec. with good Norm. work in the north doorway. Here are a brewery and a malthouse. Midford Castle is a seat, and attached is a Catholic chapel.

Stoke, South (3), pa. on the Arun, S.W. Sussex, 2½ N.E. of Arundel; ac. 1,265; soil, upland, chalk; meadows rich loam, overlying chalk and flints. The church of St. Leonard is in E. Eng. style. A large portion of Arundel Park is in this pa.

Stoke, South (4), tp., pa. of Stoke (q.v.), S.W. Lincs., about 6 S. of Grantham; ac. 1,412.

Stoke Talmage, pa. and small vil., S.E. Oxon., 5 S.W. of Thame; ac. 843; soil mixed, overlying soft rag. The church of St. Mary Magdalen was erected in the early part of the 18th cent. in various styles. It contains some 16th-cent. brasses, one with effigy of a man in armour.

Stoke Trister, pa. and vil., S.E. Somerset, about 12 S.W. of Frome; ac. 1,600; soil stony brash, overlying clay and sand. The church of St. Andrew was built in 1841 in Perp. style. There are some small charities. Bayford Lodge is a seat.

Stoke-under-Hamdon, pa. and vil. on the Parret, S. Somerset, 6 W. of Yeovil; ac. 1,168; soil loam and stone-brash, overlying stone-brash and clay. The church of St. Andrew is of various periods, with a Norm. chancel arch; there are three fine piscinæ, two low side-windows, an effigy of a vested priest, and the tomb with effigy of John Strode (d. 1725); the carved oak pulpit is Jacobean. There are Congregational and Wesleyan chapels, and a Working Men's Institute. A stock fair is held on April 25. Glove-making is carried on. Hamdon Hill (q.v.) is partly in this pa.

Stoke-upon-Tern, pa. and vil., N.E. Salop, 5 S.S.W. of Market Drayton; ac. 5,683; soil and subsoil various. The church of St. Peter (rebuilt 1875) is E. Eng. and Perp.; in the Corbet chapel is a monument to Sir Reginald Corbet, justice of the King's Bench (d. 1566). There are Primitive Methodist and Congregational chapels. The charities are small. In the remains of the moat of Stoke Castle coins and other relics have been found.

Stoke-upon-Trent, mun. and parl. bor., U. and mkt. to. (S.), and head of Co. Co. dis., and large and populous pa. (which presents the very uncommon instance of a country pa. without a tp. of the same name) on the Trent, N.W. Staffs., 2 E. of Newcastle-under-Lyme; ac. 12,607 and 121 water. The church of St. Peter ad Vincula was rebuilt 1826–29 in E. Eng. style; it contains monuments to Josiah Wedgwood (d. 1795), with bust by Flaxman, and Sarah, his wife (d. 1815). There are also eccl. pas. with modern churches, a Catholic church, and places of worship for various Nonconformist bodies. The town hall consists of a centre and two wings, and includes a large hall, used as an assembly room and theatre; it contains a council chamber, with mayor's parlour and municipal offices, and the Keary Law Library. A portion of the building is set apart as an art gallery, and contains a loan collection from the National Art Gallery at South Kensington. The market hall (1853), in the centre of the to., is a building of red brick, in Late Tudor style, surrounding three sides of a square, and has on the south side a tower with clock. The quadrangle, covered with a glass roof, forms an outside market. The School of Science and Art, situated in Eldon Place, London Road, was erected in 1856 as a memorial to the late Herbert Minton. The Free Library and Museum, in the London Road, was opened in 1878, the Athenæum Committee making a free gift to the to. of their library of about 3,000 volumes, together with an extensive museum, rich in entomological and geological specimens; there is, besides, a loan collection from the South Kensington Museum. Facing the railway station is a bronze statue of the late Josiah Wedgwood, erected by subscription in 1863, and considered to be a faithful likeness of this distinguished potter. The to., which is regarded as the centre of the Potteries, contains some good modern houses, and various wharves and warehouses; and though the number of china and other manufactories is not great, it includes some of the most important, as well as the largest in the district. Most of the materials are brought from a distance: china, clay, and stone, or decomposed granite, from Cornwall, clay from Dorset, bones, borax, etc., the only necessary found in abundance on the spot being coal. The hovel, or oven, in which the wares are fired is a conspicuous feature in the various works. The North Staffordshire Infirmary was founded at Etruria in 1815, and removed to its present site in 1868. Near the infirmary is another detached building, used as a children's hospital. There is also an institution for nurses.

Stoke Wake, pa. and small vil., N. Dors., 5½ S.W. of Sturminster Newton; ac. 1,038; soil clay, greensand, gravel and loam, overlying chalk. The church of All Saints was rebuilt in 1872.

Stoke, West (1), pa., S.W. Sussex, 3 N.W. of Chichester; ac. 871; soil chalky, overlying chalk. The church (name unknown) is a very small E. Eng. building, and contains a monument to Adrian Stoughton (d. 1635), and other memorials to Isaac Le Gay (d. 1690) and Katharine, his relict (d. 1718). On the south acclivity of the Downs are two large mounds, supposed to have been erected over the bodies of the sea-kings whom the men of Chichester slew in the year 900. S. House is a seat.

Stoke, West (2), vil., pa. of Stoke-under-Hamdon (q.v.), S. Somerset, 1½ S. of Martock.

Stoke Works, ha., pa. of and adjoining Stoke Prior (q.v.), E. Worcs.

Stolford, ha. on Bridgwater Bay, pa. of Stogursey (q.v.), W. Somerset, 6½ N.W. of Bridgwater.

Stonar, pa., E. Kent, on the north side of the Stour, 1 N.E. of Sandwich, on the road to Ramsgate; ac. 680. S. was once a famous town, and is supposed to have been the Lapis Tituli of the Romans. There is no church.

Stondon, Lower, ha., pa. of Shillington (q.v.), S. Beds., about 5 N.W. of Hitchin. There is a Baptist chapel.

Stondon Massey, pa. and small vil., W. Essex, 6 N.W. of Brentwood; ac. 1,123; soil mixed, overlying clay. The church of St. Peter and St. Paul (restored 1850) is Norm., and contains brasses to Rainold Hollingworth (d. 1573) and John Sarre (d. 1570); there is an oak screen, and the pulpit and reading desk date from 1630. There are two charities. S. Park is a seat.

Stondon, Upper, pa. and vil., S.E. Beds., 6 N.W. of Hitchin; ac. 425; soil rich loam, overlying clay. The church of All Saints (re-erected 1857) is in the Norm. style; all the materials of the old church are incorporated in the new, and the former chancel screen converted into altar rails, pulpit and reading desks; it retains the old font. Bricks are made here.

Stone (1), extensive pa., mkt. and U. to., and head of petty sess. div. and Co. Co. dis., N.W. Staffs., 7 N. of Stafford; ac. 20,446 of fertile land and 139 water. The to. of S. is on the Trent, and close to the Trent and Mersey canal, which runs parallel with the High Street, through the entire length of the to. At the south end of the to., in a narrow lane, now called Abbey Street, are part of the foundation walls of the Abbey of SS. Wolfrad and Michael, founded on the site of a convent by Robert Stafford, temp. Henry I., and a cell of Kenilworth until 1260; in the old rectory house, near St. Michael's Church, is an arch and a portion of the old crypt, now used as a cellar. The Abbey church partly fell down in the year 1749; the remainder was razed, and the present church of St. Michael erected near its site; a tomb, with effigies of Sir Thomas Crompton, knight, and his lady, formerly within the chancel of the old church, and now in the churchyard near the rectory house, was left untouched. The church of St. Michael is in Gothic style; in the chancel is a picture of the patron saint, painted by Sir William Beechey, R.A., and presented by Admiral Earl St. Vincent (d. 1823), whose remains rest within the family mausoleum in the churchyard; his bust, by Sir Francis Chantrey, stands on a marble monument within the church; the chancel and organ chamber were erected (1887) by Lady Forester, in memory of her nephew, Viscount St. Vincent, captain 16th Lancers, who died from wounds received at Abu Klea in the Soudan, Jan. 17, 1885. The church of the eccl. pa. of Christ Church is a modern building; the Catholics have a church and a convent, and there are places of worship for various Nonconformist bodies. Alleyne's Grammar School was originally founded in 1558; a new scheme was framed in 1887, and in the following year the present buildings were erected. The town hall dates from 1860, there is a large room available for entertainments, and in the building the Mechanics' Institute is carried on. The market is held on Tuesday, in the Market Hall (erected in 1868). The cattle market and auction rooms, near the railway station, are private property. Shoe-making is the principal industry, and gives employment to a great many of the inhabitants of S. and its vicinity. Some amount of business is done in malting and tanning; there are corn mills and large breweries. The benefactions of S. amount to £26 17s. 2d. yearly, in addition to a yearly rent-charge of £100 out of the Stone Park Estate, and paid to ten poor widows of S. Stone Park, from which Earl Granville takes his title—Granville of Stone Park—is now an extensive farm.

Stone (2), pa. and vil., Mid Bucks., 7 N.E. of Thame; ac. 2,590; soil loam and sand, overlying clay and limestone. The E. Eng. church of St. John the Baptist, erected in the reign of Stephen (1135–54), was restored 1885–90, when the nave and aisle were new roofed. The church has considerable remains of Norm. work, especially in the nave arcades, and a very good doorway in the south porch. The font, brought from a garden at Lewisham in Kent (whither it is supposed to have been taken from the church of Hampstead Norris, Berks, about 1780), is circular and bears rude sculptures of a salamander and other figures. In the south porch are the remains of a stoup. There are 15th and 16th-cent. palimpsest brasses. The Wesleyans have a chapel. The Bucks County Lunatic Asylum (1852) is in this pa. In making excavations for the foundations of a chapel attached to it, various Roman remains were discovered. A bronze fibula of the Anglo-Saxon period has also been found in the vil., and a gold ring set with a red stone in its rude state. Skeletons and weapons have also been found, and these relics are now in the museum of the Bucks Archæological Society. Peverel Court is a seat.

Stone (3), or Stone near Dartford, pa. and vil. on the Thames, N. Kent, 2 N.E. of Dartford; ac. 3,013 land, 287 water; soil gravel, overlying gravel and chalk. The church of St. Mary is E. Eng. and Dec., with a Perp. vestry, containing a canopied tomb; there are brasses to John Lumbarde (d. 1408), Robert Chapman (d. 1574), Sir John Drew (c. 1530), and William Carew; the tombs of the Wiltshires are curious. The mission church of St. Michael was built in 1883. There is a Primitive Methodist chapel. The charities are small. The Stone Castle charity augments the livings of Church of England clergymen in the diocese of Rochester. The City of London Lunatic Asylum and the Kent Female Penitentiary are here. A square tower is the only remnant of Stone Castle. Fruit is largely grown in the neighbourhood. S. Park and S. Castle are seats.

Stone (4), pa. and vil., N. Worcs., 2 S.E. of Kidderminster, on the road to Bromsgrove; ac. 2,450; soil loamy, overlying sandstone. The church of St. Mary was built (1831) on the site of an older structure. The charities amount to about £300 a year.

Stone (5), or Stone near Tenterden, pa. and vil., S. Kent, 6 N.E. of Rye; ac. 3,071; soil and subsoil various. The church of St. Mary (restored 1874) is Dec., with a Perp. tower.

Stoneham, South, large pa. situated on either side of the Itchen, S. Hants, extending from 5 to 6 N. and E.N.E. from Southampton; ac. 8,687, and 268 of water and foreshore; soil sandy, overlying gravel and clay. The church of St. Mary is a small E. Eng. building. The charities amount to £20 yearly.

Stonehaven, seaport and the co. to. of Kincs., Sc., on the east coast of the co., 15 S. of Aberdeen. It is a favourite summer resort, being situated on a beautiful bay on the coast of the North Sea, at the mouth of the Carron stream, and flanked on both sides by lofty hills. The place is composed of an old and new to.; the former lies on the south bank of the Carron, adjacent to the harbour, in the pa. of Dunnottar; the other on a peninsula or angle formed by the Carron and the Cowie, in the pa. of Fetteresso, the two being connected by a bridge, forming a continuation of the road from the south to Aberdeen. The new to. is laid out on a regular plan, having broad streets with a square in the centre, in which stands a good market-house (1827). The town hall (1878), in Allardice Street, is a fine building, and contains news, billiard, and reading rooms. The Established churches of Dunnottar and Fetteresso are near the to.; there are also Free, United Presbyterian, and Episcopal churches, and a Roman Catholic chapel. The harbour is a natural basin, sheltered on the south-east by a high rock which projects into the sea, and having on the north-east a quay that affords every facility for loading or unloading vessels. The shipping of the port is chiefly employed in the coal and lime trade, and occasionally in exporting grain to Leith. During the season herring fishing is carried on. There is a distillery, and the manufacture of woollens is extensively carried on; besides which, S. has a tannery (where a large quantity of leather is produced), a brewery, and several net and rope and twine factories. The weekly cattle market is held on Thursday, and there is another for cattle and grain on that day from Martinmas to Candlemas. Fairs are held on the Thursday before May 28 for hiring servants, on the third Thursday in June, the second Thursday in August (old style), for cattle; Thursday before Nov. 28 for hiring servants; and the Thursday before Christmas Day (old style) for cattle.

Stonehenge, a large group of standing stones on Salisbury Plain, S. Wilts., 2 W. of Amesbury. This celebrated megalithic monument, or what remains of it, stands in the centre of a circular enclosure formed by a bank of earth with an exterior ditch. On the north-east of the enclosure was the straight avenue or approach. In the centre of the enclosure are the great stones. When complete there was an outer circle of thirty roughly-squared piers, connected at the top by a line of imposts, thus forming a ring of stone. Sixteen of the uprights and six imposts maintain their upright position. Within this circle was the most imposing portion of S.—an ellipse formed by five, or perhaps by seven, great trilithons, or triplets of stone, each having two uprights and an impost. Of these huge masses two remain perfect, and there are two single uprights, one of which leans considerably. The outer circle, as well as this great ellipse, is constructed entirely of a silicious sandstone found on the sides of the Wiltshire Downs, and in the adjoining valleys. Besides these, there remain in the main circle a number of blocks of syenite which must have been brought from a great distance, since this formation is not found in this part of Great Britain. The avenue or approach opens immediately in front of the ellipse, and in a line with the so-called altar-stone. In the centre of the avenue itself is the stone called the "Friar's Heel," a block 16 ft. high in a leaning position. The legend of the stone runs that as the Enemy of Mankind was raising S. he muttered that "no one would ever know how it was done." But a passing friar heard the words, and exclaiming "That's more than thee can tell," fled for his life. The devil flung a great stone after him, but hit only his heel. It was directly over this stone of the Friar's Heel that Dr. Thurnam, standing on the altar-stone, observed that the sun rose on Midsummer Day, 1858. There are two smaller stones, irregularly placed, just within the enclosing bank of earth. It was formerly considered that S. was a Druidical monument; but there is no evidence by which monuments of this kind can be connected with the Druids. Moreover, primitive structures of standing stones are found in various regions, from India to Leon. The first direct mention of S. occurs in the list of Wonders of Britain by Henry of Huntingdon in the first half of the 12th cent., but of its builders or of the date of its erection nothing is known. The opinion most generally accepted is that it belongs to the bronze age, and is a development from ruder stone monuments of an earlier period. There are on the Wiltshire Downs many barrows in which bronze implements have been found, and others, more ancient, in which the weapons were of flint and stone.

Stonehouse (1), or Stonehouse, East, pa. and to., S. Dev.; ac. 187 and 80 tidal water and foreshore. The town is a continuation of Plymouth proper on the west, and is separated from Devonport by the Stonehouse Pool. The pa. was formerly called "Hepeston," and in the reign of Henry III. contained only the house of the owner of the manor. The place owes its prosperity chiefly to its convenient situation as a naval and military depôt, and to the large Government establishments maintained here in connection with the public victualling, sanitary, and medical services. Many vessels belonging to S. are engaged in the coal and timber trade. The communication between S. and Devonport is ensured by means of a bridge over the S. Pool, built in 1773. The Mill Bridge, which spans the creek higher up, connects S. with Stoke Damerel. St. George's Church is a plain building in Doric style, erected 1879 on the site of an ancient chapel. There are also eccl. pas. with modern churches, and places of worship for various Nonconformist bodies. St. George's Hall (now the East S. Town Hall), erected by a company, is a fine building in Italian style, with a façade of two orders—the lower Doric and the upper Corinthian. It contains the county court, the hall for local board business, and the offices of the district registrar of the Bankruptcy Court. The Grand Theatre was erected in 1889. S. has a Constitutional and a Liberal Club. The charities amount to £16 a year.

Stonehouse (2), pa. and vil., Mid Glouc., 3 w. of Stroud; ac. 1,786; soil marl and blue lias, overlying oolite. The church of St. Cyril (restored 1884, rebuilt all but the tower in 1854) is in Norm. and Perp. styles; the tower is Perp. George Whitfield, curate here about 1736, began his open-air preaching in the churchyard. There is a small charity, and the schools are endowed. S. has a reading-room and institute, an old library of theological works, and a Cottagers' Horticultural Society. Fairs are held Oct. 11 and May 1. Bricks, tiles, pottery, terracotta, woollen and broad cloths, are the staple manufactures. S. Court, a seat, is an ancient mansion, visited by Queen Elizabeth.

Stoneleigh, pa. and vil. on the Sowe, Mid Warws., 4 S. of Coventry; ac. 9,907; soil sand and loam, overlying gravel and clay. The church of St. Mary is Norm. and Dec.; in the chancel is the monument of Alice, Duchess of Dudley (d. 1668); the font is interesting; in the churchyard is an old tomb with an effigy said to represent a Lady Motstow. There are almshouses founded by Alice, wife of Sir Thomas Leigh, Lord Mayor of London in 1558, and a reading-room and library opened in 1856. At various times there have been royal residences at S., and the Abbey of Stoneley was held by Cistercian monks till 1536. Thomas Drax, author, was a native of this place. S. Abbey retains portions of the monastic buildings, including several Norm. doorways; the west front was built by the third Lord Leigh in 1720 in Classic style; there is an interesting library, and some good family portraits and pictures, including paintings by Lely, Kneller, Wynants, Wouvermans, Holbein, Berghem, Gainsborough, and others; the south aisle and transept remain from the Abbey church, and in the crypt are traces of a piscina and an aumbry; there is a fine park, in which is situated the ancient Dec. gateway of the monastery, believed to have been built by Abbot Robert de Stockelo (1349); and in the hospitium Charles I. was entertained in 1642. Motstow Hall may have been the original site of Kenilworth Castle.

Stonely, ha., pa. of and ½ E. from Kimbolton (q.v.), S.W. Hunts. Here was once a priory of Augustinian Canons, founded by the Bigrames, or, according to Leland, by William Mandeville, Earl of Essex, in 1180, and dedicated to the Virgin Mary. It stood within the great manor of Kimbolton (once a hundred), which was the land of Earl Harold, the last Saxon King, and was afterwards granted with the chase of Swineshead to Fitz Peter, from whom, through other possessors, it descended to Edward Stafford, Duke of Buckingham; and being forfeited by his attainder in 1521, it was given by Henry VIII. to the family of Wingfield. A field in the neighbourhood is still called "Bigrames."

properties for curing rheumatism, for which Buxton is so much frequented; the baths were erected by the second Lord Denman on the site of an ancient bath of supposed Roman origin. Here are places for manufacturing barytes, and in the dale are several limekilns. The seat of Lord Denman, near the church, is a gabled mansion of stone, in grounds of about 4 ac., through which a brook meanders and creates a waterfall, and when the mines do not discharge too much refuse, trout abound in the brook, which flows into the Derwent.

Edward IV. appears to have gone from this place to Grafton in 1464 to marry Elizabeth Woodville; the oak, under which tradition says they first met, is still standing, and is known as the "Queen's Oak." At an inn in this town the youthful and unfortunate monarch Edward V. is said to have slept on his journey to London to be crowned. One of the memorial crosses to Eleanor, queen of Edward I., stood at the western end of the to., but was demolished about 1646 during the Civil War. In May, 1742, a fire destroyed a large portion of the to. and part of the church of St. Mary Magdalene; the tower, which still remains, has a saddle-back roof and is considered a particularly good specimen of the Perp. period. The church of St. Giles (originally a chantry chapel, founded about 1450, and endowed in 1482) was rebuilt in 1776 in a debased Gothic style; the Perp. tower is the only part of the original structure which now remains. There are also Congregational and Wesleyan chapels. The County Police Court (1865) is in the middle of the Market Square. The market is held on Friday for corn and the cattle market the first Monday in every month; pleasure fairs take place on August 2, and the Friday following Oct. 10. Here are engineering works occupied principally in building small steam launches and tugs. The to. has a provident dispensary with a small cottage hospital. There are charities of £200 yearly, for lighting, paving, and cleansing the to., and about £100 is yearly distributed in doles. About 17 ac. of allotment ground have been appropriated for the use of the poor at a low rental.

Stopham, pa. and vil. on the Arun (here crossed by a 14th-cent. bridge of seven arches), Mid Sussex, 4 S.E. of Petworth; ac. 875; soil sand, overlying gravel. The E. Eng. and Dec. church of St. Mary contains a pavement almost entirely composed of large slabs of Sussex marble, inlaid with brass effigies and memorials of the Barttelot family; the earliest of these commemorates John Barttelot (d. 1428), beside whom lies his son of the same name who fought at Agincourt (d. 1453). In the chancel windows are the quartered arms of the Barttelots, which are said to have been removed from the great window of the old hall (1638); judging from its heraldry it must have been executed in the 16th cent.; the north window, containing figures of the Stophams and Barttelots, dates from the 15th cent. The font is octagonal and ornamented with quatrefoils. S. House (almost entirely rebuilt 1878) has some rooms dating from the Tudor period. The Manor House has generally been identified with an old building near the church, now occupied as a farmhouse; it contains an old fire-back with the pattern of an oak-tree, bearing the initials C. R. and the words "The Royal Oak."

of Stornoway Harbour, one of the safest and most commodious in the north, and easy of access to vessels of any burthen at any time of the tide. Round this harbour the to. is built, in form of an amphitheatre. A lighthouse stands on Arinish point, on the south side of the harbour. Besides the pa. church there are Gaelic and English Free churches, an Episcopal and a United Presbyterian church. A quay, with slips and landing places, has been constructed; and here a fish mart was built in 1894. The Free Church school is conducted upon the plan of the Normal Seminary, and there are in all ten public schools. The Nicholson Institution has an endowment of £35 yearly for the teacher, and the Lewis Hospital has been erected a short distance from the to. The Masonic Hall is a handsome structure; in it are held assemblies, concerts and public meetings; in the same building is a public library. S. has several societies for mutual improvement, and a public library and reading-room. Steamers ply frequently between Glasgow and S., besides those which call at S. weekly. *S. Storrington, pa. and pretty vil., Mid Sussex, 9 N.E. of Arundel; ac. 2,989; soil and subsoil clay and sand. The church of St. Mary, partly rebuilt, is Gothic, and contains a stone reredos, the central portion of which is divided into three compartments containing sculptured representations of scriptural subjects, and the whole is surmounted by crocketed arches. There are some good monuments, including a brass to Henry Wilsha, B.D. (d. 1591). The Catholic Priory of Our Lady of England (opened 1888) belongs to canons regular of the Premonstratension Order. There is a large educational establishment at S. for gentlemen's sons preparing for the army. Fairs are held for cattle and horses on May 13, and for cattle and pedlary on Nov. 11. The market has long been discontinued. There are charities amounting to about £72 yearly. Fryern House and S. Abbey are seats.

Storr Rock. [SNIZORT.]

Storrs, ha., pa. of Windermere (q.v.), S.W. Westmd., about 2 S. of Bowness. Here is an observatory known as the Temple. S. Hall is a seat.

Stort, river, Essex and Herts., rises in the N.W. vicinity of Clavering, N.W. Essex, and runs S. by E. through that co. to Stanstead Mountfitchet, then S. by W. between Essex and Herts., past Bishop Stortford and Sawbridgeworth to the vicinity of Harlow; and finally E.S.E. past Harlow and Roydon to the Lea. Its length is about 22 miles.

Storwood, tp., pa. of Thornton (q.v.), E.R. Yorks., 8 S.W. of Pocklington; ac. 1,222. Here is a Wesleyan chapel.

Stotfield, vil. forming the west portion of the towns of Lossiemouth and Branderburgh (q.v.), pa. of Drainie, N. Elgs., Sc. S. is a favourite summer resort and contains many villa residences. The sea-bathing, on the sands below it, is excellent, and there are good golf-links in the neighbourhood. The vil. commands good views of the hills on the other side of the Moray Firth.

Stotfold (1), pa. and vil., E. Beds., on the Herts. border, 5½ S.E. of Biggleswade; ac. 2,397; soil light clay, with beds of gravel, overlying gault. The church of St. Mary (restored 1890) is chiefly E. Perp. There are grotesque heads in several of the bosses, and to the hood mouldings of the principal arches; there were formerly some curious frescoes of St. George and the Dragon, St. Michael weighing souls, etc., but these are now destroyed; the font is of Perp. date. There is a Calvinistic Baptist chapel, a Baptist chapel, and a Wesleyan chapel. There are seven almshouses (1842) for the church poor, and other charities to the amount of about £80 yearly. Brick and tile making are carried on, and many of the inhabitants are employed in the straw-plait trade; here is also a brewery. The Lunatic Asylum for the cos. of Herts., Beds., and Hunts. is situated in this pa.

Stotfold (2), tp., pa. of Hooton Pagnell (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., 5 N.W. of Doncaster; ac. 252.

Stottesden, pa., tp., and vil. on the Rea, S.E. Salop, 5 N. of Cleobury Mortimer; ac. of pa. 11,603, of tp. 9,486; soil various, subsoil chiefly rock. The church of St. Mary (restored) is Norm. and later periods; at the west end is a Saxon doorway; there is a Norm. font and some fragments of old glass. The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel.

Stoughton (1), pa., S.W. Sussex, 7 N.W. of Chichester; ac. 5,373; soil light loam, overlying chalk. The church of St. Mary is E. Eng.; the chancel shows internal coignes and herring-bone work characteristic of Saxon architecture; a large and light Norm. arch separates the chancel from the nave. There is a small charity.

Stoughton (2), chap., tp., and vil., pa. of Thurnby (q.v.), Mid Leics., 3½ S.E. of Leicester; ac. 1,482. The church of St. Mary (rebuilt 1866) is Gothic, and contains monuments to Thomas Farnham (d. 1562), Sir Thomas Beaumont (d. 1614), and Rear-Admiral Basil Beaumont (d. 1703). S. Grange is a seat.

Stoughton (3), pl., pa. of and about 2 N. from Guildford (q.v.), S.W. Surrey. Here are large barracks and the Guildford cemetery.

Stoughton Cross, ha., pa. of Wedmore (q.v.), N. Somerset, about 3 S.W. of Cheddar.

Stoulton, pa. and vil., S. Worcs., 5 S.E. of Worcester on the road to Evesham; ac. 1,837; soil various, chiefly clay, gravel and sand; subsoil various. The church of St. Edmund (restored 1848) is chiefly late Norm., Dec., and Perp. The chancel and the nave, which is unusually wide, have traces of Norm. work; the church possesses an ancient embroidered altar cloth, formed out of an old cope; in the church is a handsome mural monument to William Acton, dated 1854. The charities amount to about £6 yearly, distributed to the poor, in bread and clothing, on St. Thomas's day, and a clothing society for assisting to clothe poor women and school children. Wolverton Hall is a seat.

Stoupbrow, ha. and cliff, pa. of Fylingdales (q.v.), N.R. Yorks., about 8 S. of Whitby. The cliff, which is nearly 900 ft. above sea-level, commands a fine view.

Stour-, for places not found under this spelling, see also STORE- and STUR-.

Stour (1), river, between S. Suff. and N.E. Essex, rises near Horseheath, just within the Cambs. border, and entering Suff. runs E.S.E. to Haverhill and thence S.E. through Suff. to Whixoe. From this point it forms the boundary between Suff. and Essex. Its course is E. by N. past Clare and Cavendish to Long Melford, S.S.E. past Sudbury to Bures St. Mary, and E. past Nayland, Stratford St. Mary, Dedham, and East Bergholt to Manningtree, where the estuary begins. The latter is a very fine sheet of water, 11 miles long from west to east between Manningtree and Harwich, with a maximum breadth of 2 miles. At Harwich the S. meets the Orwell (q.v.), and turning S. they flow together into the North Sea. The rich scenery of the S. is known to lovers of art through the paintings of Gainsborough and Constable, who were natives of Sudbury and East Bergholt respectively. It is about 50 miles long, its principal tributary being the Bret.

Stour (2), river, Kent, rises at Postling, 3 N. by W. of Hythe, and runs S.W. to Stamford, and thence N.W. past Sellinge, Mersham, and Sevington to Ashford. Its course N.N.E. between Ashford and Canterbury is rendered very picturesque by the beautiful grounds of Olantigh Towers, Godmersham Park, and Chilham Park. From this point the river runs N.E. to Canterbury, and thence E.N.E. past Fordwick (where it becomes navigable) to Stourmouth, where it is joined by the Lesser Stour. Here it divides into two branches, the main stream proceeding E.S.E. and S. past Richborough Castle to Sandwich, and thence N. by E. to Pegwell Bay. The other branch, now a very slender rivulet, runs N.N.W. to Reculver. The two branches once formed a channel, some 3 miles wide, called the Wantsum, which separated the Isle of Thanet from the rest of Kent. The river is about 40 miles long.

Stour (3), river, N.W. Oxon, S. Warws., and S.E. Worcs., rises 5½ S.W. by W. of Banbury, and runs due W. to Burmington, where it touches the co. of Glouc. Here it turns N., flowing past Shipston-on-Stour to Eatington, and thence pursues its course N.W. by Whitchurch, Preston, Atherstone, and Clifford Chambers to the Avon, which it joins 1½ W.S.W. of Stratford-on-Avon. Its length is about 20 miles.

Stour (4), river of Wilts., Somerset, Dors., and Hants, running during the greater part of its course through Dors. It rises in the grounds of Stourhead Park in Wilts., and, after flowing about 2 S. through Somerset, enters Dors. at Silton. It then winds S.W., S., and S.E. past Gillingham, Fifehead Magdalen, and Hinton Saint Mary to Sturminster Newton. From Sturminster Newton to Sturminster Marshall its course is S.E. past Shillingstone, Blandford, and Tarrant Crawford. At Blandford, where the river passes through the beautiful grounds of Bryanstone House, the scenery is extremely fine. From Sturminster Marshall it pursues its course past Wimborne Minster to West Parley on the Hants border, the general direction of its course being E. by S. Entering Hants it winds E.S.E. to Christchurch, uniting its waters with those of the Avon before it enters Christchurch Bay. Its length is about 55 miles.

Stour (5), river, N. Worcs. and S. Staffs., rises in or close to the estate of the Leasowes, famous through its connection with the poet Shenstone, and, passing Halesowen, runs E. along the Staffs. border past Cradley, the Lye, and Stourbridge. After flowing a short distance E. and then S. past Kinver it re-enters Worcs., and runs S. by E. past Kidderminster to the Severn at Stourport. The river furnishes water-power to a large number of spinning-mills and other factories. Its length is about 20 miles.

Stourbridge, tp., U. and mkt. to., on the south bank of the Stour, pa. of Old Swinford (q.v.), N. Worcs., 5 S. of Dudley; ac. 450. Steam tramcars run every twenty minutes to and from Brierley Hill and Dudley. Here are eccl. pas. with modern churches, a Catholic church (from the designs of A. W. Pugin), a Presbyterian chapel containing numerous monuments, and places of worship for various bodies of Nonconformists. The Endowed Grammar School, in High Street, was founded by King Edward VI. in 1552, and reorganised in 1875. The School of Science and Art is in the Theatre Road. The Bluecoat or Hospital School, Hagley Road, was founded in 1667, and enlarged in 1884 by the addition of a new wing; 160 boys are maintained, clothed, and educated, and are subsequently apprenticed to various trades for seven years. A new town hall was erected in Market Street in 1887. The Town Commissioners have also erected new town offices, including a board room, fire station, and a Corn Exchange. There is a large and convenient market-place. A weekly corn market is held on Friday in the Corn Exchange; another market is also held on Saturday. Fairs are held in March and first Monday in September; the former was once a great fair for horses, and commences seven days or a fortnight before the last Monday in March. S. has an Institute with reading rooms, a library, and a theatre. There are large ironworks, and the to. is noted for the manufacture of fire-brick; there are also glue works, a brewery, malthouse, skinyard, parchment manufactory, and many glass works in the neighbourhood. Many of the inhabitants are employed as nailers, or in making shovels, spades, scythes, chains, traces, and anvils. The Corbett Hospital (1892), which bears the name of its founder, is at Amblecote in the Staffs. portion of the pa. of Old Swinford. A company of refugees who came to England from Hungary and Lorraine in 1555 or 1556, headed by one Henzoil Henzey, formed an encampment here at the Lye Waste, and began the manufacture of glass and pottery from the valuable fire-clay of the locality. The precise spot upon which the strangers took up their abode, and where the first glass-house was erected, is still known by the name of Hungary Hill. To the existence of this clay may be attributed the localising of glass-making in the district. The other materials needed, with the exception of coal, are only to be procured at a distance.

Stour, East, pa. and vil. on the Stour, N. Dors., 4 W. of Shaftesbury; ac. 1,678; soil clay, overlying marl and stone. Christ Church was built in 1841, in Norm. style, on the site of the old church. The Baptists and Wesleyans have chapels. There is a Temperance Hall.

Stourhead Park. [STOURTON.]

Stour, Lesser, stream, E. Kent, rises at Bishopsbourne, in the grounds of Bourne Place, and runs N.E. past Patrixbourne, Beaksbourne, Littlebourn, and Ickham, joining the Stour at Stourmouth after a course of 17 miles.

Stourmouth, pa. and vil., N.E. Kent, 10 N.E. of Canterbury; ac. 894; soil loam, overlying sand. The church of All Saints (restored 1845) is E. Eng., and contains portions of the rood-screen, a curious font, and some encaustic tiles. There is a small charity, and the school has a small endowment. Malting and brewing are carried on. The Stour formerly flowed into the sea at S.

Stourpaine, pa. and vil. on the Stour, Mid Dors., 3 N.N.W. of Blandford; ac. 2,272; soil chalky loam, overlying chalk and gravel. The church of the Holy Trinity was rebuilt 1858, in Gothic style. The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel. The Church House consists of a large recreation room, reading room, and library. Hod Hill (q.v.) is in the pa.

Stourport, tp. and mkt. to., head of petty sess. div., and a polling place for the co., pa. of and 4 S.W. of Kidderminster (q.v.), N. Worcs.; ac. 1,317. Here is the junction of the Staffordshire and Worcestershire Canal and of the Stour with the river Severn, on which there is a considerable carrying trade to all parts of the kingdom. The Severn is here crossed by a handsome iron bridge, opened in 1870. Besides the churches of the eccl. pa. of Lower Mitton (q.v.), there are Congregational, Wesleyan, and Primitive Methodist chapels. The S. Literary Institute has a library. In the to. is a large tannery, and an iron foundry for hollow ware, hinges, etc.; the Wilden ironworks, about 1 mile distant, also employ many hands; carpet-weaving is carried on at a number of mills, and there are also maltings. The wharfage here is excellent, but the river traffic is less extensive than formerly. The markets (W. & S.) are now nearly obsolete. Fairs are held on the first Tuesday in April, July, and October, toll and pen free. At Red Stone, near S., is a hermitage, hewn out of the red sandstone rock, adjoining the Severn; here was formerly a ferry.

Stour Provost, pa. and vil. on the Stour, N. Dors., 4¾ W. of Shaftesbury; ac. 2,730; soil rich loam, subsoil rocky. The church of St. Michael is E. Eng. The Primitive Methodists and Congregationalists have chapels. There is a quarry on the manor farm producing building stone. In the vil. is a flour mill. A court leet is held biennially.

Stourton (1), pa. (partly in Somerset) and vil., S.W. Wilts., 7 N.W. of Wincanton; ac. 3,385; soil sandy, overlying gravel, chalk, and flint. The church of St. Peter is of various periods; it contains a number of memorials to the Stourton and Hoare families. The Stourtons were settled here before the Norman accession. In Stourhead Park stands the old Bristol High Cross, a beautiful and highly-interesting structure, finally taken down in 1763, when its fragments were deposited in the Cathedral and there remained until 1768, when the cross was re-erected where it stands; it was completely restored 1894–95. In the ornamental gardens is an ancient well. Near the source of the Stour now stands a building formerly at the south-west corner of St. Peter's Street, Bristol, and known as St. Peter's Pump, removed here in 1765. In the manor of Bonham stands the ancient Catholic chapel, repaired in 1882. There are charities amounting to about £75 annually.

Stourton (2), tp. and vil., pa. of Whichford (q.v.), S. Warws., 4 S. of Shipston-on-Stour; ac. 931. The Wesleyans have a chapel.

Stow (1), or Stow-by-Gainsborough, pa., tp., and vil., W. Lincs., 7¾ S.E. of Gainsborough; ac. 2,786; soil loam and clay, overlying clay. St. Mary's Church (restored 1853–65) originally served as the Cathedral church of the ancient diocese of Sidnacester in Lindsey, founded in the 7th cent.; it stands on the site of a still older one, erected by Egfrid. It is chiefly E. Norm. The transept, including the central piers and arches supporting the tower, undoubtedly formed part of the ancient cathedral, but the upper portion of the walls has been rebuilt, yet still in the Saxon period; the existing nave dates from a little before the Conquest; the choir is the work of Bishop Remigius (1070–92); the church has three beautiful doorways in the nave, each of which is a fine specimen of Norm. work; a large pillar at the west end of the nave, left unrestored, bears marks of the great conflagration at S., A.D. 1156, referred to in the annals of the Court of Exchequer; in 1865, during the removal of some stonework, evidences were met with of the existence of an altar here, dedicated to St. Thomas of Canterbury; and above the site of the altar were considerable remains of a wall-painting representing the figure of an archbishop vested, and on either side scenes from the martyrdom of à Becket. There is a Wesleyan Methodist chapel. The remains of the moat of an episcopal residence, once occupied by St. Hugh, still exist in S. Park. S. fair, held October 10, is still kept up, principally for the sale of colts.

Stow (2), pa., tp., and vil., S.W. Hunts., 2 N. of Kimbolton; ac. of pa. 1,475, of tp. 844; soil clay, overlying strong clay. The church of St. Botolph (restored 1880) is E. Eng., with traces of Saxon and Norm. work; on the south side of the chancel is a Norm. doorway with zig-zag mouldings, and the tympanum exhibits carvings of a female figure somewhat like a mermaid and two animals resembling oxen; there are two statue brackets, a piscina, and an aumbry in the chancel. A wall monument and a brass commemorate Sir Thomas Maples (d. 1634), and two other slabs, Richard and Ann Elmes, 1682; the church plate includes a silver paten of 1491-92. There is a small Moravian chapel.

Stow (3), extensive pa. and vil., S. Edins., Sc., nearly 16 miles in length and 8 broad, extending into Selks.; ac. 36,843; soil fertile, overlying chiefly Silurian rocks. The vil. is 24 S.E. of Edinburgh on the road to Carlisle. The Town Hall is in part devoted to a literary institute and library, and also includes a large room for lectures and public meetings. There are three woollen manufactories. Hirings for servants are held on Friday before the last Monday in Feb. and the second Tuesday in March. Ashiestiel, the residence of Scott previous to his removal to Abbotsford, Bowland, Laidlawstiel, and Torsonce House are seats.

Stow Bardolph, pa. and vil. on the Ouse, W. Norf., 2 N. of Downham Market; ac. 6,172; soil peat and gravel, overlying clay. The church of the Holy Trinity (restored 1850) is Dec.; attached to the church, on the north side, is a spacious mortuary chapel (built by Nicholas Hare, Esq., of S. B., who died in 1591) containing several handsome and highly finished monuments to the Hare family. Here are Baptist, Primitive Methodist, and Free Methodist chapels. The charities are £169 10s. yearly value. Here are six almshouses, erected and endowed in 1603, by Sir Ralph Hare, for six poor persons, being either natives of or residents for ten years in the pa. A large fair is held here on the Saturday after Whitsuntide. Stow Hall, a mansion in Elizabethan style, is a seat.

Stow-Bedon, pa. and vil., S.W. Norf., 4 S. of Watton; ac. 1,692; soil mixed, overlying clay and gravel. The church of St. Botolph (restored 1852) is chiefly Perp.; on the north side are two small E. Dec. windows, and in the chancel two lancets filled with old stained glass taken from Hildersham Church, Cambridge; near the south wall of the chancel are three ancient tombs bearing floriated crosses. Ray's charity of £1 10s. 9d. yearly is for bread, and the fuel allotment produces £14 15s. yearly. Stow-Bedon Mere is about 23 ac. in extent.

Stowe (1), pa., N.W. Bucks., 3½ N.N.W. of Buckingham; ac. 2,952; soil gravel and clay, subsoil various. The church of St. Mary, situated in the private grounds of S. House, is of various periods. S. House, in which the Comte de Paris died, 1894, is a noble mansion of stone. The hall was painted by Kent with allegorical representations of the seven planets, that of Mars being a portrait of William III. The Egyptian Hall is decorated with hieroglyphics. The chapel contains an organ which belonged to James II. There are some valuable specimens in the armoury, and the library contains about 20,000 volumes, together with many valuable portraits. The ornamental gardens, occupying nearly 500 ac., were laid out by Lancelot Browne. The entrance to the park from Buckingham is by a beautiful Corinthian arch, at the end of an avenue 2 miles in length. To the north of the park are the S. woods. Boycott Manor House is another seat.

Stowe (2), pa. and vil., Mid Staffs., 7 N.E. of Stafford; ac. 5,120; soil loam, overlying marl and stone. The church of St. John the Baptist (restored 1866 and 1879) is Norm., E. Eng., and later periods; the chancel contains much Norm. work; there is an altar tomb to Viscount Hereford and his two wives, and a brass to Sir Thomas Newport. In the churchyard is an ancient cross. There are several charities.

Stowe (3), or Stowe-by-Market-Deeping, pa., S. Lincs., 6 N.E. of Stamford; ac. 355; soil light loam, overlying gravel. The church of St. John the Baptist was taken down in 1772.

Stowey, pa., N.E. Somerset, 9½ S. of Bristol; ac. 779; soil loamy clay, subsoil clayey and red sandstone. The church of St. Mary the Virgin is in Norm. style. There are some small charities. Sutton Court, a seat, has a tower and court wall dating from Edward II.'s reign; the manor-house was added to the tower previous to the time of Henry VIII.; a chapel and great parlour were added in 1558. John Hooper, Bishop of Gloucester, was once concealed here during the Marian persecutions, and John Locke was at one time a frequent visitor.

Stowey, Nether, pa. and vil., N.W. Somerset, 9 W. of Bridgwater; ac. 1,073; soil loamy, overlying stone. The church of St. Mary (rebuilt, excepting the tower, in 1850) is E. Eng. Here is a Congregational chapel. The charities are small. Stone is quarried. Coleridge lived here from 1797 to 1800, and there is an inscribed stone on the house he occupied and in which he composed some of his finest poetry. On Castle Hill are the ruins of the residence of James, fourteenth Baron Audley, who was executed for taking part in the Cornish insurrection in 1497. Red deer are hunted on the Quantocks. Part of the population, locally known as "broom squires," are employed in the manufacture of birch-brooms.

Stowey, Over, pa. and vil., N.W. Somerset, 9 W. of Bridgwater; ac. 3,647; soil red clay, overlying stone. The church of St. Mary Magdalene is Perp., and has an ancient font. There are some small charities. Sandstone and limestone are quarried. Quantock Lodge is a seat.

Stowford (1), pa. and vil. in the valley of one of the tributaries of the Lyd, W. Dev., 7 N.E. of Launceston; ac. 2,065; soil loamy, overlying clay and slate. The Perp. church of St. John the Baptist was restored in 1874 from designs by the late Sir Gilbert Scott, R.A., when a profusion of carved oak work was introduced. There are Bible Christian and Baptist chapels. Haine is a seat.

Stow Langtoft, pa. and vil., N.W. Suff., 8 N.E. of Bury St. Edmunds; ac. 1,456; soil mixed, overlying chalk, clay, and gravel. The church of St. George is of the Trans. period from E. Eng. to Dec. It contains a curious monument (1618) representing two women kneeling before a man with an open book, and underneath are the figures of eight kneeling children; it commemorates one of the D'Ewes family, his wives, and their children. There are also many fine oak carvings. In the south wall of the nave is a piscina. The Hall, a mansion in Italian style, stands in a well-wooded park.

Stow Maries, pa. and vil. on the Crouch, S.E. Essex, 7 S. of Maldon; ac. 2,452; soil and subsoil clay. The church of St. Mary and St. Margaret (restored 1870) is Perp., and contains the original piscinæ, an interesting trefoil niche, and a tomb with brass to the Cammocke family. There is a small charity.

Stowmarket, pa., tp., mkt. to., and head of petty sess. div. and Co. Co. dis., on the Gipping, N.W. Suff., 12 N.W. of Ipswich; ac. of pa. 2,158, of tp. 999. The church of SS. Peter and Mary (restored 1865) is a large cathedral-like building of the Dec. and E. Eng. periods. In the church is a monument to Dr. Young, once vicar of this pa., and tutor to Milton. The old vicarage house is very ancient, parts of it dating before the reign of Elizabeth; a room in it where Milton visited his tutor is still preserved, and in the grounds a mulberry-tree of considerable size retains the poet's name. There is a Catholic church, and various Nonconformist bodies have places of worship. The Corn Exchange and Assembly Room were originally built in 1836. The corn market (TH.) is well attended. On the same day is a market for cattle, sheep, pigs, and horses, and a show of cattle, sheep, and pigs early in September. The Literary Institute and the Young Men's Society were amalgamated in 1873, and in 1874 they erected a building in Ipswich Street. A considerable trade in corn, malt, coal, slate, and timber is carried on. Here are chemical-manure, gun-cotton, and agricultural-implement manufactories. There are several hop gardens in the vicinity. S. has various charities for the benefit of the poor and for educational purposes, amounting in the whole to £315 yearly. Thorney Hall, near the station, was from the Norman accession to the reign of Henry I. the seat of the King's bailiff; the portion of the Hall now standing has been converted into maltings. Abbots Hall and Hill House are seats.

Stowmarket Division, one of the five parl. divs. of Suffolk. It lies in the north-west of the co. and returns one member.

Stow-on-the-Wold, pa., tp., U. and mkt. to. (TH.), and head of Co. Co. dis. and petty sess. div., E. Glouc., 9 N.N.E. of Northleach; ac. of pa. 3,130, of tp. 33. The to. is irregularly built on the summit of a hill and commands extensive views. The church of St. Edward (said to have been built by Ailmore or Æthelmer, Earl of Cornwall and Devon, in the reign of Ethelred) is a handsome and spacious edifice of stone with Norm., E. Eng., Dec., and Perp. work; in the chancel are sedilia and a piscina with canopy; there are several memorials to members of the Chamberlayne family. Here are Baptist, Congregational, and Wesleyan chapels. In 1604 Richard Shepham, citizen and merchant-tailor of London, built and endowed nine almshouses and a free grammar school; the endowment now amounts to £39 8s. yearly, of which sum £23 8s. is appropriated to the poor persons residing in the almshouses. The master of the national school now occupies the school-house, and the school-room is used for parochial purposes. There are also several useful charities, amounting to £147 yearly, which is given in meat, coals, and bread. During the Great Rebellion (1642-45) Stow was once or twice the scene of conflicts, and on March 21, 1645, a severe battle was fought on the Donnington side of the to., when the Royalists were defeated with the loss of their general, Sir Jacob Astley, and 1,500 men. King Charles I. slept here on his way to reduce the town of Leicester. In the Market Square is an ancient cross, restored in 1878. The stocks are still standing on the green. Fairs are held on May 12 and Oct. 24 for cattle, sheep, horses, cheese, and general merchandise; there are also two statute fairs for hiring servants, one on the Thursday before and the other on the Thursday after Oct. 11. St. Edward's Hall, in the Market Square, is in Elizabethan style; it contains a reading and news room, a circulating library, and a large assembly-room for public meetings and entertainments, Stowting, pa. and vil., S.E. Kent, 6 N.E. of Hythe; ac. 1,631; soil chalky loam, overlying chalk. The church of St. Mary is of E. Eng. and later periods, and possesses some fine old glass; there are sedilia and a piscina in the chancel, and the vestry is enclosed by a wooden screen.

Stow Upland, pa. on the Gipping, Mid Suff., opposite Stowmarket; ac. 2,841; soil heavy, overlying clay. The church of the Holy Trinity (1843) is in E. Eng. style. There is a Congregational chapel. Columbyne Hall, an ancient building surrounded by a moat, is now occupied as a farmhouse.

Stow, West, pa. on the Lark, N.W. Suff., 4 N.N.W. of Bury St. Edmunds; ac. 2,926; soil light and sandy, overlying clay and chalk. The church of St. Mary is an ancient building of flint and stone. The Hall, now occupied by a farm steward, is a 16th-cent. building, and was the residence of the Master of the Horse to Mary Tudor, Dowager Queen of France, whose arms, with those of her second husband Charles Brandon, Duke of Suffolk, are still distinguishable on the exterior.

Stow-with-Quy, pa., E. Cambs., 5 E.N.E. of Cambridge; ac. 1,820; soil various. The church of St. Mary (restored 1881), situated close to the main road, is Dec.; the clerestory is Perp., and the rood screen of the same date; the north aisle, also Perp., retains a piscina, and has some modern memorials to the Martin family. The church contains a curious brass with effigies of a man in armour, his wife (figure now lost), twelve sons and four daughters, and mutilated inscription, which, when perfect, commemorated John Ansty (c. 1465), formerly lord of this "ville," and founder of Ansty's Charity, and Johanna his wife; there is also a brass with arms and inscription to Edward Stern (1641), and some 17th-cent. slabs inscribed to the Lawrence family. Here is a small Wesleyan chapel. The charities amount to £14 yearly.

Stow Wood, formerly a pa., now amalgamated with the pa. of Beckley (q.v.), E. Oxon.

Strabane, large mkt. and U. to. (formerly a parl. bor.), pas. of Camus, Leckpatrick, and Urney (q.v.), N. co. Tyr., Ir., 14½ S.S.W. of Londonderry. The environs are full of interest and beauty, the to. standing in a kind of amphitheatre of mountains. The Mourne river, which, with the Finn, forms, at Lifford, the Foyle, is one of the most beautiful rivers in Ireland; and the valleys of those rivers vie with one another in luxuriance and loveliness. S. was but an inconsiderable vil., until James I., in 1611, granted the surrounding dis. to the Earl of Abercorn, who subsequently erected a strong castle and built a to., which now ranks among the first in the co. It consists of four principal and several smaller streets; the houses generally are well built, and many of them spacious and handsome. The general appearance of the to. altogether is prepossessing, and its aspect rendered additionally pleasing by the thriving orchards and gardens in the outskirts. The Protestant church, built in 1619 by the Earl of Abercorn, has been replaced by a handsome modern edifice, opened in 1879, in E. Eng. style. The Catholic church is a large cruciform edifice; there are also Presbyterian meeting-houses and a Wesleyan chapel. The community of the convent of Mount St. Joseph carry on a certified industrial school, large day and special-class school and orphanage; a church with handsome spire is attached to the building. There is an intermediate school, and several others conducted on the National plan, also a dispensary. The manufacture of shirts is carried on here to a large extent, and there is an iron and brass foundry. The trade in grain is considerable, quantities being shipped from this market for Liverpool, Glasgow, and other ports. The workhouse, near the to., was built in 1840. The market days are Tuesday for corn, provisions, and various commodities, and Wednesday for flax. Fairs are held on Feb. 1, May 12, Aug. 1, Nov. 12, and on the first Thursday in Jan., March, April, June, July, Sept., Oct., and Dec. S. gives the inferior titles of Baron and Viscount to the Abercorn family.

Strangford, seaport, pa. of Ballyculter (q.v.), E. co. Down, Ir., 6 N.E. of Downpatrick, situated immediately opposite to Portaferry, on the west shore of the strait from the sea to S. Lough, through which the tide rushes at the rate of about 6 miles an hour. The places of worship are a Protestant chapel-of-ease to the church of Ballyculter, and one each for Catholics, Presbyterians, and Wesleyans. There is an endowed school and also an infant school. The to. is small, but there is a quay, and the place participates in similar traffic and trades, but far more limited, with those which flourish at Portaferry. The to., which derives considerable consequence from the vicinity of the fine lough of its name, contains a number of good houses and a custom house; from the latter, on the quay, a charming view of Portaferry, of the lough, and of the country on the south and west is commanded. Castleward and Old Court are seats.

Strangford Lough, inlet of the sea, N.E. co. Down, Ir., 10 E. by S. of Belfast. The lough extends about 14 N.N.W. and S.S.E., and has a breadth varying from 2½ to 5 miles; the channel connecting it with the open sea forms a south continuation of the lough, 6 miles long, and ranging in breadth from ½ mile to 1 mile. The tos. of Portaferry and Strangford are situated on the opposite sides of this channel, near its north extremity. Towards the east the lough is divided from the sea by a narrow peninsula, consisting of the bars. of Lower and Upper Ards. The numerous islands scattered about the lake (some of which are inhabited), as well as its narrow entrance, give it the appearance of an inland lake. It affords good shelter for large vessels, but the navigation is difficult. Newtown Ards is picturesquely situated at its north extremity, and the demesne of Mount Stewart and the ruins of Grey Abbey in its south-east vicinity render the scenery on the banks in this part of the lake very attractive.

Stranocum, vil. with railway station, pa. of Ballymoney (q.v.), N. co. Antr., Ir., about 5 N.E. of Ballymoney. The river Bush flows past the vil. in which are corn and flax mills. Fairs are held in February, March, April, June, July, August, and September.

The bay at one time afforded lendid supply of oysters, but the beds have rly become impoverished, thus rendering the ry unprofitable. There are, however, several s of white fish caught, and occasionally herrings got equal in quality to the best obtained on other part of the Scottish coast. S. has a very and mills, through which large quantities ain pass every year; it is particularly notice-for the extensive nurseries on all sides of the which afford employment to many persons. district is agricultural, grain, cheese, and all s of farm produce and cattle, being conveyed lasgow regularly by railway and twice a week eamer. The market is held on Friday. The wing are the annual fairs:—For horses, the Monday in January, the Thursday before 29, and the Monday before the second sday in October; for cattle, on the third Friday in every month, commencing in April and ending in November; other fairs for general business are also held in May and August. In the centre of the to. stands a building, originally a castle, of considerable antiquity, but the date of its foundation has not been satisfactorily ascertained; it is mentioned in a charter granted by James VI., and is called the "Tower, fortalice, and manor-place of Chapell," and was once the residence of the family of Kennedy, of Chapel and Chrychan. It was used by Graham of Claverhouse as his headquarters in the district during the Covenanting period.

Stranton, pa. and tp., S.E. Dur., 12 N.E. of Stockton; ac. of pa. 6,256, of tp. 2,831; soil loam, overlying clay. The church of All Saints (restored) is chiefly Dec. and Perp. with some portions of Norm. work. Most of it dates from about 1350, but a small portion of it seems to be earlier work (about 1250). It is supposed to occupy the site of the church given by Robert de Brus to Guisborough priory about 1154. In the chancel is a piscina, and there is a portion of another in the south aisle.

Stratfield Mortimer, pa., tp., and vil., S.W. Berks., 7 S.S.W. of Reading; ac. of pa. 3,698, of tp. 3,032; soil light gravel, overlying clay. The church of St. Mary the Virgin (rebuilt 1869) in Gothic style contains some ancient monuments and brasses dating from the 15th cent. In the vestry is a Saxon slab found below the chancel of the former church and commemorating Ædelward, supposed to be the Ealdorman of Hampshire; its probable date is about 1020. The mission chapel of St. John was erected 1881–82. There is a Primitive Methodist chapel. A Working Men's Club was erected in 1892. The charities amount to about £220 yearly. Mortimer Hill, M. House, M. Lodge, Wakefield House, and Warrennes Wood are seats.

Stratfieldsaye, pa., tp. and pleasant vil., N. Hants, on the border of Berks., about 8 N.E. of Basingstoke; ac. of pa. 3,692, of tp. 2,743; soil various, overlying chiefly clay. The church of St. Mary the Virgin, situated near the western extremity of the park, and rebuilt in 1784, is a flint edifice, in the form of a Greek cross; in the south transept is a marble monument (dated 1636) to Sir William Pitt, west of which is a fine mural tablet, by Flaxman, to George Pitt, first Baron Rivers of that family, who died 1803. In the chancel are two brasses dated 1558 and 1594 to the Dabridgecourt family; also a mural monument of stone to Mr. John Howsman, rector of this church, 1626. In October, 1883, a mural monument was placed in the chancel to the Very Rev. the Hon. Gerald Wellesley, Dean of Windsor; it includes a life-sized medallion portrait of the dean in bold relief, and beneath an inscription and the arms of the family. Charities of £21 yearly value are distributed in bread and clothing. Stratfield means the field of the road or way, the ancient Roman road from London to Silchester crossing the pas. of that name, of which there are three; the terminal name of this pa. is derived from the family of Saye, who once held the manor. Early in the 19th cent. it was presented by Parliament to the Duke of Wellington, whose successor holds it of the Crown on condition of presenting to the Sovereign on each succeeding anniversary of the battle of Waterloo a flag, which is placed in the armoury or guard chamber at Windsor Castle. Stratfieldsaye, a pleasing specimen of modern architecture, stands in the midst of a very large well-timbered park, which contains within its limits the pa. church and the rectory-house; the Loddon flows through the park and forms several delightful sheets of water in front of the mansion. A monument was erected here in 1866 to the first Duke of Wellington; it consists of three courses of steps supporting a plinth of dressed granite, also formed of three courses; upon this rests a moulded base, on which is a block of granite; this stone is surmounted by a monolith column having a bronze base; supported by this column, on a pedestal, is the statue of the duke, in the uniform of a field-marshal.

Stratfield Turgis, pa. and pleasant vil., N. Hants, 7 N.E. of Basingstoke; ac. 1,034; soil loam and sandy, overlying clay. The church of All Saints (rebuilt 1792) is in E. Eng. style.

Stratford (1), to., forming part of the bor. of West Ham (q.v.), S.W. Essex, forming an east suburb of London, 2¼ E.N.E. of St. Paul's. The to. is situated on the east bank of the Lea, which is here crossed by a bridge joining S. to Bow. Its importance as a manufacturing to. dates from 1847, when the works of the Eastern Counties Railway (now the Great Eastern Railway) were established here under the superintendence of George Hudson, the celebrated "railway king," who was then chairman. The to. comprises three eccl. pas., each of which has a modern church. St. John's Church (1834), a handsome edifice of brick and stone, is in E. Eng. style; Christ Church (1851) and St. Paul's are in Dec. style. In St. John's churchyard stands the Martyrs' Memorial, a graceful monument of Gothic character, erected in 1879 to commemorate eighteen martyrs burnt in 1556. The other places of worship include a Roman Catholic church in the style of the Italian Renaissance, dedicated to St. Francis of Assisi, and Presbyterian, Baptist, Wesleyan, Primitive and Free Methodist, and Congregational chapels. The Town Hall (built 1869 and enlarged 1886) is an imposing edifice in the style of the Italian Renaissance, with a lofty tower. The works of the Great Eastern Railway extend over 52 ac., and give employment to upwards of 5,000 persons. Both engines and waggons are constructed on a very extensive scale. S. is also celebrated for its candle, varnish, colour, and chemical works; brewing and distilling are conducted on a large scale; and there are jute mills, leather factories, and stone-yards. Near the Town Hall is an obelisk commemorating the late Samuel Gurney (d. 1856), who rendered many important services to the to. S. formerly possessed a Cistercian Abbey, founded by William de Montfichet, which at one time formed the abode of Margaret Pole, Countess of Salisbury, beheaded by Henry VIII. in 1539. The naturalist, George Edwards (1692–1713), was a native, and he was also buried here.

The bor. was incorporated in 1553; its privileges were augmented in 1664, and its boundaries enlarged in 1879. The to. is pleasantly situated on an eminence rising gently from the west bank of the Avon. The church of the Holy Trinity (restored 1886) is E. Eng., Dec., and Perp. In 1332 John de Stratford founded a chantry here; twenty-one years later Ralph de Stratford erected a mansion for priests, adjoining the west side of the churchyard, called the "College," from its connection with which the church rose to collegiate rank and became possessed of its appropriate dignitaries, of whom one, Dean Balshall in the reign of Edward IV., rebuilt the choir, now the most attractive and certainly the finest part of the church. The old Lady Chapel is now occupied by monuments of the Cloptons, the most ancient of which is a despoiled altar tomb, supposed to be that of Sir Hugh Clopton, Lord Mayor of London in 1492, and the builder of S. Bridge, near the entrance to the to. from the London Road. Here also is the magnificent memorial of George Carew, Earl of Totnes, and Baron of Clopton (d. 1629), where lie in state, robed and coroneted, the figures of the earl and countess. On the south side of Balshall's choir, just above the altar steps, is the mural monument of Shakespeare, with his bust under an arch between two Corinthian columns of black marble, which support an entablature bearing his arms. great dramatist is that of his wife, Anne Hathaway (1623), and of his favourite daughter, Susanna, wife of John Hall (1649); here also are buried Judith, Shakespeare's younger daughter, Dr. Hall, husband of Susanna, and Elizabeth, their only child and Shakespeare's granddaughter. In the same spot is appropriately placed the tomb of John-a-Combe, the friend of Shakespeare (1614), with his effigy, a majestic gowned figure carved in alabaster. On the north wall are memorials to others of this family (1649–1713), and on the south wall to the family of Rawlins (1681–96). The tomb of Dean Balshall (1491) is a raised altar-tomb, now much defaced, within the communion rails on the north side. The chapel-of-ease of St. James is in E. Eng. style. Guild Chapel, or the Chapel of the Holy Cross, was founded in 1269 by Robert de Stratford, first master of the Guild, and partially rebuilt by Sir Hugh Clopton in the reign of Henry VIII.; it is a Dec. building with an embattled western tower, containing one bell, presented to the to. by Sir Hugh, and rung as a curfew for the six winter months of the year, commencing September 11. There is also a Catholic church from designs by A. W. Pugin, and various Nonconformist bodies have places of worship. The Grammar School of King Edward VI., Church Street, in which Shakespeare was educated, was founded in 1482 by Thomas Jolliffe, a native of the to., and re-founded by the King in 1553. The school buildings adjoin the Chapel of the Holy Cross. The birthplace of Shakespeare and the site of the house, "New Place," where he spent the later years of his life, with the grounds attached thereto, were purchased by public subscription—the former in 1847, and the latter in 1861. The birthplace of Shakespeare is situated in Henley Street, and preserved as far as possible in its ancient condition, the property by which it was immediately surrounded having been razed for its isolation and enclosure. The chief attraction is the room in which the poet is believed to have been born, the ceiling of which, as well as the walls—at some remote period lime-whitened—are now densely covered with pencilled autographs, exceedingly interesting as tokens of homage borne from all parts of the world; here also has been placed a cast of the bust on the poet's monument. Four large apartments are appropriated as a museum and library, and contain relics and books having an immediate relation to the bard and the history of the to. The custodian resides in a house within the grounds, to which the public are admitted on payment of sixpence each, and an additional sixpence for the museum. "New Place" (purchased in 1597 by Shakespeare, who died here in 1616) was in 1876 handed over to the Corporation, in trust for the ex-officio and life trustees of the birthplace and museum, and in future will be under their control. Adjoining the site of "New Place" is the residence of the curator, called "Nash House," once belonging to and occupied by Thomas Nash, who married Shakespeare's granddaughter, Elizabeth Hall, afterwards Lady Barnard. The Shakespeare memorial (comprising library, picture gallery, theatre, and central tower), erected on the banks of the Avon, is a building of red brick with stone dressings; the style is principally Early Elizabethan, and harmonises in some measure with Shakespeare's house and with other ancient buildings in Stratford. It was opened in 1879. The old theatre was taken down in 1872 and the site thrown into Shakespeare's great garden, of which it originally formed part. The Childs Fountain and Clock Tower, presented to the to. by Mr. G. W. Childs of Philadelphia in 1887, is a lofty pyramidal structure of Peterhead granite and hard freestone. The Shakespeare Memorial Statue, presented by Lord Ronald Gower, was unveiled in 1888. The town hall was originally erected on its present site in 1633, and stood on stone pillars, the basement being occupied as a market, with a gaol at one end and a pillory at the other. In 1767–68 the building was almost entirely re-erected, and a life-sized statue of Shakespeare (presented to the to. by Garrick in 1769, the year of the Jubilee) was subsequently placed upon the north front. In 1863 further alterations were made, and other improvements were effected in 1876. The chief saloon on the upper storey is decorated with some fine paintings, including a whole-length portrait of Shakespeare by Wilson, and a corresponding one of Garrick by Gainsborough; one of Queen Anne by Murray; and another of the Duke of Dorset. The Corporation possesses an interesting series of official maces. The Corn Exchange, in High Street, was erected in 1855, and has a spacious hall, let for balls, concerts, and dramatic entertainments. The Market House, erected about 1820, stands near the site of the old market cross. Eleven fairs are held during the year. These are, however, gradually dying out and being replaced by weekly stock sales. S. has a hospital (opened 1884), a hospital for infectious diseases, and a nursing home and children's hospital. There are almshouses in Church Street, founded by Edward VI. for twelve poor men and twelve women, and four others in Guild Street. In the to. is an extensive brewery.

Stratton Audley, pa. and vil., N.E. Oxon., 7 S.W. of Buckingham; ac. 1,981; soil loam and stonebrash, overlying stonebrash. The name of the vil. is derived from its position on the Roman road or "street" leading from Alchester to Lactodorum, and from its possession by the Audleys from the time of Henry III. The church of SS. Mary and Edburga is of various periods; the chancel retains a piscina. At the east end of the south aisle is a monument of white marble to Sir John Borlase (d. 1688), with his effigy in the dress of a Roman warrior reclining on a mattress, with weeping figures on each side. There is a monument also to Baldwin Borlase, his brother. Traces of a Roman road and the site of a camp are visible in this pa. To the south of the church are some remains of the foundations of a castle; the angles of the foundation were excavated about 1870. S. A. Hall is a seat.

Stratton, East, pa. and small vil., W. Hants, 8 N.E. of Winchester, near the road to Basingstoke; ac. 2,140; soil clay and chalk, overlying chalk. The church of All Saints is in Gothic style; it was built in the place of the old church in the park. An elegant cross (erected 1890) marks the site. The Primitive Methodists have a place of worship. There is a reading-room and Working Men's Club. S. House stands in a park of about 300 ac.; it is an old mansion which has been added to at various times and in different styles. It was formerly a seat of the Russell family, Dukes of Bedford, and was once occupied by the Lady Rachel, widow of Lord William Russell, who was beheaded in Lincoln's Inn Fields (1683).

Stratton Hall, pa., S.E. Suff., about 3 N.E. of Harwich; ac. 505.

Stratton, Long, or Stratton St. Mary, pa. and vil. (formerly a mkt. to.), S. Norf., 10½ S. by W. of Norwich, on the high road to Ipswich; ac. 1,414; soil mixed, overlying clay. The church of S. Mary is a large Dec. building; the east window is filled with fragments of ancient stained glass, gathered from various churches. On the north side of the chancel is a marble monument with recumbent effigies to Sir Edmund Reve, Justice of the Common Pleas, in his robes (d. 1647), and to his lady (d. 1657); there is also an altar-tomb (which formerly had brasses) to John de Swaffham Bulbeck, rector here at the latter part of the 15th cent. The chancel retains double sedilia and a piscina, and there is a piscina in the south aisle; the benches have finely-carved poppy heads. Here is a Congregational chapel. The charities amount to about £8 a year. In 1773 several Roman urns were found here in a gravel pit.

Stratton-on-the-Fosse, pa. and vil. on the Foss or Roman road, E. Somerset, 9 N.W. of Frome; ac. 1,145; soil variable, overlying clay and limestone. The church of St. Vigor (restored 1882) is Norm., with some Perp. work, including a stone pulpit and the font. There are some small charities. Coal and ironstone abound. Stratton House, a seat, is a fine old manor-house, all the rooms being panelled in oak.

Stratton St. Margaret, pa. and vil., N. Wilts., 2½ N.E. of Swindon; ac. 2,852; soil principally stonebrash, subsoil loamy. This place takes its name from the old Roman road running through it. The church of St. Margaret is E. Eng.; it contains monumental tablets to William and Alice Hedges (1645), to Catherine Hedges (1649), and William Hedges (1693). There is a mission church, and the Baptists and Primitive Methodists have chapels. The charities are small. The workhouse of the Highworth and Swindon Union is situated in this pa.; it is a brick and stone structure, erected in 1847. Kingsdown House, in Elizabethan style, is a seat.

Stratton St. Mary. [STRATTON, LONG.]

Stratton St. Michael, pa., S. Norf., adjoining Stratton, Long (q.v.); ac. 1,055; soil mixed, overlying mostly clay. The church of St. Michael is E. Eng.; the chancel retains a piscina, and the stairs formerly leading to the rood-loft still remain. Here are Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist chapels.

Stratton Strawless, pa. and vil., N. Norf., 4½ S. of Aylsham; ac. 1,608; soil sand and gravel, overlying brick-earth. The Perp. church of St. Margaret (restored 1883) retains some portions of stained glass and various monuments. The poor's land consists of about 28 ac., in the pa. of Marsham, which lets for £21 yearly. S. S. Hall, a large modern mansion in a pleasant park, near the Norwich road, is a seat.

Stratton, Upper, ha., pa. of Stratton St. Margaret (q.v.), N.E. Wilts., about 3 N. of Swindon.

Stratton, West, ha., pa. of Micheldever (q.v.), Mid Hants, 7½ N. of Winchester.

Streatham, large suburban pa. and residential dis. in the bor. of Wandsworth, N.E. Surrey, 7 S.W. of St. Paul's; ac. 2,914. It derives its name from its situation as a ham or village on the Roman street or road. The church of St. Leonard (rebuilt in 1830) is E. Eng.; the pulpit, of fine carved oak, belonged to the old church; and among the sepulchral memorials removed from the old church is a much-mutilated figure of a knight in mail and plaited armour under a canopy, and assigned to the 14th cent. Near the east end are two marble tablets, with inscriptions in Latin by Dr. Johnson, to Hester-Maria Salusbury, daughter of Sir Thomas Cotton, Bart., of Combermere, and mother of Mrs. Thrale (afterwards Mrs. Piozzi), and Henry Thrale, Esq., of S. Park; the former died in 1773, the latter in 1781. There is also one of white marble by Flaxman to Mrs. H. M. Hoare, third daughter of Mr. Thrale (d. 1824). There are several eccl. pas. with modern churches, and places of worship for the principal Dissenting bodies. The St. Pancras Auxiliary Workhouse, S. Hill, occupies the buildings formerly tenanted by the Royal Asylum of St. Anne's Society, now at Redhill (q.v.). The Magdalen Hospital, Leigham Court Road, a home for penitent fallen women, founded in 1758, was removed from Blackfriars Road to S. in 1868. The charities are numerous and amount to £190 yearly. Thrale's Almshouses (founded 1832) form a block of cottage residences, in Tudor style, for four aged women, each of whom receives 4s. 6d. per week. In 1650 a cathartic mineral spring, now known as "Streatham Wells," was discovered, and is still held in esteem as a remedy for scorbutic complaints. S. Common, about 60 ac. in extent, is under the control of the London County Council. The principal mansions are Hill House, Leigham House, Leigham Mead, Norfolk House, and Park Hill House.

Streatlam and Stainton, tp., pa. of Gainford (q.v.), S. Dur., 2 N.E. of Barnard Castle. The Wesleyans have a chapel. There are several free stone quarries. Streatlam Castle, a seat, stands in a finely-timbered park well stocked with deer, and was anciently encompassed by a moat, traces of which yet remain on the north-east. The castle is assumed to have been originally erected by the Baliol family. The whole structure was rebuilt in 1450; the greater part of this building still remains within the existing front, built in 1718–21, when the mansion was cased with freestone and otherwise modernised in the Italian style. The south front rises from a terrace, and consists of a central block with advanced wings, balustraded and finished with cupolas. On portions of the old building are the arms of several families; the interior contains some curious antique furniture, some family portraits and valuable pictures.

Streatley (1), pa. and pretty vil. on the Thames, W. Berks., 10 N.W. of Reading; ac. 1,500; soil chalk and loam, overlying chalk. The Trans. church of St. Mary contains some good brasses, two of which date from 1440 and 1603. The charities amount to £70 yearly. In the neighbourhood, which is much resorted to by artists, are many handsome residences. The earliest notice of this place is in the cartulary of the Abbey of Abingdon, which recites a gift of land at "Streatlea" by Ina, King of Wessex (A.D. 687).

Streatley (2), pa. and vil., S. Beds., 5 N. of Luton; ac. 2,455; soil chalk and clay. The church of St. Margaret is Perp., with an E. Eng. font. There is a Primitive Methodist chapel. The sum of £10 is annually paid out of the Sharpenhoe estate for the free education of eight children.

authenticity of the legend which forms its subject. The story is that the heir of the house of Romilly lost his life in attempting to leap the chasm whilst he was hunting, and that the monastery of Embsay (afterwards removed to Bolton) was erected by his mother in his memory. The S. has always been a favourite scene with artists; among the many pictures in which it is represented is a beautiful drawing by Turner.

Striding Edge (2,500 ft.), a spur of Helvellyn, just within the co. of Westmd. It is one of the favourite routes up Helvellyn.

Striguil or Troggy Castle, ruins of an ancient castle, S. Mon., about 4 S.E. of Usk. It was built by Richard Strongbow. Only an octagon tower with arched windows remains.

Strines, ha. with railway station, pa. of Glossop (q.v.), N. Derbys., 1 W. of New Mills. Calico-printing is carried on extensively, and the place is a popular resort for picnic- and pleasure-parties.

Stringston, pa. and small vil., N.W. Somerset, 10 N.W. of Bridgwater; ac. 1,193; soil chiefly stonebrash. The church (dedication unknown), restored 1879, has a fine cross in the churchyard. There are some small charities.

Striven, Loch, an inlet of the sea, pa. of Inverchaolain (q.v.), S. Args., Sc., forming an arm of the Firth of Clyde. It runs inland for 9 miles in a N.W. direction from the entrance to the Kyles of Bute.

Strixton, pa. and vil., E. Northants, 4½ S.E. of Wellingborough; ac. 880; soil of a fertile mixed character, overlying limestone. The church of St. John (rebuilt 1874) is in E. Eng. style; a staircase leading to it is enclosed in the thickness of the south-west angle of the wall; the chancel retains a double piscina, close to which is a small square-headed side window. A tomb containing the skeleton of a priest, with the usual sacramental vessels, was discovered in the south wall of the chancel when that part of the building was taken down.

Stroan, Loch, pa. of Kells (q.v.), Mid Kirkcuds., Sc., about 1 W. of New Galloway railway station. The Dee flows through the loch.

Strokestown, U. and mkt. to. (F.) and head of petty sess. div., pas. of Bumlin and Kiltrustan (q.v.), E. co. Roscom., Ir., 7 S.S.E. of Elphin, on the main road from Dublin to Ballina. The to. consists of two principal streets, intersecting each other at right angles; they are clean and spacious. The Protestant church, a stone building in Gothic style, forms a regular octagon, and is stated to be the only one in Ireland of that shape and a model of the Holy Sepulchre, and has a tower and spire. The Catholic church is a commodious structure. There is a court-house, with bridewell attached, a dispensary, and constabulary barracks. A workhouse and fever hospital were erected in 1852. S. has also a large cattle market for the regular sales of live stock. The business of the place is chiefly of a domestic and retail character, together with a large wool and corn trade, and large stores have been built for the merchants in the market, the land round here being highly favourable for the production of grain. Fairs are held on Jan. 16, March 17, April 13, the Tuesday after May 12, June, October, and November, Sept. 18, and one on Aug. 27, long celebrated as a large meeting for the sale of cattle.

Stromness, pa., burgh of barony, and seaport, with a monthly market (1st W.), on Mainland (or Pomona) Island, opposite to and N. of Hoy Island, from which it is divided by the Sound of Hoy; ac. of pa. 7,618. S. lies 14 W. of Kirkwall, and is irregularly built, the houses having been erected without any regard to uniformity of arrangement, and generally as near the sea as possible. Some are even within flood mark, and protected by bulwarks, quays, and jetties. The streets are paved, and there are gas works in the to. A public library is supported by annual subscriptions. An annual fair is held on the first Tuesday in September. The Orkney Natural History Society's Museum contains Hugh Miller's celebrated Asterolepis, and many other specimens of much interest. S. Harbour is a fine natural basin, extending from south to north more than a mile, and sheltered from the Atlantic on the west by a high ridge, the south extremity of which forms the north side of Hoy Sound; while its entrance is protected partly by the island of Graemsay, which lies midway in the sound, and partly by a ness or point of land which stretches from the west. On the east it is shielded by two small islands, and beyond these, in a roadstead, is excellent anchorage for shipping. It was formerly not uncommon in the spring months to see in these havens upwards of 50 large vessels on Strood, pa. and ancient to., N.W. Kent, separated from Rochester and Chatham by the Medway, over which there is a fine iron bridge of three arches; ac. 1,340. The church of St. Nicholas, originally E. Eng., was rebuilt (with the exception of the tower) in 1812. The church of the eccl. pa. of St. Mary the Virgin is in E. Eng. style. The poor have £18 15s. yearly in bread. There are Congregational and Methodist chapels. Here is a branch of the Rochester Conservative Club. Brickmaking is carried on on a large scale, and here are extensive oil-seed-crushing mills. The manor was given by Henry II. to the Knights Templar, who had a preceptory at S.; part of the original building, now called Temple Farm, still remains.

Stroud, pa., mkt. and U. to., head of petty sess. div. and Co. Co. dis., Mid Glouc., 10 S. of Gloucester; ac. 3,731. S. is a long and straggling to., built upon the side of a hill and commanding varied and extensive views, and the neighbourhood comprises many points of interest. The pa. church of St. Lawrence, rebuilt (with the exception of the tower and spire) in 1868, is in the Gothic style of the 14th cent. There are also eccl. pas. with modern churches, a Catholic church with a convent, a Jewish synagogue, and places of worship for various Nonconformist bodies. The town hall, in the market place, was erected at the end of the 16th cent.; the County Court and the meetings of the Local Board of Health are held here. The Free Library (1888) contains news and reading-rooms. The Subscription Rooms (1834) include a large room used for lectures, public meetings, and entertainments. The S. Club occupy the remainder of the premises. Badbrook Hall (1869) includes a large room for lectures and concerts, and has also a good reading-room. Here the Conservative Association has its offices and holds its meetings. The General Hospital was erected in 1875. The charities, amounting to about £600 a year, are applied to the repairs of the pa. church and the education and maintenance of poor boys and the relief of the poor. The market is held on Fridays; there is also a monthly market on the third Tuesday in the month, and two annual fairs are held on May 10 and August 21. The district of S. is the principal seat of the West of England cloth manufacture, the goods produced here being widely celebrated. There are a large number of very extensive mills, employing several thousand hands; the broadcloth produced is celebrated all over the world. Scarlet dyeing has also, from time immemorial, been a speciality of this valley, the water being believed to possess some peculiarity which imparts a tone of colour unequalled else-

Stroud Green, eccl. pa., forming north suburb of London, pa. of Hornsey (q.v.), E. Middx., 4 N. of St. Paul's. The dis. occupies the high ground immediately south-west of Finsbury Park. Trinity Church (1880) is a brick structure in E. Eng. style. There are Baptist and Congregational chapels.

Stroudwater Canal, Mid Glouces., runs 8 W. and N.W. from Stroud to Framilode on the Severn. It was constructed in 1775, and has a fall of 802 ft. The S. Canal communicates with the Thames and Severn Canal, which runs E. to Lechlade.

Stroxton, pa. and vil., S.W. Lincs., 4 S.W. of Grantham; ac. 972; soil creach, overlying stone. The church of All Saints (restored 1874–75) is Norm. and E. Eng. Several small carved dedication crosses belonging to the old fabric have been replaced nearly in the position which they previously occupied; the chancel retains a piscina, and on the north side an arched aumbry of E. Eng. date. A fine E. Eng. tombstone with raised floriated cross, found near the west end of the church, has been placed on a slab near the porch; in the transept is a mural monument with arms to William Blyth, of S. (1644).

Nicholas (restored 1883), a building of Purbeck stone, is a nearly perfect specimen of the Norm. period. The erection of the tower, which has never been finished, is supposed to have been relinquished through the sinking of the chancel arch. The east window, of three small lancet lights, is apparently of the Dec. period. During the restoration traces were found of what appears to have been Saxon work. On S. Common are a number of barrows, and a very remarkable insulated block of ironstone, called Agglestone, about 80 ft. in circumference and nearly 20 ft. in height, surrounded by an artificial morass; Puckstone is another similar curiosity.

Studley (1), pa. and vil. on the Arrow, W. Warws., 15 S. of Birmingham; ac. 4,083; soil and subsoil marl. The Dec. church of St. Mary the Virgin (restored 1888) was given to the canons of S. on the foundation of the Augustinian priory in the reign of Stephen by Peter Corbicon or De Studley. In the north wall is a richly-worked semicircular-headed doorway of the 12th cent., belonging to the ancient Norm. church. The south aisle has an E. Eng. doorway, and on the south side a 15th-cent. doorway gives access to the chancel from without. During the restoration the stone steps to the rood-loft were discovered in the wall, and also a stone carved with the Holy Lamb and flag. There are a number of 15th-, 16th-, and 17th-cent. monuments. The Roman Catholic church of St. Mary was erected 1851–53, in Gothic style. The Wesleyans and Baptists have chapels. A fair is held on Sept. 28. The trade consists almost exclusively in the manufacture of ordinary and sewing-machine needles, bodkins, fishing tackle, and fish-hooks. There are a number of charities. S. Castle, a modern mansion standing in a spacious park, is a seat.

Studley (2), eccl. pa., pa. of Trowbridge (q.v.), W. Wilts., adjoining Trowbridge on the south. The church of St. John is a plain stone building in Gothic style. The Baptists have a chapel.

Studley Royal, or Studley Hall, seat of the Marquis of Ripon, pa. of and about 2 S.W. from Ripon (q.v.), W.R. Yorks. The house, rebuilt in the 18th cent., is a stone mansion; various improvements and alterations have been made during the 19th cent., and attached to the house is a private chapel. A fragment of the ancient edifice, dating from the 15th cent., still remains. The park contains many fine trees, and a noble avenue of limes upwards of a mile in length, leading from the lodge to the church of St. Mary. [ALDFIELD-CUM-STUDLEY.] The beautiful pleasure grounds occupy a portion of the valley of the Skell Beck; the sides of the ravine enclosing the grounds are densely covered with fine evergreen and deciduous shrubs, and contain some magnificent specimens of coniferæ. The Skell Beck, which flows through the valley, has been in places expanded into fine sheets of water, on the margin of which are antique statues; lower down, the stream is bordered with balustraded terraces and, finally descending abruptly in a broad cascade, forms a large lake shut in by lofty trees. Splendid lawns surround the waters, and there are delightful walks by the stream and through the woods. [FOUNTAINS ABBEY.]

The Perp. church of St. Mary was built by one of the last abbots of Glastonbury in 1486 (of the old church, anterior to 1486, there is no existing record); it was in 1827 nearly rebuilt and considerably enlarged. There are also Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist chapels. There is a market every alternate Monday, chiefly for cattle; repository sales are held on Mondays, fairs on May 12 and Oct. 24. There is a charity of £16 5s. yearly, partly applied to the apprenticing of a boy and girl and partly given to the poor attending the pa. church; other charities, amounting to about £20 a year, are for distribution. Here are the ruins of an old Saxon castle, within a vallum and ditch, seated on a hill; the ground-plan was in the form of the letter D.

Sturston (1), pa. and vil., S.W. Norf., 6 S.W. of Watton; ac. 2,000; soil light, overlying marl and in places clay. The church of the Holy Cross is now in ruins.

Sturston (2), tp., pa. of and adjoining Ashbourne (q.v.), W. Derbys.; ac. 807. S. Hall, a Tudor structure, is now occupied as a farmhouse. The Grove is a seat.

Sturton (1), or Sturton-le-Steeple, pa. and vil., N. Notts., 6½ N.E. of E. Retford; ac. 4,034; soil clayey, overlying marl. The church of St. Peter is of various periods. In the south aisle is a piscina; on the north side of the transept is a recumbent stone effigy of the 13th cent., but much mutilated, and on the south side a monument to Lady Earle (d. 1699). Within the chancel rails are two tombs—on the north side that of Colonel Francis Thornhagh, a Parliamentary officer, killed at the battle of Preston (1648), and on the south side that of his father. There is a Wesleyan chapel. The charities amount to about £20 yearly. S. High House is a seat.

Sturton (2), tp., pa. of Stow (q.v.), W. Lincs., 8¾ S.E. of Gainsborough; ac. 2,033. St. Hugh's mission church (1879) is a building in the Lancet style. There are also Wesleyan, Primitive Methodist, and Plymouth Brethren chapels, and a meeting-house belonging to the Society of Friends. Bricks and tiles are made.

adjoining the castle being founded in the same year. This was the only chapel in England not closed in the reign of Queen Elizabeth.

Styal, ha., pa. of Wilmslow (q.v.), N.E. Chesh., 1½ W. of Handforth. A chapel-of-ease was erected in 1835–36. There are also Unitarian and Wesleyan chapels. Quarry Bank Cotton Mill, on the Bollin, is one of the earliest mills of this kind in the country, having been started in 1784; it has been in continuous work for over a century under four generations of the same family. Norcliffe Hall and Quarry Bank House are seats.

Stybarrow Crag, a fine crag overlooking Ullswater, N.W. Westmd. It commands a very fine view of the lake, though not of itself any considerable height.

Stydd (anciently "Stedde"), formerly a separate tp., now amalgamated with Yeaveley (q.v.), pa. of Shirley (q.v.), S.W. Derbys., 1 S.W. of Yeaveley. In the reign of Richard I. Ralph le Salter gave the Benedictine hermitage here to the Knights Hospitaller. There are still considerable remains of the chapel; there is also, close to the chapel wall, a font of the same period, and on the sward a coffin-slab incised with a floriated cross and a sword. The Hall adjoins these ruins, and was at one time moated; it was restored some years since, and is now occupied as a farmhouse.

Styford, tp. on the north bank of the Tyne, pa. of Bywell St. Andrew (q.v.), S. Northumb., 2 N. of Riding Mill; ac. 1,014. S. Hall is a seat.

Sty Head Pass, mountain pass (1,600 ft. above sea level) connecting Wastdale with the Rosthwaite Valley, S. Cumb. It is one of the most celebrated passes in the English Lake district, being a part of one of the routes up Scafell Pike. The ascent is easy.

Sty Head Tarn, a small tarn near the head of Sty Head Pass (q.v.), S. Cumb., 1,430 ft. above the level of the sea.

Styrrup, tp., pa. of Blyth (q.v.), N. Notts., 6 N.E. by N. of Worksop; ac. 3,046.

Subberthwaite, tp., pa. of and 6 N. from Ulverston (q.v.), N. Lancs.; ac. 1,237. A great quantity of the land is waste, with rocks and woodland. Here are slate quarries.

Subulter, pa., Duhallow bar., N. co. Cork, Ir., 3 E. of Kanturk; ac. 741.

Suck, river, cos. Roscom. and Galway, Ir., rises in Castlereagh bar., co. Roscom., near the border of co. Mayo, and flows E. to the to. of Castlereagh, and then S.E. to Ballymoe. Here it begins to form the boundary between cos. Roscom. and Galway, which it divides for the remainder of its course, excepting in the neighbourhood of Athleague, where it diverges into Athlone bar., co. Roscom. From Ballymoe it runs S.E. along the verge of Ballymoe bar., then S. by E. along that of Athlone bar. to Ballinasloe, after which its course is S.E. and E. by S. to the Shannon and Shannonbridge. Its length is about 60 miles.

Suckley, pa., tp., and vil., W. Worcs., 10 S.W. of Worcester; ac. of pa. 5,179, of tp. 2,692; soil loam, clay, and marl, overlying clay and marl. The church of St. John the Baptist was pulled down in 1879 and a new building erected in Dec. style, which contains the founder's tomb and a piscina from the old church; a brass commemorates Thomas Littleton (d. 1665); the font is Norm. There are several charities. S. Court is a seat.

Sudborough, pa. and vil., N. Northants, 3 N.W. of Thrapston; ac. 1,781; soil mixed, overlying clay and limestone with much ironstone. The church of All Saints (restored 1891) is E. Eng., Dec., and Perp.; in the north transept is a mural brass to William West (d. 1390) and Joan his wife (d. 1415), with eight children; under an arch in the north wall of the chancel is an ancient altar-tomb of stone, with the brass effigy of a knight in armour dating from the 16th cent., said to represent a De Vere.

Sudbourne, pa. and vil. between the navigable rivers Alde and Ore, S.E. Suff., 12 E. of Woodbridge; ac. 5,349; soil various, overlying sand and clay. The church of All Saints (restored 1879) is Perp.; the chancel contains a monument to Sir Michael Stanhope, a former owner of the land, and beneath the communion table is a vault belonging to the Hertford family. During the restoration several interesting discoveries were made, including upwards of 2,600 coins belonging to the reigns of King John, Henry II. and III., and the Lion King of Scotland, found in the nave immediately under the floor; a piscina in the chancel, and some old tiles of Suffolk ware which formerly formed the paving of the chancel; a fine Norm. doorway was also discovered plastered over on the south side. Beds of oysters have been found in making excavations near the church. S. Hall is a seat.

Sudbrook (1), vil. on the Severn, pa. of Portskewett (q.v.), S. Mon., 4¼ S.W. of Chepstow. It was once a distinct pa., and there are the ruins of a small pa. church on a cliff overlooking the Bristol Channel. There is a ship-building yard.

Sudbrook (2), ha., pa. of Ancaster (q.v.), S.W. Lincs., about 7 N.E. of Grantham.

Sudbrooke, pa., Mid Lincs., 5 N.E. of Lincoln; ac. 851; soil heavy loam, overlying clay. The church of St. Edward (rebuilt 1860) is in Norm. style. Some fragments of the former church of Late Norm. date have been carefully preserved. The charities amount to a little over £20 a year. S. Holm is a seat.

Sudbury (1), pa., mun. bor., U. and mkt. to. (TH. & S.), and head of Co. Co. dis., S. Suff., 16 S. of Bury St. Edmunds; ac. 1,170. In the Saxon Chronicle S. is written Suthberie (or south-borough), a name it is supposed to have obtained in order to distinguish it from Norwich. It was once a place of note, and one of the first towns in which Edward III. settled the Flemings, in order to instruct his subjects in the woollen manufacture. A church and priory, of which few vestiges remain, were erected here in 1272 for Dominicans. The Knights Hospitaller had a house near the bridge, with the tolls of which it was endowed, and near the to. was a Benedictine cell, attached to Westminster Abbey. S. sent two members to Parliament until 1844, when it was disfranchised. All Saints' Church (restored 1882) was, from 1150 to the Reformation, appropriated to the abbey of St. Alban; it is a fine Perp. structure of flint and rubble, and has a chaste and elegant pulpit (1490) and rich parclose screens; the stained glass in all the S. churches was destroyed by Dowsing in 1643. St. Gregory and St. Peter form a united eccl. pa. St. Gregory's Church (restored 1854), once collegiate, is Perp.; the font, which is modern, has a cover of rich pre-reformation carved tabernacle work; the head of Simon Theobald, Archbishop of Canterbury, who was beheaded by the rabble in Wat Tyler's insurrection in 1381, is preserved here. St. Peter's Church (restored 1854) is also Perp. The Catholics have a church and a convent, and there are also Congregational, Baptist, and Primitive Methodist chapels, and the Society of Friends have a place of meeting. St. Leonard's Hospital, founded in 1867, is supported by voluntary contributions and an old charity for the relief of lepers. The town hall and the Corn Exchange are substantial buildings. Fairs were held in March and July, but have been abolished. The Literary and Mechanics' Institution (1834) has two large reading-rooms and an excellent library. The Victoria Hall, a building of red brick in Prince Street, is licensed for stage plays. There are Conservative and Liberal Clubs. Here are cocoa-nut matting and weaving manufactories, flour mills, malt and lime kilns. Malting is most extensively carried on. There is a landing quay near the railway station, now seldom used, the railway having superseded water carriage. Many of the inhabitants are employed in the manufactures, chiefly of silk, velvet, stays, and mats. Thomas Gainsborough, R.A., the celebrated artist, was born at S. in 1727.

Sudbury (2), pa. and vil., N. Derbys., 10 N.E. of Burton; ac. 3,546; soil light loam, overlying gravel. The church of All Saints (restored 1873–86) is Late Perp. with some Norm. and E. Eng. details. It contains a fine monument to the builder of S. Hall, and many others to the Vernon and Montgomery family, most of them kept in a chapel erected at the east end of the north aisle; the oldest of these are the recumbent effigies of two females, probably of the 13th cent., their wimpled heads resting on diamond-shaped pillows, and holding hearts in their hands; these are supposed to represent ladies of the Montgomery family. In 1850 a memorial window was placed in the chancel by H.M. the Queen and the Prince Consort to George Edward Anson, Esq., C.B., many years Keeper of the Privy Purse to Her Majesty, and a native of S. There is a reading-room and library. Charities amount to about £50 yearly. S. Hall is a fine Elizabethan mansion with a magnificent gallery, containing a valuable library. The adjacent park, extending over about 600 ac., is well stocked with deer. There is a superb view across the valley of the Dove to Needwood Forest.

Sudbury (3), ha. with railway station, pa. of Harrow (q.v.), Mid Middx., 7½ N.W. of London. There is a hall for Evangelistic meetings. The Home here in connection with the National Refuge Institution for destitute girls, known as S. Hall, was opened in 1873. S. Lodge is a seat.

Sudbury (or South) Division, one of the five parl. divs. of Suffolk. It returns one member.

Sudbury St. Bartholomew, pa. within the to. of Sudbury (q.v.), S. Suff.; ac. 159.

Sudeley Manor, pa. on the Isborne, N. Glouc. 8 N.E. of Cheltenham; ac. 2,622; soil stonebrash overlying clay. The church of St. Mary (restored 1858–63) is Perp.; the church was desecrated by the Parliamentary forces, and then was allowed to fall into decay; a costly modern monument commemorates Queen Catherine Parr, who died at S. Castle (1548) and was buried here, the funeral service being read by Miles Coverdale. George sixth Lord Chandos (d. 1654), is also buried here. S. Castle was first built in the reign of Stephen and was reconstructed on a great scale by Ralph Boteler, temp. Henry VI.; in 1469 Lord Sudeley surrendered it to Edward IV., and, after passing through various hands, it was granted by Edward VI. to Sir Thomas Seymour, who married Queen Catherine Parr. During the Civil War the building was almost ruined; it was largely restored in 1840. It contains some good portraits and other pictures, and some interesting pieces of furniture; the old pleasaunce was discovered in 1850, and now forms part of the garden; many Roman remains have been found in the neighbourhood.

Suffield, pa., N. Norf., 3½ N.W. of North Walsham; ac. 1,447; soil mixed, overlying clay and gravel. The church of St. Margaret (restored 1879) is in Gothic style.

Suffield-with-Everley, tp., pa. of and 1½ E. from Hackness (q.v.), N.R. Yorks.; ac. 1,911.

Suffolk, one of the largest English shires, the twelfth in size, is a maritime co. on the east coast, and the most easterly co. in England. It derives its name from having been occupied by the South folk of the East English, who established their kingdom here, the North folk occupying the other part of their kingdom, whence its name of Norfolk. S. is of a crescent shape, joining on to the south of the oval of Norfolk; its sea-coast is low, and forms its eastern and south-eastern border. On the north it is divided from Norfolk by the Yare, Waveney, and Little Ouse; on the west the Lark separates it from Cambs.; and on the south the Stour is the boundary between it and Essex. The greatest length is nearly 70 miles, and the greatest breadth is 52 miles; the area is 944,060 ac. The extreme north-west of the co. runs into the Fen district in the valley of the Lark, near Mildenhall. There are low chalk hills between Thetford and Newmarket, forming a very poor barren soil. The chalk continues eastward, but its long easterly slope is overlaid by many beds of clay and sand of recent age, so that S. has a soil of an extremely varied nature, admitting of the cultivation in some part or other of nearly every product which will grow in our island, and requiring a thorough knowledge of agriculture on the part of the farmer in order to crop each district to the best advantage. The shore is mostly low and marshy, and defended by sandbanks and crag cliffs. The rivers afford convenience for agricultural purposes and for navigation. The northern districts are supplied by the Waveney and the Yare. The north-eastern district is watered by the Little Ouse and Lark, which are feeders of the Great Ouse and run down to the port of Lynn. The southern border is supplied by the Stour and the Orwell, or Gipping. Other streams are the Deben, the Alde, or Ore, and the Blyth. Indeed, most of the tos. in S. have river navigation, and there is hardly a part of the co. 10 miles from a navigable stream. For East S. the chief places of trade are Harwich, Ipswich, Lowestoft, and Yarmouth, the first and last places lying out of the shire. Aldeburgh, Southwold, Felixstowe, and Lowestoft are frequented as watering-places, and many of the small tos. on the coast are fishing stations. The railway communication is afforded by the several lines of the Great Eastern system. Communication with the Midland counties and the North is effected by Peterborough. All over the co. are good roads. The productions of the co. are cement stone (for Roman cement), lime, marl, whiting, bricks, salt, corn, malt, hops, flax, and cattle; the breeds of horses and pigs have some repute. The fisheries are on a considerable scale. The herring fishery begins about a fortnight before Michaelmas and lasts till Martinmas; before the commencement of the herring season many of the fishermen are employed in the mackerel fishery, Lowestoft being the chief fishing town and of rising importance. The tillage of S. is in a high condition, though the soil generally is not rich, and is susceptible of great improvement. It is estimated that there are about 46,000 ac. of rich loam, 80,000 ac. of marsh land, 450,000 ac. of heavy loam or wet clay, 150,000 ac. of sand on a subsoil of crag, and occasionally rich, and 100,000 ac. of poor sand, on chalk. The tillage, of course, varies according to the nature of the soil; but the S. farmers bear a high character for practical and scientific skill in all departments. The makers of agricultural implements at Ipswich, Bury St. Edmunds, Leiston, Peasenhall, and Stowmarket have great reputation; railway plant of every description is produced at Ipswich. Artificial manures are extensively manufactured at Ipswich and Stowmarket; coprolites are largely worked in S., and used in the manufacture of manures; at Stowmarket is a gun-cotton manufactory, and at Brandon gun-flints are produced from flint, which is considered more durable and certain in its fire than any other; extensive brick and tile works are at Stowmarket and Woolpit; malting is carried on in the co. very extensively. The other manufactures are small, and include cotton, silk, velvet, flax, linen, woollen, horsehair seating, cocoanut-fibre mats and rugs, and rabbit-skin dressing; coach- and ship-building is likewise carried on. The mun. bors. are Aldeburgh, Beccles, Bury St. Edmunds, Eye, Ipswich, Lowestoft, Southwold, and Sudbury. Other tos. are Brandon, Bungay, Clare, Debenham, Framlingham, Hadleigh, Halsworth, Haverhill, Lavenham, Mildenhall, Saxmundham, and Stowmarket. Most of the co. is occupied geologically by the chalk formation, part of the great band which extends from Salisbury Plain to the Norfolk coast. The Lower Chalk forms the western slope of the chalk escarpment. A line drawn from Sudbury through Ipswich to the coast near Dunwich will mark the south-east limit of the Upper Chalk. North and west of this line are numerous exposures of the rock in the many pits opened to get the chalk, which is burnt for lime, and the flints, which are used for building purposes. Coming to the Tertiary Period, in the Eocene formation the Thanet beds can be traced a little north of Hadleigh, and at Ipswich. The Reading beds are mottled clays and sands of no great thickness; they are worked for bricks at several places between Ipswich and Sudbury. The London Clay in this co. is seen in the tract of land between the estuaries of the Stour and Orwell, around Neyland, Leyham, Stoke, Stratford, etc.; it is also exposed on each side of the estuary of the Deben, and from thence northwards forms the lower part of the cliffs to a little beyond Orfordness. In this district no beds occur of Upper Eocene or of Miocene age; thus the Pliocene strata rest upon the London Clay, or, where they overlap that formation, upon the chalk. These Pliocene beds occur (in England) only in Suffolk, Norfolk, and Essex, where they are known as the Crag (Celtic creggan = "a shell"), being shelly sands containing a large percentage of mollusca of still living species. At the base of the Crag and resting upon the London Clay is a very remarkable stratum, in thickness from 1 to 3 ft., containing coprolites, rolled and polished teeth, and bones of Mastodon, Rhinoceros, Tapir, Hyæna, etc. Above this come the Coralline Crag, the Red Crag, and the Norwich Crag. To the Quarternary period belongs the Forest Bed of Kessingland, which can also be traced in the cliffs at Corton and Hopton, and round the coast of Norfolk. This bed has yielded many bones and teeth of Rhinoceros etruscus, Mammoth, Stag, Irish Elk, etc. Recent deposits include river gravels, the fen beds near Mildenhall, and the extensive deposits of sand, shingle, and mud which form low flat tracts near the coast. Many relics of prehistoric man have been found in the co. Rude palæolithic implements have been found in old river-gravels at Brandon and many other places. Of the Neolithic or Newer Stone Age, numerous celts, arrow-heads, flakes, etc., beautifully fashioned out of flint, and often polished by rubbing, have been met with. In pre-Norman times S. was frequently invaded and ravaged by the Northmen, but since the Conquest its history has not been marked by many incidents of great interest. Perhaps the most noteworthy are the defeat of the Dutch by the English fleet off Lowestoft (1665) and in Southwold (or Sole) Bay (1671). The co. is very rich in antiquities, the earliest being the Roman castle at Burgh; the churches, mostly Perp., exhibit much beautiful flint work and fine carved roofs, and there are many old halls, not a few of which are moated. For parl. purposes the co. has five divs.—Eye, Lowestoft, Stowmarket, Sudbury, and Woodbridge—each with one member.

Sufton, ha., pa. of Mordiford (q.v.), S. Herefords., about 4 S.E. of Hereford.

Sugarloaf, eminence (1,954 ft.), pas. of Llangenau, S.E. Brecons., and Llanwenarth Citra, N.W. Mon., 3 N.N.W. of Abergavenny. From the summit there are wide and picturesque views.

Sugar Loaf (1), detached rock (150 ft.) on east side of Stacka Bay, S.W. I. of M., 1¼ S.W. of Port St. Mary. The rock lies ¾ E.N.E. of Spanish Head Its outline is very peculiar.

Sugar Loaf (2). [HANJAGUE.]

Sugar Loaf (3), mountain (1,187 ft.), S.W. co. Cork, Ir., about 8 w. of Bantry.

Sugar Loaf (4), hill, E. co. Waterf., Ir., 4 s.w. of Waterford. On the summit are the ruins of a church and also a cromlech.

Sugar Loaf (5). [SUILVEN.]

Sugar Loaf, Great, mountain (1,659 ft.), N.E. co. Wick., Ir., about 4 s.w. of Bray. It is easy of ascent, and commands a magnificent panoramic view. In clear weather the Welsh hills can be readily seen.

Sugar Loaf, Little, mountain (1,120 ft.), N.E. co. Wick., Ir., about 3 s.w. of Bray.

Sugley (1), eccl. pa. and tp. on the north bank of the Tyne, pa. of Newburn (q.v.), S. Northumb., 4 w. of Newcastle-on-Tyne; ac. 61. The church of the Holy Saviour was erected in 1836–37. The Tyne Ironworks occupy nearly the whole of the tp.

Sugley (2), ha., pa. of Horsley (q.v.), Mid Gloucs., about 5 s. of Stroud.

Sugnall, vil., pa. of Eccleshall (q.v.), W. Staffs., 6 w. of Stone. S. House is a seat.

Sugwas Court. [EATON BISHOP.]

Suilven, or Sugar Loaf, mountain (2,399 ft.), pa. of Assynt (q.v.), S.W. Suths., Sc. The ascent is difficult. The mountain has been called "the Little Matterhorn."

Suir, river, cos. Tip., Waterf., and Kilk., Ir., rises in the Devil's Bit Mountains, Ikerrin bar., N. co. Tip., Ir., 6 N.W. of Templemore, and runs a few miles E., thence S. by Templemore to Thurles, S.S.W. from Thurles to Golden, and S. by E. and S S.E. from Golden to the Waterf. border, where it suddenly turns N., forming for some miles the boundary between Iffa and Offa West bar. and co. Waterf. On arriving at the verge of Iffa and Offa East bar. it again forms an abrupt curve flowing due E. between Iffa and Offa East bar. on the north and co. Waterf. on the south, past the tos. of Clonmel and Carrick-on-Suir. After leaving Carrick it follows a very irregular course before joining the Barrow at the head of Waterford Harbour, its general direction being E. by S. At Waterford quays extend along its banks for a considerable distance. The most picturesque part of the river is in the neighbourhood of Clonmel, where its banks are well wooded and have many pleasant country seats. Its length is about 85 miles.

Suisgill Burn, stream, rises on the east border of Suths., Sc., and flows in a S.W. direction for about 4½ miles to the Helmsdale, which it joins about 3 N. of Kildonan.

Sul-, for places not found under this spelling, see also SULL-.

Sulber, limestone plateau, W.R. Yorks., 2 W.N.W. of Horton-in-Ribblesdale.

Sulby (1), pa., Mid Northants, 7 S.W. of Market Harborough; ac. 1,565; soil clayey, overlying clay and gravel. Here was once an abbey (founded 1155), the only remaining relic of which is a tomb. S. Hall, standing in a well-wooded park, is a seat.

Sulby (2), vil., pa. of Lezayre (q.v.), N. I. of M., 4 W. of Ramsey. The church is dedicated to St. Stephen.

Sulby (3), river, N. I. of M., rises on north slope of Snaefell, and runs N. to Sulby vil., and thence E. to the sea at Ramsey. The river traverses a beautiful glen, shut in by lofty granite cliffs and beautifully wooded. The most picturesque part of the glen, containing some fine waterfalls, has lost much of its old character by being converted into a pleasure-ground. The length of the river is about 10 miles.

Sulby Glen. [GLEN MOOAR (1).]

Sule, islet off north coast of Scotland, 38 N.E. by E. of Cape Wrath. The islet is about ¼ mile long and less than ¼ mile broad; its highest point is 50 ft. above the sea. It is frequented by innumerable sea-birds. A lighthouse, built 1894, has a fixed light, visible 18 miles.

Sulgrave, pa. and vil., S. Northants, 2 N.W. of Helmdon; ac. 1,954; soil various. The river Tove or Towe rises in this pa. The church of St. James (restored 1885) contains a brass to Lawrence Washington (d. 1584) with effigies of himself, Anne his wife, and eleven children. They were the ancestors of George Washington. There are Baptist and Wesleyan chapels. The charities amount to £45 16s. yearly and are partly distributed in money and kind, the rest being used for education and apprenticing.

Sulham, pa. and picturesque vil., Mid Berks., 4 W. of Reading; ac. 699; soil sand and loam, overlying clay and gravel. The church of St. Nicholas (rebuilt 1838) is in E. Eng. style. Purley Hall and S. House are seats.

Sulhampstead Abbots, pa., tp., and vil., S. Berks., 5 S.W. of Reading; ac. of pa. 1,926, of tp. 1,417; soil loam and clay, overlying clay. The E. Eng. church of St. Mary (restored 1878–79) contains a brass to Ralph Eyer, rector (1521). There is a Congregational church. S. House is a seat.

Sulhampstead Banister, pa., tp. and vil., W. Berks., 5½ S.W. of Reading; ac. of pa. 1,132, of tp. 555; soil loam and clay, overlying gravel. The church of St. Michael is Norm.

Sulhampstead Banister Lower End, tp., pa. of Sulhampstead Banister (q.v.), W. Berks., 5½ S.W. of Reading; ac. 577.

Sulhampstead Banister Upper End, the former name of the tp. of Sulhampstead Banister (q.v.).

Sullam, ha., pa. of Northmavine (q.v.), E. Shetld., Sc., about 9 N.W. of Voe.

Sullane, river, West Muskerry bar., Mid co. Cork, Ir.; rises in the Derrynasaggait Mountains, and runs 14 E.S.E., joining the Lee a short distance above Macroom.

Sullington, pa., S.W. Sussex, 9 N. of Worthing, on the road to Petworth; ac. 2,340; soil and subsoil various. The church of St. Mary is Norm., with later additions; the chancel retains sedilia and a piscina; and the church contains a fine 14th-cent. stone coffin, and the effigy of a knight. Sandgate, in Elizabethan style, is a seat.

Sullom, or Sullam Voe, a sea-loch on the east coast of the Shetland mainland, Sc.; it runs inland for 8 miles in a S.W. direction, between the pas. of Delting and Northmavine (q.v.). The ha. of Sullam is on the Voe.

Sully (1), pa. on the Bristol Channel, S.E. Glamorgs., 6 S.S.W. from Cardiff; ac. 1,387. The pa. includes the islands of Barry (q.v.) and Sully (q.v.). The church of St. John the Baptist is an ancient Gothic structure, but it has been much modernised; there is an E. Eng. piscina and memorials of the family of Llwen-Madoc. Near the church are some remains of a castle dating from the 12th or 13th cent. Dean Conybeare, the eminent geologist, held the living of S. from 1823 to 1836. S. House is a seat.

Sully (2), small island, pa. of Sully (q.v.), off south coast of Cardigs. The island contains a diminutive camp, said to be of Norse origin.

Sumburgh Head, the southernmost point of the Shetland Isles, Sc.; it has a lighthouse, with light visible 24 miles, and serves to warn vessels off S. Roost to the immediate south, where there are dangerous tidal currents.

Summerbridge, ha., pa. of Kirkby Malzeard (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., about 1½ N.W. of Hartwith. A bridge here crosses the Nidd.

Summercourt, vil., pa. of and ¾ S. from St. Enoder (q.v.), Mid Cornw. An annual fair for cattle and horses is held in Sept.

Summerfield, anciently Southmere, pa., for civil purposes connected with Docking (q.v.), N.W. Norf., 1½ N.W. of Docking. The foundations of the church can still be traced.

Summerhill (1), vil., pa. of New Machar (q.v.), E. Abers., Sc., near Aberdeen. There is a church.

Summerhill (2), vil., pa. of Laracor (q.v.), S. co. Meath, Ir., 6½ S.E. of Trim. The vil. forms a square, in the centre of which is a green, environed by fine trees. Fairs are held in April, June, Sept. and Nov.

Summerhouse, tp., pa. of Gainford (q.v.), S. Dur., 6 N.W. of Darlington; ac. 800. The Wesleyans have a chapel.

Summerhouse Hill, or Lyn Cliff, hill, N. Dev., about 1 S. of Lynmouth, between the East Lyn and West Lyn valleys. A summerhouse which formerly stood on the summit has now almost disappeared. A fine view is obtained from the top.

Summer Isles, group of islands at the north entrance of Loch Broom, Ross and Crom., Sc. Tanera More and Tanera Beg are the largest, and of these only Tanera More is inhabited. Their bare, wintry aspect somewhat belies their popular name.

Summerseat, vil. with railway station, pa. of and 3 N.W. from Bury (q.v.), S.E. Lancs. There is a Wesleyan chapel, and also some mills.

Summerstown, eccl. pa., pa. of Wandsworth (q.v.), N.E. Surrey, 2 N.W. of Tooting Graveney. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

Summertown, eccl. pa., pa. of and adjoining Oxford St. Giles (q.v.), Mid Oxon. The church of St. John the Baptist is in E. Eng. style.

Summerville, fishing vil., pa. of Corbally (q.v.), S.E. co. Waterf., Ir., 7 S. of Waterford.

Sunart, dis., pa. of Ardnamurchan (q.v.), N. Args., Sc. It is bounded on the north by Loch Shiel, on the south by Loch Sunart, on the east by Ardgour, and on the west by Ardnamurchan.

Sunart, Loch, an inlet of the sea, Args., Sc., running inland from the Sound of Mull for 20 miles in an easterly direction to within 5 miles of Loch Linnhe. It is about 2 miles wide in most parts. The scenery is of considerable beauty.

Sunbegin, or Sunbiggin, ha. at the foot of a lofty scar, pa. of and 3 E. from Orton (q.v.), Mid Westmd. Here are two burial mounds.

Sunbury (in Domesday "Suneberie"), pa. and vil. on the banks of the Thames, S.W. Middx., 5 W. of Kingston; ac. 2,624 and 36 water; soil loam, overlying gravel. The church of St. Mary is a plain brick edifice in the Byzantine or Romanesque style; in the church is a monument to the Lady Jane Coke (d. 1761), besides many mural tablets. The pa. has a Catholic church, and various Non-conformist places of worship. The fourth lock from London on the Thames is at this vil. The East London Waterworks Company have works here, with extensive filter beds and pumping works on the banks of the Thames. Kempton Park comprises about 500 ac., 58 of which are in the adjoining pa. of Hanworth; about 400 ac. are leased to the Kempton Park Race Company, and have been enclosed within a ring fence; extensive stands, stables, refreshment, telegraph, and other offices have been erected; the race ground is about five minutes' walk from the Sunbury station on the Thames Valley line.

Sunbury, Upper, eccl. pa., pa. of Sunbury (q.v.), S.W. Middx., about 5 W. of Kingston. The church of St. Saviour is a modern building.

Sun Corner, headland, I. of W., at the extreme west of the island, south of Alum Bay.

Suncroft, ha., pa. of Carn (q.v.), Mid co. Kildare, Ir., 4 S.E. of Kildare.

the Wear, N.E. Dur., 12 S.E. of Newcastle; ac. of pa. 220. The par. bor. includes the mun. bor., with the addition of Southwick, and returns two members. The area of the mun. bor. is—in the pa. of Bishopwearmouth, 2,668 ac.; in S., 220 ac.; and in Monkwearmouth, 837 ac.; total, 3,725 ac. S., its port and environs are considered places of great antiquity. Historians disagree as to its name and origin, but the name appears to mean the sundering of the new bor. from the rest of South Wearmouth of King Athelstan's grant. Very little mention is made of its progress until about the middle of the 12th cent., when there occurs a charter of privileges granted by Hugh Pudsey, Bishop of Durham (1153–97). S. is connected with Monkwearmouth by an iron bridge opened in 1796, and reconstructed under the direction of Mr. Robert Stephenson in 1858–59.

The corn market is held on Saturday (the general market day), 12 noon to 1 p.m., in the Garrison Drill Hall. In 1883 the whole of the open space was covered with a glass roof supported on iron pillars. The principal industry of S. consists of iron ship-building, carried on to an extent greater than in any other ports in the empire except those of the Tyne and the Clyde. The coal trade, for which S. has gained such celebrity, gives employment to a large number of persons. There are extensive anchor and chain-cable works, hemp and wire roperies, glass works (flint and bottle), iron and iron forge works, breweries, paper mills and lime kilns, the whole occupying without intermission the south and north banks of the river Wear from its mouth to Hylton, a distance of 5 miles. The principal imports other than coal, etc., are chalk,

The pa. church of the Holy Trinity is a plain brick structure in Classic style. Besides the pa. churches of Bishopwearmouth (q.v.) and Monkwearmouth (q.v.) there are several eccl. pas. with modern churches, Catholic churches, a Synagogue, and places of worship for the various bodies of Nonconformists. The Town Hall is a stone structure in the French Renaissance style; in addition to the usual public offices there is a suite of rooms for the School of Art, and a Sanitary Museum. The Borough Museum and Library is in Classic style; on the south side of the building is a winter garden. The building occupied by the Literary Society and Subscription Library comprises a lecture hall, reading-room, and library. The Custom House (1837) is approached from the High Street, and its front faces the Wear. In the Sailors' Home, a brick structure in Flemish style, are the Mercantile Marine and Board of Trade offices. The Public Baths and Washhouses are the property of the Corporation. The bor. has political and social clubs, theatres, and a workmen's hall. There are several hospitals, a Blind Institute, an Orphan Asylum, and several groups of almshouses, some of which are reserved for mariners or their widows.

loam, etc., esparto grass, flour, grain, hay, iron, ore, props, straw, tar and timber; the exports comprise bottles, cement, chemicals, earthenware, patent fuel, iron and lime. The port of S. is formed and protected by a pier on each side of the mouth of the Wear; the north pier, begun in 1706, was completed in 1840; at the end of the pier is a lighthouse. The south pier is a magnificent structure, forming an agreeable and popular promenade, the walk being raised about 2 ft. and protected by a handsome parapet; at the eastern extremity is an iron lighthouse. A new south pier is also in course of erection about 500 yds. south of the harbour entrance. At the south entrance to the South Dock are two other piers, approaching each other from the north-west and south-west nearly at a right angle, and forming a tidal harbour, the waterway at the entrance being about 100 yds. The South Docks, situated on the south side of the entrance to the Wear, and opened in 1850, are the most important docks on the north-east coast, and afford every convenience to the large number of vessels frequenting them. Extensions of a most important character have been made; beside the tidal and half tidal basins, there are three deep-water docks, grain warehouses, coal staiths, and good piers and covered sheds for the fishing trade. At S. are the barracks of the depôt battery, Western Division Royal Artillery; in the S. division there are eight coastguard stations, and here is a Volunteer Life Brigade with three lifeboats and life-saving rocket apparatus. In the People's or Mowbray Park is a monument, erected by public subscription, to General Sir Henry Havelock, Bart., K.C.B. (born at Ford Hall in this pa., April 5, 1795). There is also a marble statue to commemorate the calamity at the Victoria Hall, S., on June 16, 1883, by which 183 children lost their lives. The park was extended in 1866. Towards the north end is a piece of ornamental water, with islets in its midst. In the neighbourhood of S. are many handsome villa residences.

Sunderland Bridge, tp., pa. of St. Oswald (q.v.), Mid Dur., 8 N.E. of Bishop Auckland; ac. 1,442. The Wear is here crossed by a stone bridge of four arches.

Sunderland, North, eccl. pa., tp., and vil., on the east coast, pa. of Bamburgh (q.v.), N.E. Northumb., 8½ E. of Belford; ac. 1,222. The church of St. Paul is in Norm. style. There is an English Presbyterian church.

Sunderland Point, ha., pa. of and 7 S.W. from Lancaster (q.v.), N. Lancs.

Sunderlandwick, tp., pa. of Hutton Cranswick (q.v.), E.R. Yorks., 1 S. of Driffield; ac. 823. S. Hall, a building in the Italian style, is a seat.

Sunderlin, Shodie, or Seudy, lough, pa. of and 1 N. from Ballymore, W. co. Wstm., Ir. The lough is about ¾ mile long from north to south, and ½ mile wide. It is studded with several picturesque islets. During the civil war in 1641 the English occupied an important fortress on the shore of the lake, which was guarded on the land side by a broad moat, crossed by a drawbridge. At a later date it was held for a considerable time by the troops of James II., but eventually captured by Ginkell.

Sundon, pa. and vil., S. Beds., 5 N.W. of Luton; ac. 2,087; soil heavy. The church of St. Mary is chiefly Dec., the font is E. Eng., and there is an interesting Dec. chest; there are a few marble tablets, inscribed to Catherine Faldo (1697), Thomas Cheyne, Esq. (1717), Elizabeth Cheyne (1700), and Thomas Cheyne (1677–78); during some repairs to the floor of the south transept an arched vault was discovered, containing two velvet-covered coffins, respectively inscribed, on silver plates, to the Right Hon. William Clayton, Baron Sundon of Ardagh, and M.P. for St. Mawes (d. 1752); and to Lady Charlotte, his wife (d. 1741). There are Baptist and Wesleyan chapels.

Sundridge, pa. and vil. on the Darent, W. Kent, 3½ W. of Sevenoaks; ac. 4,141; soil variable, overlying clay. The church (dedication unknown) is E. Eng. and Perp.; in the chancel is a double piscina and an aumbry. Among the monuments are those to Roger Isly (d. 1429), Sir Thomas Isly (d. 1520), and in the churchyard the tomb of Beilby Porteus, Bishop of Chester (d. 1809); the brass chandelier in the nave, dated 1726, was the gift of Bishop Tenison. There are several charities, including one founded by Bishop Porteus. The Sevenoaks Union Workhouse is here. Combe Bank, a house in Italian style near a lake of 5 ac., and Woodside are seats.

Sundrum, estate with seat of the same name, pa. of Coylton (q.v.), W. Ayrs., Sc., 5½ E. of Ayr.

Sunfish Bank, fishing bank off the south-west coast of co. Mayo, Ir., about 24 S.W. of Achill Island. The sunfish, or basking shark, is caught here.

Sunilaws, ha. with railway station, pa. of Carham (q.v.), N. Northumb., 14½ N.W. of Wooler.

Sunk Island, pa. on the Humber, E.R. Yorks., 11 S.E. of Hedon; ac. 6,880; soil warp, overlying sand and silt. The former church of Holy Trinity was removed in 1877, and a new building erected in 1877, in Gothic style. There is a Wesleyan chapel.

Sunk Sand, shoal in North Sea off coast of Essex, 10 S.E. of Harwich. The shoal extends 10 N.E. and S.W., with a breadth varying from 1 to 2 miles, and has at its north extremity a fixed light, visible upwards of 10 miles. It is left partly bare at low water.

Sunlaws, estate with seat of the same name on the Teviot, pa. of and about 1 S.E. from Roxburgh (q.v.), N. Roxbs., Sc.

Sunningdale, eccl. pa. and vil., pa. of Old Windsor (q.v.), S.E. Berks. and N.W. Surrey. Holy Trinity Church (partly rebuilt in 1888) is in E. Eng. style. Here are Congregational and Baptist chapels. There are numerous seats in the neighbourhood.

Sunninghill, pa. and vil., E. Berks., 6 S.W. of Windsor; ac. 3,207; soil gravel and sand, overlying gravel, sand, and clay. The church of St. Michael and All Angels is in Perp. style. There is a Wesleyan chapel. At a place called "The Well" is a chalybeate spring, formerly much frequented. Buckhurst Park, Harewood Lodge, Silwood Park, S. Park, Tetworth Park, Tittenhurst Lodge, and Titness Park are seats.

Sunningwell, pa. and vil. by the Thames, N. Berks., 3 N. of Abingdon; ac. 1,331; soil clay, sand, and limestone, overlying gravel. The church of St. Leonard (restored 1877) retains the semi-octagonal Elizabethan porch erected by John Jewel, D.D., who was rector here about 1551 and afterwards Bishop of Salisbury (1559–71); there are some 17th-cent. memorials. S. has a charity of the yearly value of about £43.

Sunny Arbour Hill, eminence, pa. of Malen, S. I. of M., 3 N.N.E. of Castletown. On its brow the old and new roads from Douglas to Castletown unite. The hill commands a fine view of the coast between St. Anne's Head and Castletown.

Sunnybrow, eccl. pa. and ha., pas. of Crook and Willington (q.v.), Mid Dur., 7 S.W. of Durham.

The church of St. John (1886) is in E. Eng. style. There is a temperance hall, and a reading-room with library.

Sunnyside, ha., pa. of Brancepeth (q.v.), Mid Dur., about 3 N. of Crook. There are Primitive Methodist and Wesleyan Methodist chapels. In the vil. is a colliery.

Surbiton, to., pa. of and about 2 S. from Kingston-on-Thames (q.v.), N. Surrey. S. stretches along the bank of the Thames opposite the grounds of Hampton Court Palace, having a broad esplanade skirted by old elms along the river side. South of the railway the land rises, and from the summit of S. Hill some considerable views are obtained. S. has three eccl. pas. with modern churches, and there are Nonconformist chapels. The S. Cottage Hospital was established in 1870. Near S. Common was fought the last skirmish of the Royalists in favour of Charles I., in which Buckingham and Holland were defeated and Lord Francis Villiers was slain. Southborough Park is a seat; the house was built by Nash about 1800, and is pleasantly situated in a park.

Surfleet, pa. and vil. on the Glen, S.E. Lincs., 4 N. of Spalding; ac. 3,915; soil black loam, overlying clay and gravel. The church of St. Lawrence is Dec. and Perp.; the tower has sunk considerably and the spire is much out of the perpendicular. In the north wall of the chancel is the cross-legged effigy of a knight in armour, with the feet placed under a canopy in the east wall and said to represent one of the Cressys, of Cressy Hall. By the Glen and Welland, which unite in this pa., a small trade is carried on in coals, stone, and gravel. The salt water of the Welland is kept from mixing with the fresh waters of the Glen by stop-gates; there are three bridges across the Glen.

Surlingham, pa. and vil. in the vale of the navigable Yare, surrounded by marshes, S. Norf., 6 E. of Norwich; ac. 1,767; soil mixed, overlying gravel. Of the ancient church of St. Saviour only the tower and part of the walls, covered with ivy, now remain. The church of St. Mary is a small but ancient Gothic building. Here is a Wesleyan chapel. The fuel allotment of 23 ac. is let for £12 yearly. A broad has an area of about 70 ac., and there are brickfields in the pa.

Surrey, a metropolitan co. of England on the south bank of the Thames, having communication by means of that river with the sea. It is bounded on the north by the Thames (which separates it from Middlesex), on the east by Kent, on the south by Sussex, on the west by Hants, and on the north-west by Berks. and a small corner of Bucks. It is about 25 miles long from north to south, and 39 miles broad from east to west; ac. 485,128. The surface is in general not elevated, but undulating and diversified, presenting much pleasing scenery. Near the centre a range of hills stretches completely across the co. [DOWNS, NORTH AND SOUTH.] Along the south border a tract, called the Weald of S., unites with the Wealds of Kent and Sussex in forming a flat and very extensive plain, occasionally broken by low hills. The north-west is the least inviting part of the co., consisting principally of heath and moorland waste. The soils include all the principal varieties of plastic and alluvial clays, rich vegetable loam, calcareous earth, and almost barren heath; much of the alluvium, particularly in the vicinity of the metropolis, is occupied by orchards and market gardens, and whole farms are devoted to the raising of medical and aromatic plants. The loamy soils grow excellent barley, oats, and peas, and root-crops; the calcareous soils are chiefly remarkable for their excellent hops and valuable crops of clover. In the north-west of the co. are extensive nurseries. The quantity of grazing land is not extensive; the domestic animals are usually of the ordinary improved breeds. On the Downs many sheep are fed. A good deal of coppice wood and timber is planted. The manufactures in the metropolitan suburbs are extensive and various. On the mill-streams many factories are also established. Gloves and hosiery are made at Godalming; oil, paper, snuff, and sheet-iron, for which there are numerous mills, on the Mole and on the Wandle. There are also several large paper mills. Calico bleaching and printing, once carried on upon the Wandle, has to some extent fallen off. Brush- and broom-making is a considerable business, also paper-making, brewing, and malting. Brick-making, glass-working, cement-working, and pottery form other branches of business. Fullers' earth is dug at Nutfield and Reigate, these being the only places in England, except Midford in Somerset, where this material is found in sufficient quantities for use in the preparation of woollen fabrics and also for toilet purposes. S. also produces clay, brick and potters' earth, white sand for glass, firestone, Sussex and Purbeck marbles, chalk, lime, chert, flint, chalcedony, jet, iron sand and sulphate of barytes. The mun. bors. are Croydon, Godalming, Guildford, Kingston, Reigate, and Richmond. Other tos. are Chertsey, Dorking, Epsom, Farnham, Haslemere, Leatherhead, Mitcham, Walton-on-Thames, and Woking. The chief streams are the Wey and Mole, both tributaries of the Thames. The co. is served by three lines of railway—the London, Brighton and South Coast, the South-Eastern, and the London and South-Western. The facilities afforded by these lines in opening a convenient access to many beautiful sites have caused the co. to be studded with mansions and villas, and S. contains, particularly along the south bank of the Thames, the seats of many well-known persons, nor, perhaps, is any part of the world so thickly occupied with noble and elegant mansions, or with so many well-planted domains. This co., after the expulsion of the Iberians and Britons, seems to have been occupied by a Belgic tribe, the Regni, who were defeated by Julius Cæsar and subsequently subdued by the Romans, by whom the co. was colonised and improved. Under the Saxons S. formed a small kingdom, generally dependent upon one of the larger states, either Sussex or Wessex, until merged by Egbert; it was settled by the same clans as Middlesex, and many of the villages and hamlets in both shires have the same name. It was frequently overrun by the Danes, and many fierce battles were fought between them and its early inhabitants. On the Norman accession this co. was granted to William de Warrenne, as Earl of Surrey, in 1087, and this title continues in the possession of his descendants, the Dukes of Norfolk, whose heirs-apparent are called Earls of Arundel and Surrey. It was in this co. that the Great Charter was signed [RUNNYMEDE], and in 1216, on a small island in the Thames near Staines, a treaty was concluded with the French King by which he agreed to relinquish his claims to the English throne. The first and almost the last military operation during the Civil War occurred at Kingston-on-Thames. Few districts of equal size offer such varied geological attractions as the co. of S. From the old Wealden clays and sands in the south we pass to the chalk ridge in the centre, on the northern slope of which lie various Tertiary strata; to this alternation of rock masses of varying composition and hardness is due the charming scenery for which many parts of the co. are famous. The Weald Clay forms the tract of comparatively flat land which extends from the neighbourhood of Chiddingfold on the west, by Cranley, Ewhurst, Charlwood, Leigh, and Crowhurst, eastwards. It attains its maximum thickness near Leith Hill, where it may be from 900 to 1,000 ft. thick, and from this point it thins to the eastward; it contains occasional layers of shelly limestone, known as Sussex marble, full of a species of Paludina, a fresh-water mollusc. The Lower Greensand beds form the line of hills which, with one or two gaps, bound the plain of Weald Clay on the north and west. The Sandgate beds near Nutfield contain fullers' earth; and the Folkestone beds, of light-coloured sands, are often dug for glass-making and building purposes. To the cretaceous formation belongs the Gault, as does the Upper Greensand, quarried for hearthstones. The typical chalk may be seen in the various railway cuttings which cross the chalk hills, and numerous fossils may with little trouble be obtained. To the Tertiary epoch belong the beds in the northern half of the co. These consist of sands and of the London Clay, which runs northwards from Leatherhead and Croydon up to the Thames, extending westward by Stoke past Aldershot; its thickness is about 440 ft., and it is exposed in many brick-yards and tile works. The alluvial deposits are beds of gravel and brick-earth which have been deposited by the rivers during flood time, or in shifting their course. In the gravel along the course of the Mole bones of the elephant and rhinoceros have been found. There are also extensive gravel beds along the rising ground which borders the Thames, as at Peckham, Camberwell, Kennington and Vauxhall, Battersea, etc. Of the older stone implements the only record is one of grey flint found in the gravel at Peasemarsh, between Guildford and Godalming. Of the later Polished Stone age, specimens of celts or axe-heads have been obtained from the Thames at Battersea, from Coway Stakes, near Egham, Kingston-on-Thames, and Titsey. For parl. purposes the co. has six divs.—Chertsey, Epsom, Guildford, Kingston, Reigate, and Wimbledon—each returning one member.

Surrey, ha., pa. of Feering (q.v.), E. Essex, about a mile from Coggeshall.

Sussex, a southern maritime co. of England on the English Channel; bounded on the east by Kent, on the west by Hampshire, and on the north by Surrey. It is oblong in form, 76 miles in length from east to west, and 27 miles from north to south; ac. 933,269. S. belongs to the chalk formation and has some high ranges of downs and hills. [DOWNS, NORTH AND SOUTH.] The north is occupied by the Wealden formation, covering 420,000 ac., and the south by the chalk formations. On the east are marshes and alluvial lands, and on the west the coast is much indented, but at other points it runs out in bold cliffs. The chief hills are Ditchling Beacon, Firle Beacon, Chanctonbury Ring, and near it the lofty eminence known as the Devil's Dyke, and Crowborough Beacon (q.v.). Beachy Head is a bold cliff about 500 ft. high. The rivers are few and of no great importance; the chief are the Adur, Arun, Ouse, and Rother, all flowing south to the English Channel. The culture of S. is applied to its rich marsh lands in fattening cattle, and to its downs for feeding sheep. The shire is famous for its breed of oxen and of Southdown sheep. The minerals are chalk, lime, building stone, firestone, flint, S. marble, salt and sulphuret of iron. Near Battle gypsum has been discovered, from which plaster-of-Paris and cement are made. At Rottingdean pebbles of agate and chalcedony are found, which are cut and polished. Much of the soil, particularly in the Weald, is cold and poor, but a good deal of wheat is raised. Hops are grown in the eastern districts, and in the uplands coppice wood. At West Tarring is an orchard for figs, a fruit much grown in the co. At Worthing there are several nurseries and market gardens, where early fruits, etc., are extensively grown in glasshouses, and sent direct to the London markets. Much fine timber is planted and produced. The woods amount to over 100,000 ac.; formerly they were of great importance for the iron manufacture, the chief seat of which was in Sussex until 1720; the last furnace was extinguished at Ashburnham in 1828. The manufactures are few, chiefly consisting of paper, brushes and brooms, beer, potash, bricks and tiles, pottery and pipes, salt, cement and plaster-of-Paris; coachmaking, currying and tanning, oil grinding, millwrights' work, shipbuilding, block-making, soapboiling, distilling and candle-making are also carried on. Sea-fishing is an important industry. There is steamboat traffic from Newhaven to Dieppe and Havre; from Littlehampton to Honfleur and to Jersey, and occasionally from Rye to Abbeville. The mun. bors. are Arundel, Brighton, Chichester, Eastbourne, Hastings, Lewes, Rye and Worthing. Other towns are Battle, Bognor, East Grinstead, Hailsham, Hayward's Heath, Horsham, Littlehampton, Midhurst, New Shoreham, and Uckfield. In the year 47 this dis was conquered by Vespasian; the Romans founded many towns and stations. After their departure, Ella, at the head of a body of Saxons, Frisians, Warings, and other tribes, came over to the aid of Hengist, conquered the country, and founded the co. of S., or the South Saxons; Regnum, afterwards called Chichester, from Cissa, king of the South Saxons, becoming the seat of government. Later the coast was much ravaged by the Danes, who were defeated by Alfred in 871. Alfred resided in S. frequently, and built many castles and towns. In 1066 was fought the famous battle of Hastings, or Senlac. In 1264 was fought the battle of Lewes, between the barons and Henry III. The result of the ascendancy of the barons was the re-establishment (20 Jan., 1265) of the representative system in the foundation of the House of Commons. During the Parliamentary wars the co. was the scene of frequent conflict. Geologically, S. is composed of a considerable variety of rocks, and these are well exposed in many fine sections along the coast, and inland in numerous railway cuttings and in excavations which have been made for industrial purposes. The oldest rocks are oolitic, and consist chiefly of the Purbeck beds, the limestones of which are worked at various places. To the Neocomian formation belong the Hastings beds, whence was procured the ironstone formerly smelted in the co.; and the Wealden beds which contain fresh-water fossils chiefly, together with bones of huge reptiles, such as the Iguanodon; they were probably deposited in the estuary of a mighty river, which drained a continent then existing on the north and west, but since submerged, and above these comes the Lower Greensand. To the cretaceous formation belong the Gault, the Upper Greensand, and the Chalk, with its various divs., the last well seen in the Downs. To the Tertiary epoch belong the deposits of the plain lying at the foot of the southern slope of the chalk hills. S. has no boulder clay or glacial deposit; but erratic blocks of granite occur near Selsea Bill. The rivers have formed gravelly deposits along their valleys, which extend for half a mile or so on each side of their present courses. On the coast the sea has in many places wrought great destruction, but the material removed from one point is cast up again at another, and in this way have been formed the extensive flats at Romney Marsh and Pevensey Level. Traces of the Stone Age are plentiful. The implements found all belong, however, to the new stone period; at Cissbury, near Worthing, was a regular manufactory of flint implements. For parl. purposes the co. has six divs. — Chichester, Eastbourne, East Grinstead, Horsham, Lewes, and Rye—each returning one member.

Sustead, pa., N. Norf., 4 s. by w. of Cromer; ac. 522; soil light, overlying gravel. The church of SS. Peter and Paul is a small building of flint, chiefly Dec. and Perp. The old Hall (1663) is a gabled structure of red brick, still standing near the road in a dilapidated condition.

Susworth, ha. on the Trent, pa. of Scotter (q.v.), N. Linos., 6½ N.W. of Kirton-in-Lindsey. There is a Primitive Methodist chapel.

Sutcombe, pa. and vil. by the Waldon, W. Dev., 6 N. of Holsworthy; ac. 3,593; soil light loam, overlying clay and stone rubble. The church of St. Andrew (restored 1889) is of Norm. and later periods. There is a plain Norm. doorway and some remains of a beautifully carved oak rood screen, and a Jacobean pulpit. In the north chapel are a number of 17th and 18th-cent. memorials of the Prideaux family, as also in the south or Thenborough chapel; the capitals of the granite piers of the north arcade, dating from the 16th cent., bear the arms of Prideaux, Hody, and Spencer; and the easternmost bosses in the chancel display the arms of the ancient family of Le Cornu; the bench ends are richly adorned with shields of arms of the De Esse, Giffard, Prideaux, Speecott, Dennis, Wyke, Spencer, and other families, and with panels and shields bearing various monograms. There is a piscina in the chancel, and one in the south chapel. The principal part of the church is paved with ancient tiles. The Bible Christians and Wesleyans have chapels. There is a charity of £60 a year.

Sutgrove, ha., pa. of Miserdene (q.v.), Mid Glouc., 6¼ N.E. of Stroud.

Sutherlandshire, the most northerly but one of the cos. of Scotland, bordered on the north and west by the Atlantic Ocean, which accounts for the rugged and deeply indented coasts on those two faces; it also has a coast line of 26 miles on the Moray Firth on the south-east, and 18 miles along the Dornoch Firth on the south. Its remaining boundaries on the east and south are the cos. of Caithness and Ross respectively, but though it possesses this extensive sea coast it has only one port of any importance, Dornoch (q.v.); from east to west it extends 62 miles, and from north to south 49 miles. It has an area of 2,027 square miles, or 1,297,849 ac., exclusive of 47,633 ac. of water, 12,812 of foreshore, and 1,553 of tidal water. S. appears to have been held by the Picts; the Romans penetrated here, but there is no record of any permanent occupation by them. The Dalriads in 767 fought the Picts at Forteviot, Perthshire, but did not succeed in penetrating further, though in 843 their king succeeded to the Pictish throne, and these northern tribes had to turn their attention to resisting the constant invasions of the Danes, and were also frequently engaged in clan feuds. King James I. made several expeditions to the north to control the clans, but these feuds continued. Early in the 15th cent. the Lord of the Isles invaded this co., but was defeated at the Sands of Fleet, and in 1517 the Mackays made an incursion, but were repulsed. These feuds continued up to the early part of the 17th cent., and in 1650 Montrose ravaged these parts. This large co. consists almost entirely of an uninterrupted succession of mountains, valleys, and morasses. The north and west coasts are bold and rocky, deeply indented by inlets and bays, and with many large promontories, among which Cape Wrath, at the north-western corner, is most prominent. The interior is divided naturally into three districts—the Eastern, the Middle, and the Western. The first is a level narrow strip of land on the east coast, sheltered from the north by a ridge of mountains from 300 to 800 ft. high; the second is occupied by the four straths of the rivers Helmsdale, Brora, Fleet and Oykel; and the Western dis., which borders on the Atlantic, is wild and mountainous, abounding in salt- and fresh-water lochs. The mountains of greatest altitude in the shire are Ben More (3,273 ft.), Ben Clibrick (3,154 ft.) and Ben Hope (3,040 ft.). The large extent of S. was the last dis. in Scotland subjected to the improvements of modern times. Until about the close of the 18th cent. it was a country lying in nearly the same condition as it must have exhibited centuries before, and, in many respects, was shut out from the progress of civilisation. The great barriers to improvement were the dangerous narrow firths to be crossed, and the want of roads along the shore or into the interior. Parliament advanced a part of the money expended in making roads and bridges in the Highlands, and the Dukes of Sutherland have done much to foster improvements in agriculture. Breeding of sheep is the great staple business of the shire, for which its sheltered straths and swelling hills, as well as its climate, eminently adapt it. Under the various improvements of store farming the co. rears many thousands of sheep, mostly of the Cheviot breed, of which a great number are annually exported. Attention has also been paid to agriculture, and the soil, being of a sandy, open-bottomed nature, bears excellent crops of oats, barley, turnips, and clover. The exports of farm produce have been much assisted by the erection of piers at Helmsdale and other places on the coast, chiefly at the cost of the late Duke of Sutherland. The building of houses has been greatly facilitated by the abundance of sandstone, limestone and slate found in different parts of the co. Coal has for many years been wrought at Brora (q.v.). From the fishing stations on the coast there are annually exported immense quantities of herrings, besides cod, ling, etc. This co. is almost devoid of manufactures, the only works being at Brora and Rogart, at which places tweeds, blankets, etc., are made. Hand looms are, however, still worked in many of the crofters' houses. The principal rivers are the Brora, Borgie, Naver, Helmsdale, Halladale, Laxford, Inchard, Inver, Shin, Fleet, and Strathmore; the chief sea lochs are the Fleet, Glencoul, Glendhu, Inver, and Laxford; and the principal fresh-water lochs are the Assynt, Cama, Hope, Loyal, Meadie, Merkland, More, Naver, Shin (17 miles long), and the Vevatie. The railway system belongs to the Highland Railway Company, which runs through the co. S. returns one member to Parliament.

Sutors of Cromarty. [CROMARTY FIRTH.]

Sutterby, pa. and vil., E. Lincs., 5 N.W. of Spilsby; ac. 460; soil mostly chalky loam, overlying chalk. The church of St. John the Baptist is a small Perp. edifice. On the Downs to the east are barrows.

Sutterton, pa. and vil., S.E. Lincs., 6 S. of Boston; ac. 2,957; soil a rich loam, overlying clay and loam. The church of St. Mary (rebuilt 1787) is in Late Norm., E. Eng., Dec., and Perp. styles. At the west end of the nave are three stone monuments, the first of which bears the recumbent effigy of a man in gown and hood, and on the margin is an inscription to John, son of William Boneworth, of Sotton (d. 1382); the next tomb supports a recumbent effigy of Alice, wife of the above-named John; the third tomb on the south side has the figure of a priest in eucharistic vestments and is inscribed to John, son of the preceding John Boneworth and chaplain of Sotton (d. 1400). There are Wesleyan, Baptist, Free Methodist, and Primitive Methodist chapels. The charities amount to rather more than £200 a year.

Sutton (1), pa., Mid Surrey, 12 S. by road from the Royal Exchange; ac. 1,835; soil in the eastern part light, overlying chalk; in the western part heavy, overlying clay. The old part of the vil. forms one street on the old coach road to Reigate and Brighton, and is pleasantly situated on the verge of the Downs. The population has very much increased within the last few years; in the north-east part of the pa. a modern to. has sprung up, and on the Brighton road, for nearly a mile, and on the roads leading therefrom, a great number of villa residences have been built. The church of St. Nicholas (rebuilt in 1864) is in Gothic style, and contains some fine monuments, including memorials to Isaac Littlebury (d. 1710), translator of Herodotus; to William, first Earl Talbot (d. 1782), and to other members of the Talbot family; there is also a monument to Dorothy (Mason) (d. 1670), wife of Sir William Brownlowe, of Lincs., and a tablet to Thomas Newte, topographer. At the west end of the churchyard is a large tomb to James Gibson and others of that family, by whom legacies were bequeathed to the pa. in 1773, upon condition that the tomb is opened annually on August 12. There are eccl. pas. with modern churches, a Catholic church, and places of worship for various Nonconformist bodies. Here are the South Metropolitan Schools for pauper children. The charities for distribution amount to £200 a year.

Sutton (2), pa. and vil. on the Deben, S.E. Suff., 4 S.E. of Woodbridge; ac. 5,545 land, 532 tidal water and foreshore; soil sandy, rich loam by the river side, overlying sand and crag. The church of All Saints (restored 1860) is E. Eng.; there is an ancient carved stone font and a handsome Derbyshire alabaster reredos. The Baptists have a chapel. The charities are of the yearly value of £9 4s. The pa. is rich in fossils. S. Hall is a seat; on the estate two urns were dug up a few years ago, which contained copper coins of the reign of Constantine. Wood Hall is a fine old manorial house.

Sutton (3), pa. and vil., E. Beds., 2½ N.E. of Biggleswade; ac. 2,144; soil principally clay, overlying strong clay. The church of All Saints is E. Eng. and Dec.; the north aisle or Burgoyne chapel contains some magnificent monuments of the Burgoyne family, together with hatchments, flags, and other funereal emblems. The charities are about £21 yearly. A pack-horse bridge, spanning a small stream, gives entrance to the vil.; it is supposed that but three such bridges are now standing in England. S. Park, situated in a well-wooded park, is a seat.

Sutton (4), pa., N.W. Sussex, 5 S. of Petworth; ac. 2,068; soil light, overlying malm-rock. The church of St. John is E. Eng. and Dec.; it retains Sutton (5), pa. and vil. in the Isle of Ely, E. Cambs., 6 W. of Ely; ac. 7,090; soil gravel, overlying clay. The vil. occupies an elevated site, and consists principally of one long street. St. Andrew's Church (restored 1869) is a spacious building with a south porch of Norm. date and a fine Perp. tower. Here are Baptist, Wesleyan, and Primitive Methodist chapels.

Sutton (6), pa. and pleasant vil., E. Norf., 16 N.E. of Norwich; ac. 1,383; soil sand, gravel, and brick-earth. The church of St. Michael (restored 1848) is Perp. Here is a tract of land abounding with reed and sedge, which are cut and used for making baskets and horse-collars. An ancient British shield, in good preservation, was found here in 1875.

Sutton (7), pa. and vil. on the Lugg, Mid Herefords., 4½ N. of Hereford; ac. 1,504; soil loam and gravel, overlying gravel and marl. There are some small charities. S. Walls, once a Roman camp, was afterward the site of a palace of the Kings of Mercia, and here Ethelbert, King of the East Angles, was murdered. This pa. has been formed by the amalgamation for civil purposes of the pas. of S. St. Michael and S. St. Nicholas (q.v.).

John the Baptist is Dec. and later; the chancel contains a squint, sedile, and piscina, also a monument to Sir Thomas Smith (d. 1625). The Wesleyans and Baptists have chapels. There are almshouses founded by Sir Thomas Smith. A preceptory of the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem was founded here in the reign of King John.

Sutton Bassett, pa. and vil. separated from Leics. by the Welland, Mid-Northants, 3 N.E. of Market Harborough; ac. 700; soil clay, sand, and gravel, overlying clay. The church of St. Mary was rebuilt about 1856, in Perp. style.

Sutton Benger, pa. and vil. on the Avon, N.W. Wilts., 5 S. of Malmesbury; ac. 1,270; soil various, overlying gravel. The church of All Saints is Dec. with a Perp. tower.

Sutton Bingham, pa. and vil., S.E. Somerset, 3½ S. of Yeovil; ac. 527; soil clay and heavy sand, overlying limestone. The church of All Saints (restored 1882) is Norm.; the chancel has a piscina and some wall paintings dating from the 14th cent.

Sutton Bishops. [BISHOPS SUTTON.]

Sutton Bonnington, pa. and small to., separated from Leics. by the Soar, S.W. Notts., 10 S.W. of Nottingham; ac. 2,055; soil chiefly clay, overlying clay. The church of St. Michael (restored 1878) is E. Eng., Dec., and Perp.; in the south aisle is a piscina. The E. Eng. church of St. Anne (restored 1860) is situated upon the slope of a hill; under a wide arched recess on the south side of the chancel is the recumbent effigy of a knight in plate armour, supposed to be a member of the family of Grey; the armour includes a curious collar of ringed mail, and round the neck is a collar of suns and roses; the face is mutilated, and the hands, part of the feet, and sword are wanting. The chancel has a piscina, and a window-seat serving as a sedile. The Wesleyans, Primitive Methodists, Reformed Methodists, and Baptists have chapels. The charities amount to about £11 yearly. Kirk Hill is said to have been a Roman camp. The house named "Hobgoblins" is thought to have been a religious house. The Elms and St. Anne's Manor are seats.

Sutton Bridge, eccl. pa. and to. on the Nene, pa. of Long Sutton (q.v.), S.E. Lincs., partly in Norfolk, 3 E. of Long Sutton. The church of St. Matthew (1843) is in E. Eng. style. There are Wesleyan, Primitive Methodist, and Free Methodist chapels. The Public Institute and Reading Room is furnished with periodicals and newspapers and has a lending library attached. There is a good quay on the river side, and warehouses for corn, coal, and timber. A lofty embanked road extends from the bridge along the Cross Keys Wash, which connects the cos. of Lincoln and Norfolk, and by this means many thousand acres of land were recovered from the sea, and the former unsafe and uncertain mode of transit over the Wash entirely done away with. New docks, covering an area of 12 ac., were opened in 1881, but unfortunately gave way in the same year.

Sutton-by-Dover, pa. and small vil., E. Kent, 6½ N. of Dover; ac. 1,071; soil loam, overlying chalk. The church of St. Peter and St. Paul it chiefly Norm., with an apsidal chancel; the pulpit is Jacobean. The charities are small.

Sutton Cheney, eccl. pa., tp., and vil., pa. of Market Bosworth (q.v.), W. Leics., 5 N.N.W. of Hinckley; ac. 1,620. The church of St. James is chiefly E. Eng.; the chancel has an open waggon-roof, and retains a piscina and sedilia; one of four arches separating the nave from the aisle is Norm.; the font is Norm. The chancel contains a brass dating from 1563, and a mural monument from 1635; also a handsome monument to Sir William Roberts, Knight (d. 1633), founder of the almshouses here, and an inscribed tablet to Thomas Simpson, F.R.S., the mathematician (d. 1761).

Sutton Coldfield (in Domesday "Svtone"), pa., mun. bor., and to., N. Warws., 7 N.E. of Birmingham, on the road to Lichfield; ac. of pa. and mun. bor. 12,828; soil sandy and peat, overlying gravel. S. claims a very high antiquity, having been once a royal manor, and afterwards an appanage of the powerful Earls of Warwick; it was called "the royal town of Sutton Coldfield," by a charter of incorporation, obtained in the 20th year of King Henry VIII. by John Vesey, or Harman, Bishop of Exeter (1520–49 and 1553–55), a native of this place, to whose munificence may be attributed its subsequent prosperity; besides obtaining from the Crown a grant of a large tract of land for charitable purposes, he built a Town Hall and market house, founded and endowed a school, and established various other charities, and died at Moor Hall, in this pa., in 1555, at the advanced age of 103 years. The to. formerly consisted principally of one street, but has considerably increased within the last few years, the houses being chiefly of red brick, and well built. S. is fast becoming a residential dis. of Birmingham and Walsall, for which purpose it is admirably adapted, as well from the beauty of its scenery as from the dryness of its soil. The pa. church of the Holy Trinity is E. Eng. and Late Perp.; the aisles were the work of Bishop Vesey; the nave, being decayed, was taken down and rebuilt in the 17th cent.; in the north chancel chapel is the tomb of the Bishop, with his recumbent mitred effigy, restored 1876; the interior of this church suffered severely from fire in 1760, but was thoroughly restored; the nave and aisles are now separated from the chancel by an ancient carved oak screen, constructed from a portion of the choir fittings of Worcester Cathedral, removed during the restorations there in 1865; the church retains a carved stone font of Norm. date; there are also brasses to Barbara, daughter of Ralph Simonds, gent., and wife of Roger Eliot, rector of S. Coldfield (1606), with two children, and to Josias Bull, gent. (1606), with five children. There are modern churches, and the Catholics, Baptists, Congregationalists, Wesleyans, and Calvinists have places of worship. The Town Hall (built 1858–59) is a red-brick building in Gothic style; the northern portion is known as the Municipal Buildings. The Literary Institute occupies rooms in the structure, and there are others available for public lectures, besides a reading and news room and library. The Princess Alice Orphanage (built 1884) is in connection with the Children's Home, London. Fairs are held in March, September, and November. The inhabitants are chiefly engaged in agriculture. There are several almshouses, and the estate bequeathed by Bishop Vesey for the benefit of the to. produces about £2,500 annually. New Hall, about 1 s., is a castellated structure, erected in 1200, and enlarged in 1360; it is surrounded by a moat, and is now used as a college for boys. Peddimore Hall, about 4 E., was formerly the seat of the Ardens, who were residents here before the Conquest; the double moat remains, but a farmhouse now occupies the site of the ancient mansion. Adjacent to the to. is a picturesque park of upwards of 2,400 ac., granted by Bishop Vesey to the Corporation, in which the inhabitants have the privilege of pasturing horses and cattle on payment of a small sum; the Crystal Palace promenade gardens, near the park, cover an area of 25 ac.; on and adjoining the park are several fine pools available for boating, fishing, and bathing. A portion of Icknield Street crosses the park. Moor Hall, in a densely-wooded park, is a seat; it stands on the site of the original hall erected and inhabited by Bishop Vesey (1528), and part of this structure yet remains; about a quarter of a mile west is a farmhouse, said to have been the birthplace of the bishop.

Sutton Court. [STOWEY.]

Sutton Courtney, pa., tp., and vil. on the Thames, N. Berks., 3 s. of Abingdon; ac. of pa. 4,322, of tp. 2,154; soil clay, gravel and loam, overlying clay. The church of All Saints is Norm. and later. The Wesleyans and Baptists have chapels. There are six almshouses, and the charities come to about £35 yearly. The "Abbey" was formerly attached to the Abbey of Abingdon, being then used as a hospital.

Sutton-cum-Duckmanton, pa., N. Derbys., 4½ S.E. of Chesterfield; ac. 4,296; soil and subsoil clay. The church of St. Mary is E. Eng. Sutton Hall is a splendid edifice of the Corinthian order built in the 17th cent., and is situated on a bold eminence overlooking an extensive deer park and the fine old ruins and keep of Bolsover Castle.

Sutton-cum-Lound, extensive pa., N. Notts., 3 N.W. by N. of Retford; ac. 4,576; soil sandy loam, overlying sandy rock and gravel. The church of St. Bartholomew is Gothic, and retains piscina, sedilia, and two old oak chests. The Wesleyan Methodists and Primitive Methodists have places of worship.

Sutton, East, pa. and vil., Mid Kent, 6½ S.E. of Maidstone; ac. 1,596; soil Kentish rag and Wealden clay. The church of St. Peter and St. Paul dates from the 14th and 15th cents.; in a side chapel are two unique windows; there are several monuments to the Filmer family. The charities amount to over £50 yearly. E. S. Park is a seat.

Sutton, Full. [FULL SUTTON.]

Sutton Grange, tp., pa. of and 3 N.W. from Ripon (q.v.), W.R. Yorks.; ac. 1,022. Here are the remains of a Roman encampment.

Sutton, Great, tp. and vil., pa. of Eastham (q.v.), N.W. Chesh., 5 N.W. of Chester; ac. 1,128.

Sutton Howgrave, tp., pa. of Kirklington (q.v.), N.R. Yorks., 5½ N. of Ripon; ac. 593. There is a Wesleyan Methodist chapel.

Sutton-in-Ashfield, pa. and irregularly built to., N. Notts. 3 W.S.W. of Mansfield; ac. of pa. 6078, of tp. 4,879; soil clay and sand, overlying limestone. The church of St. Mary Magdalene (restored 1863) was built for the most part in the 14th cent., but incorporates portions of the earlier church, dating from 1170; in the chancel is a memorial stone marked with a bow and arrow, supposed to be the grave of an ancient verderer of Sherwood Forest. In the churchyard, which is extensive and planted with trees and shrubs, there is a yew-tree believed to be 700 years old. There are mission churches, Baptist, Congregational, Wesleyan, and Primitive Methodist chapels. The Town Hall (built 1890) is a brick structure, and there is a Young Men's Institute and reading-room. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the collieries and in the manufacture of cotton, thread, silk, and wool hosiery. Excellent lime is made from the limestone found here. Fairs for horses and stock are held on Easter Tuesday and the Tuesday before the second Thursday in October; the local feast begins on the second Sunday after July 10, and a large provision market is held every Saturday; the statute fair is on Nov. 27, but with the exception of the provision market these are mostly in abeyance. The reservoir of the Sutton Water Works, on the side of the road to Mansfield, is an open sheet of water 70 ac. in extent, well stocked with fish. There are three charities, one left by Ann Mason in 1669, one given by Elizabeth Boot during her lifetime, and the other by Henry Newton, amounting in all to about £10, appropriated to the clothing and education of poor children.

Sutton-in-Craven, eccl. pa., pa. of Kildwick (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., about 5½ S.E. of Skipton. The church of St. Thomas is in Dec. style, and there are Baptist, Wesleyan, and Free Methodist chapels. [SUTTON (13).]

Sutton-in-the-Elms, ha., pa. of Broughton Astley (q.v.), S. Leics., 6 N.W. of Lutterworth. The Particular Baptists have a chapel.

Sutton-in-the-Marsh, pa. and vil. on the coast, E. Lincs., 7 N.E. of Alford; ac. 1,668 land, 430 water; soil and subsoil fine alluvial and clay. The church of St. Clement (rebuilt 1860) is a small edifice of brick. There are two Wesleyan chapels and a Primitive Methodist chapel. S. affords excellent bathing, the sands being firm and of considerable extent. A sea wall, about a quarter of a mile long, was built in 1885, and in rear of it is an asphalted promenade and carriage drive, approached by three flights of steps from the shore. Bricks and tiles are made here. Here is a coastguard station.

Sutton, Long (1), pa. and mkt. to., S.E. Lincs., 5 E. of Holbeach; ac. 22,324. The church of St. Mary (restored 1866 and 1888) is Norm., E. Eng., Dec., and Perp.; the tower and spire constitute one of the most remarkable designs of the Earlier English in the kingdom, and is particularly interesting as one of the very few which, having survived both fire and decay, remains still in its original condition; the spire is of wood, covered with lead, and the pinnacles at its base are similarly constructed. At the north-east corner of the chancel is a small and curious octangular building of two storeys, probably the sacristy, with a newel staircase leading to the upper chamber, which is groined, and has a window-slit looking into the chancel; the south porch is groined, and has a parvise above with embattled parapet; the north porch has a small statue niche; the north aisle retains an aumbry, and in the south aisle is a piscina. In the church is a sepulchral slab, with a cross and inscription to Alys, wife of John Thomas (1485); in one of the south windows is the figure of a knight being stung by a serpent; tradition says it represents John of Gaunt, but it is more probably intended for St. George and the Dragon. There are General Baptist, Congregational, Free Methodist, and Wesleyan chapels. A handsome building was erected in 1856 to serve as a Corn Exchange, market, and public rooms. A corn and cattle market is held on Friday; the fairs are on the 13th and 14th of May, and the first Friday after September 25. There are five charities amounting to upwards of £700 annually. Allen's charity produces £434 annually, Phillips' charity £200 yearly. Tilson's charity endows almshouses for four poor widows; Sowter's charity maintains two widows in a cottage; Rodgman's is for repairs of the church. S. once contained a monastery called Ketel; and in the marsh is a farm called King's House, where King John is said to have rested after having lost his carriages and baggage in the Wash.

Sutton, Long (2), pa. and vil. on the Yeo, Mid Somerset, 5 N.W. of Ilchester; ac. 3,672; soil clayey, overlying blue lias. The church of the Holy Trinity is E. Perp.; the nave roof (restored 1878–79) is a fine example of Late Perp. timber work, as is also the rood-screen; the carving of the Late Perp. octagonal pulpit is also remarkable. The chancel has sedilia and a piscina. The Society of Friends have a meeting-house.

Sutton, Long (3), pa. and small vil., N. Hants, 9 S.E. of Basingstoke; ac. 2,290; soil stiff clay and loam, overlying clay and chalk. The church of All Saints is an ancient flint building, with a small wooden tower.

Sutton Maddock, pa. and vil. near the Severn, E. Salop, 4 S. of Shifnal; ac. 2,739; soil clay, loam, and gravel, subsoil various. The church of St. Mary was rebuilt in 1888.

Sutton Mallet, pa., N. Somerset, 5½ E. of Bridgwater; ac. 878; soil marl, loam, and peat, subsoil various. The church was rebuilt in 1879.

Sutton Mandeville, pa., S. Wilts., 10 N.E. of Shaftesbury; ac. 1,259; the soil varies very much, being partly chalk and partly greensand loam, and in one part stonebrash and clay. The church of All Saints (rebuilt with the exception of the tower in 1862) was originally Norm.; the back of the old oak pulpit, which has been preserved, has cut on it the names of the churchwardens and its date (1631). In the churchyard is a fine yew-tree, planted in 1765. The interest of £76 is distributed yearly in coals.

Sutton Montis, pa. and vil., S.E. Somerset, 6 S.W. of Wincanton; ac. 494; soil sandy loam, overlying clay. The church of Holy Trinity is Norm., with a Dec. chancel, and has an ancient carved oak pulpit. There is a charity of £20.

Sutton-on-Plym, eccl. pa., pa. of Plymouth Charles (q.v.), S. Dev., within the bor. of Plymouth. The church of St. John the Evangelist is modern.

Sutton-on-the-Forest, pa., tp., and vil., N.R. Yorks., 8 N. of York; ac. of pa. 10,714, of tp. 6,006; soil mixed, overlying clay and gravel. The church of All Hallows was rebuilt (with the exception of the tower and south wall of the nave) in 1877, in Late Perp. style. There are Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist chapels. The charities amount annually to about £40. Laurence Sterne was vicar of the pa. in 1738. S. Hall is a seat.

Sutton-on-the-Hill, pa. and tp., N. Derbys., 7 N. of Burton; ac. of pa. 3,328, of tp. 880; soil chiefly marl. The Dec. church of St. Michael stands on a lofty hill; the west tower, struck by lightning in 1841 and taken down, was rebuilt in 1863. The vicarage is a very fine old castellated mansion.

Sutton St. Michael, eccl. pa., pa. of Sutton (q.v.), Mid Herefords., about 4 N. of Hereford. The church of St. Michael was restored about 1865. [SUTTON (7).]

Sutton St. Nicholas (1), or Lutton Bourne, eccl. pa. and vil., pa. of Long Sutton (q.v.), S.E. Lincs., 5 N.E. of Holbeach. The church of St. Nicholas (restored 1859) is E. Dec. and Perp., and contains several incised slabs and memorials; the staircase to the rood-loft remains. The pulpit dates from 1702. There is a Primitive Methodist chapel and a Unitarian chapel. Dr. Busby (1606–95), the master of Westminster School, was born here.

Sutton St. Nicholas (2), eccl. pa., pa. of Sutton (q.v.), Mid Herefords., about 4 N. of Hereford. The church of St. Nicholas is Norm. [SUTTON (7).]

Sutton-under-Brailes, pa. and vil. on the Stour, S. Warws., 4¾ S.E. of Shipston-on-Stour; ac. 1,099; soil loamy clay, overlying clay. The church of St. Thomas à Becket (restored 1879) is E. Eng. The only trace of the original building, mentioned in Domesday, is a Saxon door, discovered when the plaster was taken down at the restoration. There is a charity of about £28 yearly.

Sutton-under-Whitestone Cliffe, tp. and vil., pa. of Feliskirk (q.v.), N.R. Yorks., 4 E. of Thirsk; ac. 1,827. There are Wesleyan and Congregational chapels.

Sutton-upon-Derwent, pa. and vil., E.R. Yorks., 8 E.S.E. of York; ac. 3,485; soil various, overlying clay and sand. The church of St. Michael (repaired 1841 and 1846) is Norm. and Perp., and contains three monumental slabs and a brass. There is a Wesleyan chapel. The charities are small. Here is a mineral spring and a flour mill. The Manor House is a seat.

Sutton-upon-Trent, pa. and large vil. on the navigable Trent, E. Notts., 8 N. of Newark; ac. 2,930; soil mostly good clay, and the remainder sandy loam; subsoil mostly loose gravel, and the rest clay. The 13th-cent. Gothic church of All Saints contains a piscina. The Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists have chapels. There is a Working Men's Institute. The charities amount to about £15 annually. Both the market and fair have been discontinued, but the feast is held on Nov. 1.

Sutton Valence, pa. and vil., Mid Kent, 6 S.E. of Maidstone; ac. 2,171; soil loam and clay, subsoil partly rock. The church of St. Mary (rebuilt 1828) is in Gothic style. The Congregationalists have a chapel. There are some small charities, and almshouses founded by William Lambe, who also was the founder of the Grammar School in 1576, which possesses several exhibitions and scholarships. There are still some remains of Sutton Castle. Belringham, a seat, was built by John Willes, a celebrated cricketer.

Sutton Veney, pa. and vil., W. Wilts., 3 S.E. of Warminster; ac. 4,116; soil sand and clay, overlying chalk and stone. The old church of St. Leonard, of the E. Eng. period, is now in ruins. The church of St. John is in E. Dec. style. The Congregationalists have a chapel. Here are the Kennels of the South and West Wilts. Subscription Foxhounds.

Sutton Waldron, pa. and vil., N.E. Dors., 5 S. of Shaftesbury; ac. 1,105; soil various, subsoil principally chalk. The church of St. Bartholomew was erected 1847 in Dec. style, near the old site.

Sutton Wick, tp., near the Ock, pa. of and 2 W. from Sutton Courtney (q.v.), N. Berks.; ac. 1,306.

Sutton-with-Seaford. [SEAFORD.]

Swaby, pa. and vil., E. Lincs., 6 N.W. of Alford; ac. 1,519; soil mostly chalky loam, overlying chalk. The church of St. Nicholas is a modern structure of brick.

Swadlincote, eccl. pa., tp., and to., and head of a petty sess. div., pa. of Church Gresley (q.v.), S. Derbys., 6 S.E. of Burton-on-Trent; ac. 550. Emmanuel Church (built 1848) is in E. Eng. style, and there are Baptist, Wesleyan, Free Methodist, and Primitive Methodist chapels. The Town Hall (built 1861) is a brick structure. A large market is held on Saturday night, principally for provisions. S. is noted for the manufacture of sanitary earthenware, fire-bricks, fire-clay goods, also ironstone and Rockingham ware. The tp. contains collieries. The charities are small; one is given to the National school fund.

Swaffham, pa., U., and mkt. to. (S.), and head of Co. Co. dis., S.W. Norf., 12 W. of Dereham; ac. 7,550. The to. is pleasantly situated on rising ground, in fine open country, 210 ft. above sea level. The inhabitants enjoy peculiar privileges, S. being an ancient demesne. The church of SS. Peter and Paul (restored 1888–89) is a cruciform Perp. structure. The north aisle was built by one John Chapman, said to have been a pedlar. His device, carved in certain parts of the building, probably gave rise to the legend, but is more likely a quaint rebus on his name. Among the monuments is one to John Botwright, seventh master of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, sometime rector here, and chaplain to Henry VI., and another to Catherine Steward (d. 1590). There are several brasses, and stones from which the brasses have been taken away. Over the vestry is a priest's chamber, containing some armour and a library. There are places of worship for various Nonconformist bodies. S. has a town-hall, assembly rooms, and a cottage hospital. The market cross was rebuilt in 1783. In the to. are iron foundries, and fairs for cattle and sheep are held the second Wednesday in May, the third Wednesday in July, and first Wednesday in November. The charities are numerous, and devoted to keeping up the fabric of the church and the relief of the poor. A priory, a cell to Castleacre (q.v.), was founded here in the reign of Henry II. It was dedicated to St. Guthlac, and "Goodluck's Close," the name given to a piece of land on the north-west, is a corruption of "Guthlac's Stow."

Swaffham Bulbeck, pa. and vil., S.E. Cambs., 6½ w. of Newmarket; ac. 3,943; soil clay, overlying chalk. The church of St. Mary (restored 1876–77) is chiefly Late Dec.; the clerestory is Perp. and the tower E. Eng.; the church is seated with old open benches which bear traces of handsome carving; there is a piscina in the wall of the south aisle, and a cedar chest of the 15th cent. with fine carvings of the Conception of the Blessed Virgin Mary, the Crucifixion, and the Resurrection. Here was formerly a Benedictine convent. The charities produce £90 yearly. Upper Hare Park is a seat.

Swaffham Prior, pa. and vil., S.E. Cambs., about 6 w. of Newmarket; ac. 5,328; soil loamy, overlying chalk. The vil. is remarkable for its two churches in one churchyard. The church of St.

Mary, which had long been in ruins, but was used as a burying place for the Allix family, was partially restored in 1887; the building as it lately stood consisted of nave, with a portion of the clerestory, fragments of the aisles and transepts, part of the western tower, Norm. and E. Eng., and remains of a western porch. The church of St. Cyriac is a plain embattled structure in a debased Gothic style; in 1814 a rate of 22s. in the pound was levied by the churchwardens to pay for the rebuilding of this church. The famous Puritan, Dr. Edmund Calamy the elder, held the living from 1625 to 1631. There is a Congregational chapel and a reading-room. Charities producing £84 yearly are appropriated partly to the school and partly to the poor. S. P. House, built on the site of an Elizabethan mansion, the interior of which was retained, is a seat.

Swafield, pa. and pleasant vil., E. Norf., 2 N. of North Walsham; ac. 814; soil mixed, overlying clay and gravel. The church of St. Nicholas is Perp. The rent of a farm here is applied to the benefit of the Clergy Widows' Fund.

Swainbost, group of vils. extending from Cross to Port of Ness, pa. of Barvas (q.v.), island of Lewis, Ross and Crom., Sc., about 2 S. of the Butt of Lewis.

Swainby, large vil., pa. of Whorlton (q.v.), N.R. Yorks., 5½ S.W. of Stokesley. It is pleasantly situated on the high road to Thirsk and Northallerton, nearly at the foot of a lofty range of the Cleveland Hills abounding with ironstone, to which a line of railway has been constructed for the transit of minerals. The two sides of the street are divided by a small stream running the whole length of the vil. The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have chapels. A large quantity of jet has been found on the hills, and there are ironstone mines.

Swainby-with-Allerthorpe, tp., pas. of Pickhill and Burneston (q.v.), N.R. Yorks., about 5 S.E. of Bedale; ac. 868.

Swainshill, ha., pa. of and ¼ S. from Stretton Sugwas (q.v.), Mid Herefords.

Swainsthorpe, pa. and vil., S. Norf., 5 S. by W. of Norwich; ac. 821; soil light and sandy, overlying chalk and gravel. The church of St. Peter (restored 1885) is an ancient building of various periods; there is an ancient and curious monument to John Dearsley (d. 1765) and a brass to Gilbert Havers (d. 1628). The interest of £200 is distributed to the poor in coal and bread during the winter.

Swainswick, pa. and vil., N.E. Somerset, 3 N.E. of Bath; ac. 845; soil loam, overlying lias. The church of St. Mary is Norm., and contains a brass to Edmond Fforde (d. 1439). There are some small charities. William Prynne was born here in 1600; here he also died (1669), and was buried in the church.

Swalcliffe, pa., tp., and vil., N. Oxon., 5 S.W. of Banbury; ac. of pa. 6,946, of tp. 1,679; soil light and sandy. The church of St. Peter and St. Paul (restored 1860) is of various periods; the Dec. chancel retains fine sedilia, a piscina, the rood-loft door, and a Perp. screen; in the nave is some Norm. and E. Eng. work; the south porch is E. Eng. Among the memorials are those to

There are some small charities. Madmarston Camp is a British fortification, and Roman coins have been found in large numbers. Lower Lea and S. Park are seats.

Swale, river, N.R. Yorks., rises in two headstreams on the Westmd. border, situated respectively 4½ and 6½ S.S.E. of Kirkby Stephen, which unite 4 E.N.E. of Muker. Winding amongst the fells to the small to. of Muker, the S. continues its E. course as far as Catterick, passing on its way Reeth, Granton, Marrick, Marske, and Richmond. From Catterick the S. runs S.S.E. to a point 2 E. by S. of Boroughbridge, where it unites with the Ure to form the Ouse. Between Catterick (mentioned several times by Bede) and its union with the Ure the river passes by or near the vils. of Kirkby Fleetham, Scruton, and Pickhill on the right, and those of Langton, Kirby Wiske, Topcliffe, Brafferton, and Myton on the left. The baptisms performed by Paulinus, first Bishop of York, after the conversion of Northumbria early in the 7th cent., are thought by some to have taken place at Brafferton, but others consider there is more evidence in favour of Catterick. The length of the river is 60 miles.

Swalecliff, pa. and small vil. on the coast, N.E. Kent, 7 N. of Canterbury; ac. 991 land, 313 water; soil clay, overlying sand. The church of St. John the Baptist (rebuilt 1876) is in E. Eng. style.

Swaledale, the name given to the upper part of the valley of the Swale (q.v.) from its source to Richmond. S. comprises two portions, the characteristics of which are totally different. Upper S., which terminates at Reeth, lies among desolate fells, though the valley itself in its deeper parts is fertile; here are important lead-mines. The district through which the river passes between Reeth and Richmond is much more fertile, and the scenery on its banks is in many places very picturesque.

Swale, The. [QUEENBOROUGH.]

Swallow, pa. and vil., N.E. Lincs., 8 S.W. of Great Grimsby; ac. 2,790; soil light, overlying chalk. The church of the Holy Trinity (restored 1883) is Saxon, or very E. Norm., and E. Eng. The chancel was rebuilt in 1868, partly on the old foundations. There are Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist chapels.

Swallow Beck, ha. on the Witham, pa. of Skellingthorpe (q.v.), W. Lincs., about 4 S.W. of Lincoln.

Swallowcliffe, pa. and vil., S. Wilts., 8 N.E. of Shaftesbury; ac. 1,344; soil sandy, overlying sandstone. The church of St. Peter is in Norm. style. The common lands were enclosed in 1862, when a portion was set apart for the poor; this yields about £30 a year, which is distributed.

Swallow Falls. [RHAYADR-Y-WENNOL.]

Swallowfield, pa. and vil., S.E. Berks., 5 S.E. of Reading; ac. 3,745; soil mostly sand and gravel, overlying clay. The church of All Saints (restored 1862–70) was built in 1256 by John le Despencer, then Baron of S., who died in 1274 and was buried here; during the restoration of the church his remains were found half-way between the south door and the chancel screen in a stone coffin surmounted by a stone cross. There are Primitive Methodist and Baptist chapels. The charities amount to about £9 yearly. Near the vil. is S. Park. The mansion was built in 1678 by Henry, second Earl of Clarendon. Here Sir Edward Hyde, the first Earl of Clarendon, Lord High Chancellor in the reign of Charles II., resided with his son upon his retirement from public life, and here he is said to have written the greater part, if not the whole, of his "History of the Rebellion"; two wings at the rear of the mansion are of much older date. Loddon Court, in a richly-timbered park, is a seat; it is notable for its oak-trees, which are very fine.

Swanage, pa., seaport, and rising watering-place, Isle of Purbeck, S.E. Dorset, 10 S.E. of Wareham; ac. 3,095, and 163 foreshore. The old part of the to. consists of an irregularly built street of about a mile in length; the modern to. is of quite recent growth. The bathing is good, the sands being firm, clean, and with a uniform slope at all states of the tide.

To those fond of yachting and fishing, S. offers many attractions; good seaworthy boats and tackle can always be had. There is a pier, at which steamers plying between Poole, Bournemouth and S. land their passengers. The church of St. Mary was, with the exception of the tower, entirely rebuilt (1859–60) in E. Eng. style; the tower is very ancient and supposed to be of Saxon origin; its massive walls rise in four stages to a height of 80 ft.; there are several tablets and brasses

Various Nonconformist bodies also have places of worship. The Town Hall (1883), in the High Street, is a substantial stone building; the front is a fine elevation with some handsome stone carving by Wren, formerly part of the front of Mercers' Hall, London. The Mowlem Institute on the beach has a well-supplied library, a hall for lectures, and a reading-room. A well-proportioned pillar near the institute commemorates the naval victory King Alfred gained over the Danes in the Bay of Swanage in 877. An obelisk at the entrance of the to. is to the memory of "Albert the Good." A handsome clock tower in the grounds of Grove House and a prominent object from the bay was originally erected on the Surrey side of London Bridge to the memory of the Duke of Wellington, but the arrangements for the railway from Charing Cross to London Bridge necessitating its removal, it was presented to Mr. Doowra, who re-erected it in its present position. S. Bay is a good roadstead in all winds except easterly; the long wooden pier is of great service for shipping the native products, large quantities of stone being sent from here annually. Purbeck stone, the staple of this neighbourhood, has for ages been an important article of export, and the trade is now reviving. Lobsters are taken here. There was formerly a trade in straw plait, giving employment to a number of women and children; it was made into baskets, mats, and other fancy articles, and the trade has revived considerably of late years. There are some small charities for distribution. Of the outlying farmhouses the most ancient are Whitecliff, supposed to have been formerly a residence of King John (1½ N.), and Godlingston, formerly a monastery (1½ N.W.); parts of the remains are of great antiquity. Newton Manor is a seat, with a good collection of works of art.

Swanbourne, pa. and vil., Mid Bucks., 9 S.E. of Buckingham; ac. 2,510; soil loam and gravel, overlying lime and lias. The church of St. Swithin (restored 1864) is of various periods, and contains an ancient wall painting, a piscina, an aumbry, and some monuments to the Adams family. The Baptists and Primitive Methodists have chapels, there are some small charities, and the school has an endowment. S. House, a large white brick mansion on an eminence, and surrounded by a picturesque park, commands extensive views.

Swanland, tp., pas. of and 1½ N. from North Ferriby and Kirk Ella (q.v.), E.R. Yorks.; ac. 2,871. There are Congregational and Primitive Methodist chapels. S. Manor House and S. Hall are seats.

Swanley, eccl. pa. and vil., pa. of Sutton-at-Hone (q.v.), N.W. Kent, 4 S.W. of Dartford. The church of St. Paul is in Dec. style, and contains some mosaics by Minton and Salviati. Here is a Wesleyan chapel.

Swanley Junction, ha., pa. of Sutton-at-Hone (q.v.), N.W. Kent, 1 S.W. of Swanley. Here is a parish room, a Congregational chapel, and a Convalescent Home. There are nurseries, fruit gardens, and a jam factory.

Swanlinbar, small mkt. to. (s.), pa. of Kinawley (q.v.), N. co. Cavan, Ir., 12 S. of Enniskillen. The district, surrounding is wild and mountainous. Fairs are held in Feb., March, May, June, July, Aug., Sept., Oct., Nov., and Dec.

Swanmore (1), pa. and vil., N.E. Hants, 1½ S.E. of Bishops Waltham; ac. 2,000. The church of St. Barnabas is in Norm. style, and in 1872 a vicarage house was erected. Here is a Primitive Methodist chapel and workmen's club, with reading-room and small library. S. House is a modern mansion in Elizabethan style, in a park of about 80 ac., and commanding extensive views of the surrounding country and the Isle of Wight.

Swannington (1), pa. and vil., N. Norf., 10 N.W. of Norwich; ac. 1,433 (including common); soil sand and loam, overlying sand and gravel. The church of St. Margaret is E. Eng. and Perp. The charities amount to £17 yearly. Ket, the tanner, who raised an insurrection in the reign of Edward VI. against enclosures and the exactions of the aristocracy, was taken prisoner in this pa. and hanged with his brother at Norwich in Nov. or Dec., 1549. S. Lawn contains many beautiful specimens of oak carving, tapestry, and several stained windows. Some of the carved oak was brought from the house of W. Rogers, Mayor of Norwich in 1543 and again in 1548.

Swannington (2), tp. and vil., pa. of Whitwick (q.v.), N.W. Leics., 16½ N.W. of Leicester; ac. 1,450. Rich beds of coal underlie the soil, the working of which gives employment to a great number of the inhabitants.

Swan Pool, small lake, pa. of Budock (q.v.), S.W. Cornw., ¾ S. by W. of Falmouth. The lake is about half a mile in length from north to south, and about a quarter wide. It was formerly an arm of the sea, from which it is now separated by a wide stretch of gravel.

Swanscombe, pa. and vil., N.W. Kent, 4 E. of Dartford; ac. 2,140 land, 415 water; soil gravel and chalk, overlying chalk. The church of St. Peter and St. Paul is E. Eng.; the lectern is Perp.; among the monuments are those of Anthony Weldon, Sir Ralph Weldon (d. 1609), and one with alabaster effigies of a knight and his dame; Sir Erasmus Wilson (d. 1884) is buried in the church. Here are Congregational and Wesleyan chapels, a Baptist meeting-room, and Salvation Army barracks. Beare's almshouses were founded by John Beare in 1587, and the inmates are supported by Lady

Swansea, parl., mun., and co. bor., pa., seaport, co. and mkt. to. (W., S.), head of a petty sess. div., and Co. Co. dis., N.W. Glamorgs., 24 S.E. of Carmarthen, and 35 E. by N. of Cardiff; ac. of parl. bor. 15,582, mun. bor. 5,087, pa. 6,880. S. is pleasantly situated on the right bank of the Tawe, which here enters Swansea Bay—hence its Welsh name Abertawe. It has made wonderfully rapid progress during the last fifty or sixty years owing to the numerous works established in connection with the neighbouring coalfields. The church of St. Mary (restored 1875) was for the most part rebuilt after the fall of the nave in 1739, and is now a very plain edifice, but the old chancel remains; it contains a brass of Sir Hugh Johnys (d. 1441) of Llandymor Castle; an altar-tomb with figures of Sir Matthew Cradock, High Steward of Gower, and his wife, Lady Elizabeth Gordon, a daughter of the Earl of Huntley, who had previously been married to the celebrated Perkin Warbeck; and the altar-tomb of Sir Philip Hoby of Neath Abbey; the two latter are situated in the Herbert Chapel. Christ Church, Holy Trinity, St. Gabriel's, St. Matthew's, St. Mark's, St. Mary with St. James, St. Peter Cockett, and St. Thomas's, are eccl. pas. with modern churches in Gothic style. There are also several chapels-of-ease. The other places of worship include Roman Catholic churches; Presbyterian, Baptist, Wesleyan, Primitive Methodist, Unitarian, and Congregational chapels; and a Jewish Synagogue. The Town Hall is a handsome edifice of the Corinthian order; in front of it stands a bronze statue of the late John Henry Vivian, who represented the bor. from 1833 to 1852. The Royal Institution of South Wales, a fine building of the Ionic order, erected in 1840, includes a library, a lecture theatre, and a scientific museum, remarkable for its splendid collection of mammoth remains found in the Gower caves. The Public Library, Art Gallery, and Schools of Science and Art are located in a four-storied building in Italian style, opened in 1887; the ground floor is occupied by the library, with a spacious reference library and reading-room of circular form projecting at the rear; among the treasures it contains are the Welsh Book of Common Prayer and New Testament, printed in 1567, and Bishop Morgan's translation of the Bible (1588). The market, which covers a considerable area, was opened in 1830. Among charitable institutions are the S. Hospital (1867–78), in Elizabethan style, the Cambrian Institution for the Deaf and Dumb, the S. and South Wales Institution for the Blind, the Sailors' Home, and the Industrial Homes for Orphans and Friendless Girls. The principal places of amusement are the New Theatre and Star Opera House (1873) and the Albert Hall (1864). The Grammar School was founded by Hugh Gore, Bishop of Waterford and Lismore, in 1682; the existing structure dates from 1852. S. Castle is an interesting ruin nearly hidden from view by the surrounding buildings. It consists of a single massive tower surmounted by a very elegant parapet with an open arcade; is supposed to have been erected by Henry Gower, Bishop of St. David's, about 1330. On the same site stood a fortress built about 1113 by Henry de la Bellemonte, Earl of Warwick, who garrisoned it with Flemings and other settlers established in Gower. In the latter part of the 15th cent. the castle passed through a female representative from the Herbert family to the Somerset, and is now the property of the Duke of Beaufort. It was held alternately by both sides during the great Civil War. Portions of the building are now utilised as a storehouse and a drill-hall. A statue of Sir Henry Hussey Vivian, Bart., who represented the bor. from 1857 to 1885, stands in Castle Square. There are several public recreation grounds, the principal being Brynmill Park (9 ac.), Cwmdonkin Park (13 ac.), and Victoria Park (16 ac.). S. has now an excellent harbour, full use having been made of the advantage offered by the river mouth. There are three important docks—the Town Float or North Dock, the South Docks, and the Prince of Wales's Dock, opened in 1852, 1859, and 1880 respectively. In these docks hydraulic power is used on a very large scale. At the entrance of the harbour are two long piers, one extending from its east side towards the West Pier on the opposite bank of the river, which makes a curve seawards. Copper was smelted at S. as far back as the reign of Elizabeth, but it is only since the opening up of the coalfields that the industry has assumed such vast proportions. The manufacture of tin plate ranks second only to that of copper, and iron, steel, zinc, nickel, cobalt, lead, and various other metals, are also worked on a very large scale. Of the other industries, the most important are shipbuilding and the manufacture of chemicals. Of late years S. has come into prominence as a port, and in this respect it now rivals Cardiff, exporting its various products and the coal brought from the neighbourhood in large quantities

Swansea Bay, inlet of the Bristol Channel off north-west coast of Glamorgs. The bay is surrounded by land on the north, east, and west, being open to the sea towards the south, where it is 8 miles across between Mumbles Head on the west and the mouth of the Avon on the east. It extends about half that distance inland. The to. of Swansea is situated on the north shore about midway between the mouth of the Neath, which enters the river at its north-east extremity, and Mumbles Head. The shore of the bay forms a noble sweep, which was considered by Landor to be no less grand than that of the Bay of Naples.

Swanton Abbott, pa. and vil., E. Norf., 11 N. by E. of Norwich; ac. 1,130; soil mixed, overlying gravel and clay. The church of St. Michael is Dec., and contains a memorial brass in good preservation to Stephen de Multon (d. 1477). Here are Wesleyan and Wesleyan Reform chapels. Twenty-five acres of common land were allotted to the poor for cutting fuel; the rent of other land is appropriated in the purchase of coals for the poor and for the repair of the church. S. Hall is a seat.

Swanton Morley, pa. and vil. on the Wensum, Mid Norf., 4 N.E. of East Dereham; ac. 2,714; soil loam and clay, overlying clay. The church of All Saints is Late Perp. There is a Primitive Methodist chapel. The town lands produce £65 yearly, which is divided equally for repairs of the church and distribution to the poor. There are several other charities in this pa. The ancient castle of the Lords Morley was situated on the banks of the river Wensum, opposite the present site of Bylaugh Park, but only portions of the foundations and cellars now remain.

Swanton Novers, pa. and vil., N. Norf., 6 S.W. of Holt; ac. 1,315; soil mixed, overlying clay and brick-earth. Here is a bed of clay, of which bricks and coarse earthenware are made. The church of St. Edmund (restored 1881) is Perp. There is a Free Methodist chapel. S. House, pleasantly situated near the high road from Holt to Dereham, is a seat.

Swan Village, vil., pa. of Sedgley (q.v.), S. Staffs., about 3 N. of Dudley. There is a Church of England mission church.

Swanwick (1), eccl. pa. and vil., pa. of and 1½ S. from Alfreton (q.v.), E. Derbys. The church of St. Andrew is in Dec. style. The Hayes and S. Hall are seats.

Swarby, pa. and vil., S. Lincs., 4 S.W. of Sleaford; ac. 910; soil light loam and stiff clay, overlying limestone. The church of St. Mary and All Saints (restored 1887) is E. Eng., Late Dec., and Perp.; at the east end of the south aisle is a bracket supporting a headless figure, seated on a bench. In the churchyard at the east end of the south aisle is a mutilated recumbent effigy.

Swarcliffe, ha., pa. of Hampsthwaite (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., 3 S.W. of Ripley. S. Hall is a seat.

Swardeston, pa. and vil., S. Norf., 4 S.S.W. of Norwich; ac. 933; soil sandy and flinty, subsoil mixed. The church of St. Mary the Virgin is E. Eng., and contains a fine screen, some stained glass, and several monuments. Mangreen Hall is a seat.

Swarkeston, pa. and vil. extending some distance along the north bank of the Trent, S. Derbys., 5 S. by E. of Derby; ac. 968; soil mixed, overlying gravel. The Trent and Mersey Canal passes through the pa. and is here joined by the Derby Canal. The church of St. James was restored and partially rebuilt 1876; the Perp. tower with the Harpur mortuary chapel constitute all that is left standing of the old church since the restoration and rebuilding in 1876; this chapel, situated on the south side of the chancel, contains two alabaster monuments—one to Richard Harpur, Justice of the Common Pleas (d. 1577), and Jane (Fynderne), his wife, with recumbent effigies, that of the judge being in official robes with a collar of SS; surrounding the tomb is a fillet of brass, with engraved figures of boars and dogs; the other tomb has also recumbent effigies, one in armour, of Sir John Harpur, Knight, son of the judge (d. 1627), his head resting on his helmet, and the other to Isabella (Pierpont), his first wife; on the front of this tomb, and carved in relief, is a double prayer-desk with open books thereon, and the kneeling figures of seven sons on one side and five daughters on the other; above each are their names and shields of arms; against the south wall, above the tomb, is a curious tablet, with an inscription to both, surrounded with floriated work and objects in colour, and against the east wall of this chapel is a mural monument to Frances, eldest daughter of William, sixth Baron Willoughby of Parham, and wife first of Sir John Harpur, Knight (d. 1714), surviving three husbands. On the north side is a canopied tomb to the Rolleston family, the top of which is incised with figures of John Rolleston (d. 1482), in plate armour, and his wife (d. 1460); on the front are carved in relief the figures of seven sons and seven daughters; in the wall under this arch is a small niche. The font is apparently Norm. A fine Norm. arch ornamented with chevron moulding separates the chancel from the nave, and several pieces of Norm. stonework of the 12th cent. were found during the rebuilding, one of these being a jamb of the original south doorway; they are now built into the interior wall. The site of S. Old Hall is now occupied by a farmhouse, and considerable remains of the old mansion still exist. The Balcony, or bowling green, is a large enclosure surrounded by a stone wall about 3 ft. high, and is supposed to have been an arena for bull-baiting and similar sports; it stood close to the Hall, and the ruins seem to indicate the existence of an amphitheatre or some such structure; it is now used as a paddock for sheep.

Swaton, pa. and vil., S. Lincs., 9 S.E. of Sleaford; ac. 3,670; soil various, overlying gravel and Oxford clay. The church of St. Michael (restored 1851 and 1856) is E. Eng., Late Dec., and Perp.; portions of the ancient canopied chancel screen are now in the south transept. In the north aisle is the recumbent stone effigy of a lady of the 14th cent.; the west window, which is of great size, occupies the entire end of the church, and, as well as the west windows of the aisles, has reticulated quatrefoiled tracery. The font is a remarkably good and almost unique example of curvilinear Gothic, and consists of an octagonal basin, carried on a shafted hexagonal stem; the pulpit, reading-desk, and choir stalls and seats are of finely carved oak, many of the latter being of 15th-cent. work.

Swatragh, vil., pa. of Killelagh (q.v.), S. co. Londy., Ir., 5 S.W. of Kilrea. Fairs for cattle, etc., are held on the third Monday of each month.

Swavesey, large pa. and vil., W. Cambs., 9 S.E. of Huntingdon; ac. 3,891; soil and subsoil mostly clay. The church of St. Andrew (restored 1867) originally belonged to a priory founded here in the time of Edward the Confessor. It is chiefly E. Eng. and Perp.; on the south side of the chancel are fine sedilia and a piscina of the Dec. period; in the south chantry is a quasi-classic marble tomb to Anne (Kempe), wife of Sir John Cutts, Knight, of Childerley (d. 1631); the south aisle retains an E. Eng. piscina; the chancel arch is a fine example of 13th-cent. work, and is fitted with a modern screen with half-groined rood-loft above. The font is Perp., and lying near it are four E. Eng. coffin slabs with crosses. Here are Baptist and Primitive Methodist chapels. Charities to the amount of £103 are distributed to the poor yearly in fuel. A market and fair were held here formerly, but have long been obsolete.

Sway, eccl. pa. and tp., pa. of Boldre (q.v.), S. Hants, 4 N.W. of Lymington; ac. 2,208. The church of St. Luke is a plain brick structure; there are Baptist and Wesleyan chapels. There is a charity devoted to educational purposes. S. House is a seat.

Swayfield, pa. and vil., S. Lincs., 10 S.E. of Grantham; ac. 1,300; soil loam, overlying clay. The church of St. Nicholas (rebuilt 1824 and 1875) is in various styles.

Swaythorpe, pa. of and 3½ N. from Kilham (q.v.), E.R. Yorks., now a farm, was anciently a vil. of two streets, which may still be traced; the foundation of a chapel is also visible, near a spring called Chapel Well.

Sweethope, tp., pa. of and 1¾ N.W. from Thockrington (q.v.), S. Northumb.; ac. 1,025.

Sweffling, pa. and vil., E. Suff., 3 W. of Saxmundham; ac. 1,350; soil mixed, overlying clay and sand. The church of St. Mary (repaired) is Perp.; the entrance porch on the south side of the edifice is exceedingly handsome, and is ornamented with curious freestone sculpture, inlaid in squares, strongly cemented into the flint work. The charities are of the yearly value of £20. Dennford Hall, once a seat, is now a farmhouse.

Swell, pa., S. Somerset, 10 E. of Taunton; ac. 1,342; soil sandy loam, overlying clay. The church of St. Catherine is an ancient stone building. S. Court is now a farmhouse.

Swell, Lower, pa. and vil., E. Glouc., 5 S. of Moreton-in-the-Marsh; ac. 1,670; soil stonebrash, overlying oolite. The church of St. Mary (partly rebuilt 1870) is of Norm. and later periods; there is a low-side window and a squint. The pa. contains three barrows and a chalybeate spring. S. Bowl was formerly the residence of Sir Robert Atkyns. Abbotswood and Quar Wood are seats.

Swell, Upper, pa. and vil., E. Glouc., 5 S. of Moreton-in-the-Marsh; ac. 1,460; soil stonebrash, overlying stonebrash and oolite. The church of St. Mary is Norm., with some later work; in the chancel are sedilia and a piscina; the font is Perp. The pa. has a small charity. Here are two barrows.

charities amount annually to nearly £100. S. Hall is a seat.

Swerford, pa. and vil., N. Oxon., 5 N.E. of Chipping Norton; ac. 1,846; soil stonebrash, overlying brash rock. The church of St. Mary (restored) is Dec. The Primitive Methodists have a chapel. There is a small charity, and the poor's land produces £38 yearly. S. Park is a seat.

Swettenham, pa., tp., and vil. on the Dane, S.E. Chesh., 5 N.W. of Congleton; ac. of pa. 2,243, of tp. 1,010. The church of St. Swithin, built in 1720, is a brick structure. The Roman Catholic church of St. Thomas and St. Mary is in the park which surrounds S. Hall, a seat, where is preserved a set of Apostle spoons presented by Lord William Russell on the scaffold to a friend.

Swift, affluent of the Avon, S. Leics. and E. Warws., rises in the pa. of Gilmorton, 2⅓ N.N.E. of Lutterworth, and runs S.W. to Churchover and thence S. to Brownsover (near Rugby), where it enters the Avon. Its length is 12 miles. This small stream has become famous in consequence of the well-known saying of Fuller regarding the remains of Wycliffe, who was buried at Lutterworth (q.v.). In obedience to a decree of the Council of Constance his body was disinterred, burnt, and thrown into the river, which, says Fuller, "hath conveyed his ashes into Avon, Avon into Severn, Severn into the narrow seas, they into the main ocean; and thus the ashes of Wycliffe are the emblem of his doctrine, which is now dispersed all the world over."

Swilgate, stream, N. Glouc., rises 1½ N. of Cheltenham, and runs N.W. past Elmstone Hardwick, Stoke Orchard, and Tredington, and thence N. to the Severn at Tewkesbury. Its length is about 8 miles.

Swilland, pa. and vil., S.E. Suff., 6 N.E. of Ipswich; ac. 951; soil heavy, overlying strong clay. The church of St. Mary is Perp. and Dec. with handsome Norm. arch. The poor's land consists of 1 ac., let in allotments, the rent of which produces about £2 yearly.

Swillington, pa. and vil. on the Aire, W.R. Yorks., 6 S.E. of Leeds; ac. 2,627; soil mostly clay, overlying clay. The church of St. Mary is E. Eng.; the chancel retains a well-preserved piscina and sedilia; the earliest monuments are two slabs of Purbeck marble, one of them dated 1503, to the memory of two ancient lords of S.; there are two 17th-cent. brasses, and a number of 18th-cent. mural monuments and tablets. The Wesleyans have a chapel. There are four almshouses, and charities amounting annually to about £10. In the pa. are the remains of an old Roman road. S. is mentioned in Domesday Book as "Suilligtune." S. House, a fine old mansion, is a seat. Leventhorpe Hall is also a seat.

Swilly, stream, Mid co. Don., Ir., rises in the south outskirts of the Glendowan Mountains, 10 W. by S. of Letterkenny, and, passing on the south side of that to., enters Lough Swilly at its south extremity. It has a long estuary running N.E., which makes its total length about 15 miles.

Swilly, Lough, arm of the sea, N.E. co. Don., Ir. The lough extends about 25 S. between the Inishowen peninsula on the east and Kilmacrenan bar. on the west, and ranges in breadth from 1½ to 4½ miles. The central part of the lough, between Buncrana on the east and Rathmullen on the west, forms a considerable curve towards the east. At the head of a creek running inland from its east shore, further south than Rathmullen, is the to. of Rathmelton. The entrance to the lough is between Dunatt Head on the east and Fanad Head on the west. There are lighthouses on Fanad Head and Dunree Head. The shores, which are low and shelving towards the south end of the lough, become much loftier near its mouth. Its chief beauty, however, consists in the noble expanse of water formed by the lough itself.

Swimbridge, pa. and vil., N. Dev., 4⅓ E.S.E. of Barnstaple; ac. 7,061; soil loamy, overlying clay. The church of St. James (restored 1880) is Late Perp.; the western tower is Dec. The oak rood-screen, which has been restored, is remarkable for its carving; the font is enclosed within a screen of carved oak. There is a church mission room and Wesleyan and Baptist chapels. The charities and poor's lands produce between £100 and £120 yearly. There is a tannery here employing a number of hands. Ernesborough Manor House, of which only a tower remained in 1773, was the birthplace in 1554 of John Cowell, author of "The Interpreter," a well-known dictionary of law terms. The Barton of Hannaford, Bydown, Cobbaton House, Dennington, Dinnaton, Irishborough, Stowford, and Tordown are seats. In Bydown are preserved the sword and armour of Roger de Moels, a Norman warrior.

Swinbrook, pa. and vil. on the Windrush, W. Oxon., 6½ N.W. of Witney; ac. 1,517; soil limestone brash, overlying rock. The church of St. Mary was originally Norm., and contains some fine oak stalls with misereres; several monuments of the Fettiplace family, dating from 1504 to 1686; brasses to Anthony Fetyplace (1510), John Croston (1470), Alys Feteplas (1550), Symond Feteplas (c. 1530), and Alexander Feteplace (1616). In the north aisle are Norm. piers surmounted by pointed arches; the windows are Dec., and the south aisle and porch are E. Eng. There is a Primitive Methodist chapel. The Fettiplace family endowed several charities, and the school founded in 1716 by Anne Fettiplace is endowed; S. can send two boys to Christ's Hospital School, London. Hugh Curwen, Archbishop of Dublin, died here in 1568.

Swinburn, Great, ha., pa. of Chollerton (q.v.), S. Northumb., 8 N.E. of Hexham. There is a Catholic chapel here. S. Castle is a seat.

Swinburn, Little, ha., pa. of Chollerton (q.v.), S. Northumb., 11 N. of Hexham.

Swin Channel, channel in the mouth of the Thames off east coast of Essex, opposite Foulness. The channel lies between the Barrow Sands on the west and the Maplin and Foulness Sands off the shore. It comprises three portions—the South, Middle, and East Swin (the last being also known as the King's Channel)—and is 30 miles long with a width varying from 1 to 3 miles. The channel forms the main passage from the Nore northwards. There are lights off the Mouse and Maplin Sands and in the Middle Swin.

Swinden, tp. on the Ribble, pa. of and 4½ N. from Gisburne (q.v.), W.R. Yorks.; ac. 1,049.

Swinderby, pa. and vil., W. Lincs., 9 S.W. of Lincoln; ac. 2,073; soil mixed, overlying clay in some parts, in others sand. The church of All Saints (restored 1879) is chiefly Norm.; there is a brass with inscription to certain members of the ancient family of Disney, dated 1613. There is a Wesleyan chapel. The charities amount to about £90 a year.

Swindon (1), pa. and large mkt. to., first-class station on the Great Western Railway, N. Wilts., 21 N.E. from Devizes; ac. 4,246. S. consists of two portions (Old S. and New S.), the existence and rapid growth of the latter being due to the railway works. The hill on which the old to. stands is of sand and stone, surrounded by Kimmeridge clay, mostly covered by a rich alluvial soil. The adjoining farms are mostly pasture. The pa. church (Christ Church) was erected in 1851 in Dec. style, from designs by the late Sir G. G. Scott, R.A. The chancel of the old church is still standing, and contains several monuments, but is disused. There are several eccl. pas. with modern churches, a Catholic church, and places of worship for various bodies of Nonconformists. Other public buildings are the Town Hall (1852), the Corn Exchange in Market Square, the public offices in Regent's Circus (1892), a fine block in Renaissance style; the Great Western Mechanics' Institute, opposite the railway works; the Victoria Hospital (1888), the establishment of the Great Western Medical Fund Society (1892), and the Accident and Isolation Hospitals. The markets are held on Mondays for pitched corn, and every second and last Monday for fat cattle. Sales of cattle, sheep and horses are held every Monday. There are fairs on the second Monday after May 11 and the second Monday in Dec., and statute fairs for hiring servants on the first Monday before April 5 and on the second Monday after Sept. 11. S. is the centre of the Great Western Railway works, and the factory for the whole of the line. The locomotive and carriage works are on an extensive scale, and cover an area of about 200 ac., and, together with the iron foundry and boiler works, employ about 9,000 hands. Quarries of oolite, well adapted for building, are abundant in the neighbourhood; quantities of fossil and other remains have been found which are highly interesting to geologists. Within a mile and a half of the to., on the Liddington Road, is a beautiful lake of 80 ac., the reservoir for supplying the Wilts and Berks canal, which passes through the pa. within half a mile of the to.; it is delightfully situated in a picturesque dis., beautifully wooded. The railway, quarries, and general agricultural pursuits furnish employment for the working population. The charities amount to about £110 a year. The to. gardens, 7 ac. in extent, form a public pleasure ground.

Swine, pa., tp., and vil., E.R. Yorks., 12 S.E. of Beverley; ac. of pa. 16,502, of tp. 2,286; soil various, overlying gravel, clay, and peat. The church of St. Mary, formerly attached to the priory, is Norm. and Dec., the tower being rebuilt in 1787; the east end of the north aisle is enclosed by screen work erected in 1531, and in the chapel so formed are several monuments of the Hilton family; in the south aisle are two mutilated monuments believed to belong to the Sutton family; in the chancel are some Dec. stalls and grotesquely carved misereres. S. has a small charity. There was formerly a priory of Cistercian nuns here. The pa. contains remains of an ancient cross and traces of a Roman camp; an urn, coins, and other curiosities have been found.

Swinefleet, eccl. pa., tp. (S. and Reedness), and vil. on the Ouse, pa. of Whitgift (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., 3 S.E. of Goole; ac. 4,827. The church of St. Margaret is an ancient brick building. Here are Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist chapels.

Swineford, or Swinford, U. and mkt. to. (F.), pa. of Kilcondufi (q.v.), Gallen bar., E. co. Mayo, Ir., 15 N.E. of Castlebar. It derives its name from a fordable stream which passes by the to., and near which was formerly held a considerable market for swine. The main street is wide and contains many good buildings, and there is a good supply of water. The Protestant church of St. Mary is a small Gothic structure erected in 1810. The Catholic church is of recent erection on the site of an older one. The court house is a convenient building; therein petty sessions are held on every second Friday, and quarter sessions in January, April, June, and October. There is also a convent, a union workhouse (erected in 1841), a National school for children of both sexes, and barracks for the constabulary. The market is held on Tuesdays for pigs, provisions, etc. Twelve fairs are held yearly, one on the first Wednesday in each month.

Swineshead (1), pa. and vil., formerly mkt. to., S.E. Lincs., 7 S.W. of Boston; ac. 7,166; soil loam and clay, overlying clay. The church of St. Mary (rebuilt 1847) is chiefly in Dec. and Perp. styles; in the pavement of the nave are three sepulchral slabs, one of which of grey marble once bore brass effigies of a civilian, his wife and children, with marginal inscription; the next, of freestone, has incised figures of a civilian and his wife, and a marginal legend to Richard Benett (d. 1520) and Agnes, his wife; the third, of stone, bears an elaborate stemmed cross, surrounding which is an inscription to Roger Berdney and Alice, his wife (d. 1512); in the vestry are remains of a fine marble and alabaster monument, erected on the north wall of the old chancel, to Sir John Lockton, Knight (d. 1610). The local charities and a portion of Cowley's school charity are also appropriated to the purchase of bread and coals for the poor. The market is now obsolete. The steps and part of the shaft of an ancient cross are still standing in the market-place. An annual fair is held on Oct. 2. The sea formerly flowed up to the to., and near the market-place was a harbour. About a quarter of a mile north-east of the to. is a circular Danish encampment, called the "Man-war-ings," about 60 yds. in diameter, and surrounded by a double foss. An abbey for Cistercian monks was founded in 1134. King John, after the loss of his baggage in the Wash, took refuge here in 1216. The curfew is regularly tolled here at 8 p.m., and an ancient custom exists of cutting a large cross in the turf on the spot where anyone has met with a violent death. S. Hall is a seat.

Swineshead (2), or Swynshed, pa. and vil., S. Hunts., nearly surrounded by Beds., 4 S.W. of Kimbolton; ac. 1,330; soil loam and gravel, overlying chiefly blue gault. The church of St. Nicholas is E. Dec.; in the chancel is a small low side-window illustrating the legend of "St. Nicholas and the children," two statue-brackets with heads, a sedile and a piscina; below the steps of the presbytery is a slab incised with a cross and paten; in the north wall is a sepulchral recess with a richly-foliated canopy; within it is an E. Eng. door, communicating by a narrow passage with the east end of the north aisle, and under it is a slab inscribed in Norman-French to Richard Aytrop, the date being effaced; there are twelve stalls, with restored misereres of E. Perp. date, and a screen of the same period separates nave and chancel; the chapel at the east end of the north aisle had formerly an upper room, connected with the rood-loft by a doorway, which still exists; it retains a piscina; near this chapel is an aumbry; at the east end of the south aisle is another chapel, the east wall of which exhibits traces of mural paintings and has a richly ornamented marble niche, a piscina and a door leading to the rood-loft. There is a Wesleyan chapel.

Swinford, Old, extensive pa. on the Stour, Mid Worcs., 5 S. of Dudley; ac. 3,288. The pa. is well supplied with water communication by means of the Stour and navigable canals. The church of St. Mary is Dec., with modern additions. The pa. is on the border of the S. Staffs. and E. Worcs. coal-field, and a large portion contains minerals, the most important of which is fireclay. Large quantities of the latter are used in the manufacture of pots and bricks for glass furnaces, retorts, and bricks for gas works, and various kinds of bricks used in furnaces for the manufacture of iron.

Swinthorpe, or Swinethorpe, pa., W. Lincs., about 9 W. of Lincoln; ac. 980; soil clay and sand, overlying clay. The Hall, or "Jungle," one of the most curious architectural anomalies in the country, is an ancient castellated and now ivy-clad mansion, built in a rustic Gothic style.

Swinton (1), pa. and vil. on Leetwater, S.E. Berws., Sc., 5 S.E. of Duns; ac. 5,561; soil deep and mostly rich. The surface consists of a succession of low ridges with flat ground between them. The pa. contains an Established church, erected in 1729 and subsequently enlarged, and a Free church, which dates from 1860. Down to nearly the middle of the 19th cent. the estate of S. belonged to the Swintons, a family famous in Scottish history, having been granted to Edulf de Swinton by Malcolm Ceanmohr in the 11th cent., in recognition, it is said, of his services in destroying the wild swine from which the place took its name. S. House, a handsome modern edifice, occupies the site of their residence.

Swinton (2), eccl. pa., tp., and to. on the Don, pa. of Wath-upon-Dearne (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., 5 N.N.E. of Rotherham; ac. 1,700. The church of St. Margaret is modern; two Norm. arches from the former church were preserved and now form the entrance from the churchyard to the parsonage grounds, but are unfortunately allowed to decay; there are no monuments remaining from the ancient church. There are Congregational, Wesleyan, Primitive Methodist, and Reformed Wesleyan chapels. The manufacture of earthenware is carried on here, and there are extensive works for making glass bottles of every description. Here are also large ironworks producing stoves, grates, fenders, kitchen ranges, and ornamental castings; and in the pa. are several collieries and quarries. The Knights of St. John of Jerusalem were formerly the lords of the manor of this tp. King John, when on his last march from York to Boston, slept at S. Old Hall; he added to the endowment of the living, which afterwards was absorbed by the abbeys of Nostel and Roche, and was ultimately alienated when those institutions were dissolved by Henry VIII.

Swinton (3), eccl. pa. and to., pa. of Eccles (q.v.), S.E. Lancs., about 4 N.W. of Manchester. The church of St. Peter, built in 1869 on the site of an older church, is in E. Eng. style, and there are Catholic and several Nonconformist chapels. The pa. contains the Moral and Industrial Training School for the tp. of Manchester. The manufacture of cotton is carried on, and there are brickfields.

Swords, pa. and small to. on the banks of a small stream, Nethercross bar., N.E. co. Dub., Ir., 8 N. of Dublin; ac. 9,676. The Protestant church is a modern structure; there is a Catholic church, and a National school and large free school. The place, one of considerable antiquity, is said to have been the seat of the first Irish Parliament. Within the pa. are the ruins of a castle, once of great magnitude and strength, and a tower, said to be of Danish construction. The castle was from an early period the palace of the Archbishops of Dublin, and was a fortified structure standing in a court surrounded with embattled walls and towers; it was here that the parliaments held at S. assembled. The round (or Pillar) tower is a singular structure, 73 ft. in height, with a conical cap, and is in a good state of preservation. A monastery was founded here by St. Columb in the 6th cent., but this was presumably destroyed, as the to. was frequently burnt by the Danes. A church was erected in the 14th cent., but the remains of this structure were removed, except the belfry tower, when the present church was built; this tower and the round tower are conspicuous in the comparatively flat country. S., which consists chiefly of one wide street, is surrounded by pleasant country. Fairs are held in March, May, June, and November.

The church of St. Botolph (restored) is chiefly Norm., with an apse, containing an aumbry and piscina; the nave windows are E. Eng., the porch Dec.; the font is Norm. There are some tiles, probably temp. Edward III., and during the restoration several frescoes were discovered; there is some interesting stained glass, and several memorials to the families of Ruck, Keene, and Cottrell. S. House, an Elizabethan mansion, is a seat.

Swynnerton, pa. and vil., N.W. Staffs., 4 W. of Stone; ac. 6,481; soil and subsoil chiefly gravel. The church of St. Mary (restored 1865–80) is of Norm., E. Eng., and later periods, the lower portion of the tower is Norm., the lady chapel Dec., and the rood-screen and upper portion of the tower Perp. There is a Roman Catholic chapel. The pa. has some small charities. S. Park is a seat.

Swyre, coast pa. and vil., S. Dors., 6 S.E. of Bridport; ac. 1,146; soil clay, overlying limestone. The church of the Holy Trinity is E. Eng.

Swyre Head, hill (669 ft.), pa. of West Lulworth (q.v.), S. Dors., overlooking Lulworth Cove.

Swythamley Hall. [HEATON (2).]

Sybil Head, cape, W. co. Kerry, Ir., 4 N. of Dunmore Head.

Sychnant Pass, romantic glen on the road between Conway and Penmaenmawr, N.E. Carnarvs., 2 W. by S. of Conway. The glen rises abruptly to a height of more than 600 ft., and commands good views. Near the summit there is a remarkable echo.

Sychtyn, or Soughton, tp. in the Salop portion of the pa. of Llansilin (q.v.), about 3½ S.W. of Oswestry; ac. 1,446. The scenery is charming, including the luxuriant vale of Llansilin, the Shropshire plains, and the Montgomeryshire hills.

Sydenham (1), pa. and vil., S.E. Oxon., 2½ S. of Thame; ac. 1,518; soil clay, overlying clay and gravel. The church of St. Mary is E. Eng. with some Dec. work. The Baptists have a chapel. There are some small charities.

Sydenham (2), residential dis. and south-east sub. of London, within the bor. of Lewisham (q.v.), N.W. Kent. Here are eccl. pas. with modern churches, a Catholic chapel, and places of worship for various Nonconformist bodies. The Crystal Palace, which extends into Surrey, was opened on June 10, 1854, in great state, by Queen Victoria. The building measures 1,608 ft. in length; the wings an additional length of 574 ft. each, with a railway avenue of 720 ft.; the greatest width is 384 ft., and the general width 312 ft.; the height of the great transept from the floor is 175 ft., and from the terrace 197 ft. 10 in.; the area of the galleries is 261,568 square ft., and that of the whole building, 603,072 square ft. One wing and a part of the north end of the Palace were burned down, but a portion has been completely restored. At either end of the building are two octagonal towers, each rising to the height of 284 ft. and surmounted by a tank holding 357,675 gallons, or 1,576 tons of water, for supplying the highest jets of the great fountains. Each tower contains 800 tons of iron; the central jets of the two great fountains reach a height, if undisturbed, of 280 ft.; the central fountain, near the temples, plays to a height of 150 ft., and the fountains on the terrace to 90 ft. Entirely apart from any extra attractions, the Palace has a series of Fine Art Courts, illustrating, by great authoritative examples, in chronological sequence, the architecture, sculpture, and decorative arts of Egypt, Greece and Rome, the Byzantine, Mediæval and Renaissance periods, and Early as well as Late Italian; the superb decorations of the Alhambra are also here minutely reproduced, and there is a complete realisation of a Pompeian house. The Palace has also a Technological Museum, an Educational Department, with a complete staff of distinguished teachers, and a successful school of Practical Engineering. There are, besides industrial courts, a picture gallery, fountains, flowers, and tropical plants and trees. The park and gardens, occupying, with the Palace, an area of about 200 ac., are arranged in the Italian and English styles, and include a great lake with artificial rockwork skilfully arranged so as to illustrate various geological strata; and on the islands are grouped models of the extinct monsters inhabiting the earth in primeval times. The park is laid out in a style of rich natural beauty, contrasting admirably with the more artificial charms of the terrace gardens. Entertainments, such as Operas, and popular and classical concerts, are given almost daily, and in the summer season there are magnificent displays of fireworks. Grand musical festivals, such as the Handel Festival, and immense choral gatherings of children, take place here at intervals, and are attended by crowded assemblies. Occasionally celebrations of State importance occur, such as the public reception or ceremonial visits of foreign Sovereigns, and many great class celebrations of national significance. The railway communication is direct with all parts of the metropolis.

Sydenham Damerel, pa. and small vil. on the Tamar, S. Dev., about 5 W. of Tavistock; ac. 1,379; soil loamy, overlying spar-stone. The church of St. Mary (restored 1864) is Perp. Here is a Bible Christian chapel. The poor have £20 yearly from a charity.

Syderstone, pa. and small vil., N.W. Norf., 6 S.E. of Docking, on the high road to Fakenham; ac. 2,520; soil loam and sand, overlying chalk. The church of St. Mary is a small structure of the Dec period; the aisles were taken down about 1784. Here are Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist chapels. This is said to have been the birthplace (c. 1525) of Amy, daughter of Sir John Robsart, and wife from June 4, 1549, of Robert Dudley, Earl of Leicester. She died under suspicious circumstances at Cumnor Place, near Oxford, Sept. 8, 1560, and was interred with stately funeral rites in a vault below the choir of St. Mary the Virgin, Oxford, Sept. 22, 1560.

Sydling St. Nicholas, pa. and vil., Mid Dors., 8 N.W. of Dorchester; ac. 5,028; soil light upon chalk. The church of St. Nicholas is Perp. There are Wesleyan and Congregational chapels. A court leet is held once a year in May, at the Greyhound Inn.

Sydmonton, or Sidmonton, pa., W. Hants, 7 S. of Newbury; ac. 2,139; soil and subsoil various. The church of St. Mary the Virgin, erected on the site of a previous church, is a building of cut flint with stone dressings, in the Gothic style; the inner arch of the porch and the eastern arch of the tower are good moulded Norm. work, and were removed from the original church. S. Court is an ancient and commodious mansion, with extensive grounds.

Syerscote, tp., pa. of Tamworth (q.v.), S.E. Staffs., 2½ S.W. of Wigginton; ac. 480.

Syerston, pa. and vil., E. Notts., 5½ S.W. of Newark; ac. 770; soil loamy, subsoil principally sand and clay. The church of All Saints is E. Eng. S. Hall is a seat.

Sykehouse, eccl. pa. and tp., pa. of Fishlake (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., 4¾ S. of Snaith; ac. 4,009. The church of the Holy Trinity, originally erected about 1235, was rebuilt with the exception of the tower in 1869. There are Nonconformist chapels. The charities amount to £17 a year.

Sykeside, ha., pa. of Whalley (q.v.), N.E. Lancs., 5 W. of Burnley.

Syleham, pa. and vil. on the Waveney, N.E. Suff., 6 N.E. of Eye; ac. 1,603; soil mixed, great part marshy. The church of St. Mary (restored 1883) is E. Eng. There is a large water and steam mill for the manufacture of linen drabbets and smocks. S. Hall is a seat.

Symington (1), pa., E. Lanarks., Sc., 3½ W.S.W. of Biggar; ac. 3,504; soil fertile in the lower parts with large tracts of mountain pasture. The Clyde bounds the pa. on the N.E., E., and S.E. S. is said to take its name from Symon Loccard, to whom it was granted by Malcolm IV. in the 12th cent. The Established church is an old building, restored and enlarged. Tinto Hill, on the slope of which stands Fatlips Castle, is in the pa. A group of trees on the summit of an eminence called Castle Hill marks the site of an ancient fortification.

Symington (2), pa. and vil., W. Ayrs., Sc.; ac. 3,725; the surface is undulating, the soil generally clayey. The vil. is about 2 E. of Dundonald. The lands in this dis. were held at a remote period, under Walter, the first Stuart, by Symon Lockhart, Symondsbury, pa. and pleasant vil., W. Dors., 1½ W.N.W. of Bridport; ac. 3,825, and 100 water and foreshore; soil clay and sand, overlying rock. The church of St. John the Baptist is Perp. The chapel-of-ease of St. Peter (1865) is in E. Eng. style. £18, arising from land, is distributed yearly in blankets to the poor of the pa.

Symond's Green, pl., pa. of and about 1 S.W. from Stevenage (q.v.), N. Herts.

Symond's Yat, or Gate, a limestone plateau, pa. of Whitchurch (q.v.), S. Herefords. It is some 600 ft. above the river, and commands some splendid views of the surrounding country. It was formerly a pass on the road to Wales, and, according to tradition, has been the scene of various encounters since the days of the first building of the old British fort which crowns the summit. In 911 a body of Vikings took possession of S. Yat, whence they were driven with great loss. The scenery in the immediate neighbourhood is of a most delightful description, the river making a large elongated loop at this point, so that, after a course of between four and five miles, it returns again to within less than half a mile of its former channel. There are petrifying streams at the dripping well. Opposite the Yat is the Great Doward Hill.

Syresham, pa. and vil., S. Northants, on the borders of Bucks., 4½ N.E. of Brackley; ac. 3,735; soil partly gravel and partly clay. The church of St. James (restored 1874) is E. Eng.; the porch is very peculiar, being apparently a continuation of the aisle, with an entrance at the west end, close to the tower; the font is Norm., and there is a piscina in the south aisle. There is a Wesleyan chapel. The charities amount to £11 14s. yearly. Lace-making gives employment to a number of women in this pa.

Sysonby, chap. and tp., pa. of and 1 W. from Melton Mowbray (q.v.), E. Leics.; ac. 980. The church is a small Norm. building. S. Lodge is a seat.

Syston (1), pa., S.W. Lincs., 3 N. by E. of Grantham; ac. 1,613; soil light and sandy, overlying limestone. The church of St. Mary the Virgin (restored 1862) is Norm., with E. Eng. and later additions; the arches opening to the tower and chancel from the nave are very fine examples of Norm. work, and the tower itself remains nearly as in the 12th cent. There are monuments to several of the Thorold family. The charities amount to about £10 a year. The vil. is described under the name of "Willingham" in Scott's novel of the "Heart of Mid-Lothian." S. Hall is situated one mile from the vil., within a park of over 546 ac., which contains a large sheet of water; it commands a very extensive prospect of the vales of Grantham and Belvoir, extending to the distant hills of Notts.

Syston (2), pa. and populous vil., E. Leics., 5 N.N.E. of Leicester; ac. 1,380; soil gravel and sand, overlying marl. The church of St. Peter is Perp., and there are places of worship for various Nonconformist bodies. Charities amounting to about £140 a year are distributed to the poor. Gypsum (sulphate of lime or plaster-of-Paris) is found in the pa. and was formerly much worked.

Sywell, pa. and vil., Mid Northants, 6 N.E. of Northampton; ac. 2,101; soil partly stiff loam and partly red clay, overlying chiefly ironstone. The church of SS. Peter and Paul (restored 1870) is of various periods; the chancel is Trans. and E. Eng.; the east and west windows of the aisle are Perp.; the tower is Dec.; there are piscinæ and a squint. The charities amount to about £6 5s. yearly, distributed in money and flour.

Tabley Inferior, tp., pa. of Great Budworth (q.v.), Mid Chesh., 2 w. by s. of Knutsford; ac. 1,205. The place gives the title of Baron to the Leycester-Warren family. St. Peter's Chapel in the park was built by Sir Peter Leycester in 1675. T. House is an 18th-cent. mansion, and has in front a beautiful terrace opening towards a well-wooded park of 800 ac. The old hall, dating from the 14th cent., stands on an island, and is connected by a bridge with the rest of the park.

Tabley Superior, eccl. pa. and tp., pa. of Rostherne (q.v.), 2 w. by N. of Knutsford; ac. 2,659. The church of St. Paul is a modern building in Gothic style. There is a charity of £3 yearly value. The Hall, a little west of the church, was formerly a seat; it is now occupied as a farm-house.

Tackley, pa. and vil. on the Cherwell, Mid Oxon., 9 N. of Oxford; ac. 2,804; soil and subsoil stone-brash, sand, clay and gravel. The church of St. Nicholas (restored 1863) is a cruciform building of stone of various periods. On the north side is a recessed E. Eng. arch, enclosing a Perp. altar-tomb; alongside is a doorway connected with the arch by a single shaft of Purbeck marble; the north aisle of the nave has been destroyed, but two arches of the Norm. arcade are built up in the existing north wall, and a small Norm. door has been rebuilt in the western arch; the south arcade consists of three E. Eng. arches; both transepts are Perp. The church contains a monument of white marble, with a full-sized figure of Justice, to the Hon. John Morton, Chief Justice of Chester (d. 1780). The Wesleyans have a small chapel. Morrice's charity of £4 2s. yearly is for fuel. T. Park is a seat.

Tacolneston, pa. and vil., S. Norf., 5 S.E. of Wymondham; ac. 1,580; soil and subsoil clay. The church of All Saints (restored 1875) is E. Eng. and later, and retains a piscina and sedilia; there is also a piscina in the south aisle. Part of the old screen, finely painted and carved, remains; the Jacobean pulpit is of oak, richly carved; there are tablets to members of the Knipe and Warren families. The charities are £28 yearly, distributed to the poor in coals, and the widows' charity, which gives 1s. 3d. per week to six poor widows. T. Hall is an ancient and picturesque mansion of early date, with a red-brick front, erected in the reign of Queen Anne; it is situated in a well-wooded park of 100 ac., separated from the garden by an ancient moat.

Tacumshin, coast pa., Forth bar., S.E. co. Wex., Ir., 9 S. of Wexford; ac. 3,153. It contains two islands in T. lough, an inlet of the sea, from which it is separated by a narrow stretch of land, with an opening about the centre; it abounds with fish and is frequented by wild fowl. The pa. contains ruins of old castles.

Tacumshin Lough. [TACUMSHIN.]

Tadcaster (formerly called "Langburgh"), pa., U. and mkt. to., head of petty sess. div. and Co. Co. dis., W.R. Yorks., 9 S.W. of York; ac. 4,080, soil clay and limestone, overlying limestone. The to. is situated in a fertile, well-wooded, and picturesque district, abounding in delightful walks along the banks of the Wharfe. The to. consists of the tps. of East and West T., which are separated by the Wharfe; the bridge of nine arches is said to have been built about the beginning of the 18th cent. out of the ruins of the castle, which stood on a hill on the north-west side of the to. The church of St. Mary, which was taken down in 1875-77, and reconstructed on a higher level out of the reach of river floods, is in Perp. style. T. has also Catholic, Wesleyan, and Primitive Methodist chapels. The town hall was built in 1856. The market, principally for cattle, is held on alternate Mondays, and there is a statute fair in November for hiring servants. T. has breweries, malt kilns, a large corn mill, and stone quarries, from one of which was obtained the fine limestone used for the repairs of York Minster and the walls of that city. The Dawson charity provides for twenty annuitants, being widows or spinsters above sixty years; and the trustees, aided by voluntary subscriptions, have built and endowed a Middle Class Girls' School. T. is supposed to have been the Calcaria of the Romans, and to have taken its name from the calx, or limestone, which abounds in the neighbourhood. The Roman road of Agricola from London to Edinburgh, still called the "Roman Ridge," runs through T. Within 3 miles of the to., between the vils. of Towton and Saxton, was fought on Palm Sunday, March 29, 1461, the great battle between the houses of York and Lancaster, which displaced Henry VI. and elevated the Duke of York to the throne as Edward IV. During the Civil War the Earl of Newcastle, on his appointment in 1642 to the command of the King's army, advanced from York with 4,000 men and seven pieces of cannon to attack the to. of T., where the Parliamentary general, Fairfax, was posted with 700 troops. The attack continued all day, but during the night Fairfax drew off his men, and on the following morning the Royalists marched in without opposition.

Tadcaster, East, tp., pa. of Tadcaster (q.v.), W.R. Yorks.; ac. 580.

Tadcaster, West, tp., pa. of Tadcaster (q.v.), W.R. Yorks.; ac. 1,497.

Taddington (1), eccl. pa., tp., and vil., pa. of Bakewell (q.v.), N. Derbys., 4½ S. of Tideswell; ac. 3,008. The church of St. Michael was rebuilt early in the 15th cent. In the chancel, affixed to the north wall, is a low stone reading-desk; on the south side are sedilia and a small piscina. In the south aisle is a more elaborate piscina, and brasses to Richard and Agnes Blackwall and their family

Taddington (2), ha., pa. of and 2 S.E. from Stanway (q.v.), N. Glouc.s.

Tadley, scattered pa., W. Hants, 6½ N.W. of Basingstoke; ac. 2,077; soil sand, gravel and clay. The church of St. Peter (restored 1879) is E. Eng.; it contains a good carved oak pulpit, dated 1650. Here are chapels-of-ease, a church-room used for meetings and entertainments, and Congregational and Primitive Methodist chapels. The charities amount to £2 10s. a year, distributed in blankets, and there are three tenements for poor persons.

Tadlow, pa. on the Cam, W. Cambs., on the borders of Beds., 8 N.W. of Royston; ac. 1,677; soil clayey, overlying clay. The church of St. Giles (restored 1866), prettily situated a short distance off the high road from Biggleswade to Cambridge, is E. Eng., with modern Perp. insertions. In the vil. is a mineral spring.

Tadmarton, pa. and vil., N. Oxon., 4½ W.S.W. of Banbury, on the road to Shipston-on-Stour; ac. 1,976; soil sand and brash, overlying limestone. The church of St. Nicholas (restored) is of various periods; the chancel has two Norm. arches built into the north wall, which support a mural monument to Mary, wife of the Rev. Cresswell Whatley, rector (1657); the east window is late Dec., and there is one small Norm. window; the chancel arch is E. Eng.; the nave arcade consists of three Norm. arches; near the pulpit, on the south side, is a piscina, and above it a deep square recess; the nave has mural monuments to Thomas Deane, M.A., rector of Whitehampton, Dorset, 1754, and others of his family (1726–74). Seven of the old Dec. benches remain; the font is a very early work of this period, and consists of a basin on a base with scroll ornament and grotesque heads. The tower is of three stages, its lower portion being Late Norm. or E. Eng., and the upper portion Perp. There is a small charity for the poor. On T. Heath is a round British camp, through which an ancient trackway passes; and a short distance north-west are two tumuli, each about 20 yds. in diameter at the base; at a distance of 490 yds. to the east is a copious spring called the "Holy Well." Roman coins have been frequently found here.

Tadon, or Atedaun, lough, Inchiquin bar., N.W. co. Clare, Ir., ⅝ E. by S. of Corrofin. The lough has an extreme length of 1 mile from east to west, and is about ½ mile broad.

Taf, river, N.E. Pembs. and W. Carmarths., rises in the pa. of Llanfyrnach, on the east side of the Preseley Mountains, and running S. soon enters Carmarths. Pursuing its course S. by W. through Carmarths. it again reaches the Pembs. border at Llanfallteg, where it turns E.S.E., forming the boundary between the two cos. as far as Whitland. From this point it flows E. through Carmarths. to St. Clears, and thence S.E. to Carmarthen Bay, its estuary uniting with that of the Towy. Midway along the west side of the estuary is the to. of Laugharne. Vessels of 100 tons burden can ascend as far as St. Clears. The length of the river is about 25 miles.

Taff, river, S.E. Brecons. and E. Glamorgs., rises in the Black Mountains in two head-streams, which unite about 2 N.W. of Merthyr Tydfil; the larger of these streams flows S.S.E., and the river continues to run in the same direction throughout the greater part of its course. Among the principal places on its banks are Merthyr Tydfil, near which it receives the Cynon, and Pontypridd or Newbridge, where it is joined by the Rhondda; from the latter place it flows nearly due S.E. to the Bristol Channel at Cardiff. The scenery is extremely picturesque, and in many parts of its course there is much to attract the artist. It is, however, chiefly associated with the industrial activity arising from the mineral wealth of the dis. Its length is about 40 miles.

Taff and Cynon, ha., pa. of and 6 S. from Merthyr Tydfil (q.v.), N.E. Glamorgs. The Glamorgs. canal runs through the ha. to Merthyr Tydfil.

Taff's Well, ha., pa. of Eglwysilan (q.v.), E. Glamorgs., 6 S.E. of Pontypridd. Here is a chapel-of-ease to the pa. church, and also Welsh Congregational, Welsh Calvinistic Methodist, and English Wesleyan chapels.

Taghboy, pa. on the Suck, Killian and Athlone North bars., E. co. Gal. and S. co. Roscom., Ir., 11 N.W. of Ballinasloe; ac. 13,996. It contains the vil. of Ballyforan (q.v.).

Tagheen, pa., Clanmorris bar., S. co. Mayo, Ir., 2 N.E. of Hollymount; ac. 6,837.

Taghmaconnell, pa., Athlone South bar., S. co. Roscom., Ir., 5 N.E. of Ballinasloe; ac. 18,826. It is bounded on the west by the Suck. Limestone is found here in abundance.

Taghmon (1), pa. and mkt. to., Bargy and Shelmaliere bars., S. co. Wexf., Ir., 10½ W. of Wexford; ac. 1,063. The Protestant church dates from 1819, and there is a Catholic church. T. derives its name from Theagh Munno, the house of Monno, from St. Munno, who in the 6th cent. founded here an Augustinian monastery. In 1663 this place is mentioned as a bor. Its chief products are butter and poultry, at the markets for which the merchants of Wexford attend in considerable numbers twice a week during the season, which continues about seven months in the year. In the centre of the to. are the remains of an ancient castle, which at one time must have been of great strength and size. No fewer than 21 fairs are held annually.

ferries are established. A rich agricultural district surrounds the to., which is old and irregularly built, but of late years has received improvements and additions. The church of the Establishment is an edifice of considerable dimensions, in form quadrangular, with a castellated tower at each corner, which, not rising above the main body of the building, renders the general appearance of the whole more massive than elegant. The Free church is a handsome building erected in 1892, and superseding an earlier one. The old chapel of St. Duthus, below the to. near the railway station, was built about 1200; to it Robert the Bruce's queen and her retinue fled for refuge, but were taken captive by the Earl of Ross and delivered up to the English. The church, founded by Thomas, Bishop of Ross, in 1428, is an elegant structure, and was used as a pa. church till 1815, but was afterwards left unprotected and ruinous for upwards of forty years, when its restoration was undertaken and conducted until 1877 by Mr. John M'Leod, then Provost of T.; it contains monuments to Thomas Hogg and Patrick Hamilton, the Scottish martyrs, and likewise a replica of a finely-carved oaken pulpit, which was presented to the people of T. by the "good regent" Murray. The Royal Academy, in an open park at the west end of the to., was founded by royal charter in 1809 and opened in 1812. The Court House, previous to 1833, was used as a place of confinement for debtors; in April of that year it was destroyed by fire, when three persons perished in the flames. The present Court House is erected on its site, and is a building surmounted by pinnacles; the old tower and bartizan are of rare construction, and beautiful specimens of architecture. In the to. is a large hall for assemblies and public meetings. The trade here consists principally of distilling and woollen manufacturing. The principal markets are held on the Wednesday after the second Tuesday in July, or the Wednesday after the third Tuesday in August and on the third Tuesday in October, and corn markets are held every other Friday. In 1895 the ancient "Mercat cross" was restored by the ex-provost.

Talgarth, pa., tp., and mkt. to., E. Brecons., 7 s.w. of Hay; ac. of pa. 17,421, of tp. 12,294; soil various. T. is situated at the foot of the Black Mountains, and the surface is mostly rugged and wild. The church of St. Gwendoline (restored 1873) is an ancient Gothic edifice with a picturesque square embattled tower; it contains a memorial of Howell Harris (d. 1773); the churchyard commands fine views. There are Baptist, Wesleyan, Calvinistic Methodist, and Congregational chapels. The Market Hall, which contains an assembly-room on the upper floor, dates from 1877. Trevecca College was originally the abode of a communistic society established in 1752 by Howell Harris, a native of T., who became a disciple of Whitefield and one of the founders of Welsh Methodism; it is now a place of education for Welsh Methodists; the grounds contain a chapel erected in memory of Harris in 1873. Porthaul, the ancient seat of the Vaughans, who are now represented by the Earl of Ashburnham, has been converted into a farmhouse; it retains part of the embattled wall and one of the towers. Pontywal Hall, The Skreen, and Tregunter (the ancient residence of the Gunter family) are seats.

Taliaris, chap., pa. of and 4 N.E. from Llandilofawr (q.v.), Mid Carmarths. T. is a seat.

Taliesin, or Tre-Taliesin, ha., pa. of Llancynfelin (q.v.). N. Cardigs., 8 s.w. of Machynlleth. It is the supposed burial-place of the bard, Taliesin. There is a cairn about 130 ft. in circumference, and the cistvaen or grave is in the centre.

Talisker, vil. on a bay of the same name, pa. of and 5 s. from Bracadale (q.v.), Island of Skye, Inva., Sc. The bay is south of the entrance to Loch Bracadale.

Talke, or Talk-o'-th'-Hill, eccl. pa. and vil., pa. of Audley (q.v.), N.W. Staffs., 5 N. by W. of Newcastle-under-Lyme. The vil. stands upon a lofty eminence commanding an extensive view of the surrounding country as far as the Welsh Mountains, and appears to have derived its name from the Cymric-Celtic "tal," signifying "high place," and has borne this name, as evidenced by records still existing, from at least the middle of the 13th cent. The church of St. Martin is an ancient edifice of brick, and retains a pre-Reformation paten. The church of St. Saviour (1879) is a building of framed timber. There are Wesleyan, Free Methodist, and Primitive Methodist chapels. Charities to the amount of £4 6s., arising from various rent-charges, are annually distributed. In the centre of the vil. is a portion of an ancient stone cross (dated 1253; restored 1887), around which a weekly market was formerly held. In July, 1782, a fire broke out in the vil. which destroyed a large amount of property; and in August in the same year 39 cwt. of gunpowder, while being conveyed through the vil. in a waggon, exploded; the damage by these two calamities amounted to £2,387 15s. 3d., and a brief was issued by order of His Majesty George III. commanding collections to be made throughout England and Wales for the relief of the sufferers. In December, 1866, a fearful explosion of coal gas occurred at the North Staffordshire coal-pits, by which 91 persons were killed; upwards of £16,000 was raised for the widows and children of the sufferers; since this a permanent relief society has been instituted for the benefit of the coal and ironstone workers of North Staffordshire, in aid of which the committee of the T. Relief Fund contributed a sum of £3,000.

Talkin, chap., pa. of Hayton (q.v.), N.E. Cumb., 2½ S.E. of Brampton. The church was built in 1842. There is a Wesleyan chapel. A freestone quarry is worked in the neighbourhood.

Tallaght, pa. and vil., and head of petty sess. div., Upper Cross bar., S. co. Dublin, Ir., 7 S.W. by W. of Dublin, on the road to Blessington; ac. 21,868. The pa. extends from Balrothery Hill, on the Dodder, to the Green hills, on its western extremity. The Tallaght hills, 1,263 ft. in height, forming the southern boundary, command beautiful and extensive views of the bay and vale of Dublin. In this neighbourhood, on March 5, 1867, a party of Fenians commenced a rising; upon being summoned to surrender by twelve of the constabulary force, they fired upon the police, who returned the fire and wounded five of the insurgents. The constabulary subsequently captured eighty-three of the Fenian body, and the remainder, after wandering about the hills for a short time, during very severe weather, finally dispersed. The Protestant church stands on an elevated site a little above the vil., and is a modern edifice of stone; about a mile from the vil. is a Carmelite convent with school attached. In the pa. are flour and paper mills. Belgard Castle is a seat, and at one time the Archbishops of Dublin had a palace in the pa.

Talland, pa., tp., and vil. on the sea-coast, S.E. Cornw., 2 S.E. of Looe; ac. of pa. 2,721, of tp. 2,569. The church of St. Talland, situated on the side of a hill, on the eastern side of an inlet of the sea called Talland Bay, is E. Eng. and Perp. The interior is seated with ancient benches of carved oak, displaying the emblazoned shields of Beville, Grenville, and others; in the aisle are two helmets, one of which bears the crest of the Bevilles; in the aisle is a tomb with full-length effigy of John Beville, Esq. (d. 1570). There is also a small Tallentire, tp. and vil., pa. of Bridekirk (q.v.), W. Cumb., 4 W. of Cockermouth; ac. 1,992. The vil. is pleasantly situated on a declivity, and commands an extensive view of the Solway Firth and the Scottish coast. The inhabitants are mostly engaged in agriculture. T. Hall is a seat.

Talley, or Tal-y-Llychau (="Head of the Lakes"), pa. and vil., E. Carmarths., 6½ N. of Llandeilofawr; ac. 7,198; soil deep and fertile. The church of St. Michael (rebuilt 1773) is in Classical style. The Baptists and Calvinistic Methodists have chapels. The ruins of the Premonstratensian Abbey of St. Mary and St. John the Baptist, said to have been founded by Rhys ab Grufydd in the 12th cent., are beautifully situated in a rich valley surrounded by lofty hills; the remains consist of the arches which formed the lower part of the central tower. Close to the abbey are the two lakes from which the pa. takes its name; in one of these vestiges of lake-dwellings have been discovered. A yew-tree in the vicinity of the church is said to mark the burial-place of David ab Gwylim (d. 1400), a famous Welsh bard.

Tallington, pa. and vil. on the Welland, S. Lincs., 4 N.E. of Stamford; ac. 690; soil loam, overlying gravel. The church of St. Lawrence (restored 1879) is E. Eng. and Dec., the spire was destroyed by lightning in 1762; there is a stone with Runic characters in the vestry wall, and in the chancel a Norm. piscina, an aumbry, and a low-side window; in the south transept there is a Perp. piscina. Here is a Congregational chapel. The charities amount to over £80 yearly.

Tallog, vil., pa. of Abernant (q.v.), W. Carmarths., 8 N.W. of Carmarthen.

Tallow, pa. and mkt. to., Coshmore and Coshbride bar., W. co. Waterf., Ir., 4 S.W. of Lismore; ac. 5,014. The church of St. Catherine is an ancient structure. There is also a Catholic church. T. is pleasantly situated near the banks of the Bride, and the surrounding scenery is considered remarkably fine. A bridge crosses the river to Tallow Bridge, a vil. in Lismore pa. To the west of this bridge are the ruins of Lisfinny Castle. T. was erected into a bor. by James I., and previous to the Union it returned two members to Parliament, when it was disfranchised, but long before that event the corporation had ceased to exercise any municipal functions. Wool-combing was formerly carried on here extensively. Fairs are held on the first Thursday in each month.

Tamar, river, dividing Dev. from Cornw. It rises close to the N. extremity of Cornw., and on the N.W. confines of Dev., at a point 6 miles N. by E. of the to. of Stratton and 4 miles E. of the Atlantic Ocean. On reaching the vils. of North Tamerton and Tetcott, some 15 miles from its source, the river begins to assume the picturesque character which marks the remainder of its course. Its general direction is S. by E. or S.S.E., but in its course of 50 miles it forms a large number of devious curves. About midway between its rise and the point where it expands into the estuary of the Hamoaze (q.v.) the to. of Launceston rises above its west bank; on the east side of the estuary are those of Plymouth and Devonport. Among the many interesting places by which the river passes between Launceston and Saltash are the seat of Endsleigh and the Morwell Rocks on the Dev. side of the river, and Harewood House, the picturesque spot called Newbridge, and the seats of Cotehele

Soon after passing Pentille Castle the river increases considerably in width, and at its junction with the Tavy the distance across is about a mile, but it narrows again immediately below Saltash, just above the fine expanse of the Hamoaze. Its principal affluents are the Inny, which joins it at Endsleigh, the Tavy, and the Lynher, the mouth of which is on the west side of the Hamoaze.

Tame (1), river, S.E. Staffs. and N.W. Warws.; rises in S. Staffs., watering in the early part of its course the grounds of Hampstead Hall and Perry Hall. After passing through Aston in the north of Birmingham, it flows E. from that to. past Water Orton to Hams Hall, in the north vicinity of Coleshill, where it turns somewhat abruptly north. It continues to run in that direction as far as Tamworth, passing Fazeley and Drayton Hall, and forming for some distance the boundary between Warws. and Staffs. After leaving Tamworth it flows alternately W. and N., and joins the Trent near Alrewas. Its length is about 25 miles.

Tame (2), river, S.W. Yorks., S.E. Lancs., and N.E. Chesh. It rises near Saddleworth in Yorks., but soon leaves that co., and during the remainder of its course forms the boundary between Lancs. and Chesh., passing Staleybridge, Ashton-under-Lyne, and Stockport, where it enters the Mersey. The water-power furnished by the river is utilised in various manufactures. Its length is about 18 miles.

Tamerton Foliott, pa. and large vil. (formerly a mkt. to.), pleasantly situated at the confluence of the Tavy and Tamar, S. Dev., 5 N. of Plymouth; ac. 4,765, and 280 tidal water and foreshore; soil mixed, overlying slate. The church of St. Mary is in Perp. style, the greater part having been renewed since 1850; in the north aisle is an altar-tomb, with recumbent effigies of a knight and lady; the heads of both figures are supported by angels; they probably represent one of the Gorges family and his wife, resident here about 1346. Here is a Wesleyan chapel. The poor have about £60 yearly, derived from the Maristow charity and gifts. On the green near the church stands the "Copleston" oak, the traditional site of a murder by a member of that family. Gilbert Foliot, Bishop of Hereford (1149–63) and of London (1163–89), was a native of this pa. Maristow, on the Tavy, is a seat. Uplands and Warleigh, the old manor-house, are also seats.

Tamerton, North, pa. and vil., N. Cornw., 10 N.E. of Launceston; ac. 5,261. The church of St. Denis is Perp.; in the south aisle is a piscina and in the north a brass to Leonard Loves (d. 1576). Ogbeare House, a seat and a 15th-cent. mansion, has a fine banquetting-hall.

8th cent., but was destroyed by the Danes in 874, when they overran the country and razed the to.; Edgar the Peaceful (959–75) rebuilt it about 963 and gave it a college, dissolved in 1548; the church was then made a pa. church. Of the present fabric the oldest part is E. Norm.; the Norm. church was burnt in 1345 and rebuilt in the Dec. period. The tower, which is a remarkably fine one, was intended to carry a spire, of which the base may be seen above the parapets; the staircase is a double spire, having two distinct entrances, intended respectively for the parish and college ringers, and believed to be the only one of its kind. There are remains of a piscina on the south side of the choir, and the interior has also a number of niches, brackets, and pedestals, formerly supporting sculptured figures; considerable traces of wall paintings have been met with in the choir, south transept, and crypt, and some fragments of ancient stained glass remain. The monuments in the choir are those of the Ferrers and Frevile families, lords of T. Castle, and include a large altar-tomb (restored) with shields, and supporting a female effigy assigned to Lady Jane de Frevile (1339); a similar altar-tomb, with the recumbent effigy of a knight in armour and a lady, believed to represent Sir Baldwin Frevile (1400) and Jane (Green) his wife; an altar-tomb of freestone, surrounded with angels supporting shields, the covering slab bearing traces of brass figures of a knight and lady, and seven children beneath a double canopy, with shields; this tomb is supposed to commemorate Sir Thomas Ferrers (1498); a fine altar-tomb, once coloured, with canopied niches round the sides containing figures, and on the upper slab the recumbent figures of a knight in armour, with SS collar, and his lady, representing Sir John Ferrers (1512) and Dorothy his wife (1532). Under an arch in the north transept is the recumbent effigy of a knight in chain mail, with a surcoat, supposed to represent either William de Comberford (c. 1349) or John his son. In St. George's Chapel, within an arch, is the recumbent effigy of a secular canon, assigned to Baldwin de Whitney, Dean of T. (1369), and in the tower is a large monument to the last of the Ferrers (1680). T. has also a Catholic chapel with priest's house, and places of worship for various bodies of Nonconformists. The Free Grammar School, originally founded about 1350, was reorganised in 1874. The new municipal buildings (1889) include an assembly room. The Public Baths and Institute were erected by a former vicar. T. has a cottage hospital, and the Joint Isolation Hospital is on the Warwickshire moor. The soil in the neighbourhood of the to. is rich and fertile. There are mines of coal, fire-clay, and blue and red brick clay, extensively worked; three manufactories for small wares, and two paper mills. Here is also an extensive clothing factory, giving employment to a large number of people. Market-gardening is largely carried on, and considerable supplies are sent to Birmingham. T. has a market for corn, held on Saturday; a horse and cattle fair is held on July 26. There are two commons or moors, the Staffordshire and Warwickshire moors, upon which the inhabitants of ancient messuages have common rights. T. Castle, on an eminence above the Anker, just beyond its junction with the Tame, was long the residence of the Saxon kings, and afterwards, until 20 Edward I (1291–92), the seat of the Marmions, from whom it passed by marriage to William Mortein, and subsequently to the Frevilles, who in the reign of Henry VI. were succeeded by the Ferrers, and next by the Comptons. The more modern dwelling-house of the Jacobean period is entirely enclosed by the massive walls of the ancient stronghold, which form in plan an almost unbroken but irregular circle.

Tamworth Castle, tp., pa. of Tamworth (q.v.), S.E. Staffs. and North Warws.; ac. 266 and 13 water.

Tamworth Division, one of the four parl. divs. of Warws. It lies in the north of the co. and returns one member.

Tanat, river, N.E. Montgoms., S. Denbighs., and N.W. Salop, rises on the east slopes of the Berwyn Mountains and runs 20 E. by S., joining the Vyrnwy at Llandysilio. The scenery on its banks is very picturesque, especially at Llangynog, not far from its source, where a small tributary flows into it from the north. A little lower down on the same side it is joined by the Rhayadr, which, a short distance above the confluence, passes the vil. of Llanrhaiadr-yn-Mochnant.

Tanderagee (anciently "Tawnatalee"), mkt. to. on the Cusher, pa. of Ballymore (q.v.), E. co. Armagh, Ir., 5 S.E. of Portadown. The church (originally built in 1622 and totally demolished during the wars of 1641) was rebuilt in 1671 on the site of the old church, and restored in 1812, and is a very handsome Gothic structure. The Catholic church is in Gothic style, and there are other places of worship. The Newry Canal, which comes within 1½ miles of the to., offers facilities of communication with Belfast and Newry, besides bringing supplies of coal and lime. This to. up to the year 1600 was the seat of one of the Irish kings (Redmond O'Hanlon), who after the above date was declared an outlaw. The to., which consists of two principal and three smaller streets, rises from a beautiful vale, through which the river winds between its lofty and richly-wooded banks at one extremity, the demesne of Tanderagee crowning the hill on the other. The country round has been long celebrated for the manufacture of yarns and yarn-wide linens, and large quantities at one time were brought to the market here, but this trade is not now so extensive. A spinning mill for linen yarn is situated here. Tanderagee is a large and modern baronial pile, occupying the site of an ancient castellated and fortified residence, and adjoining is a beautiful chapel.

Tandridge, pa. and vil., S.E. Surrey, 9 W. of Reigate; ac. 3,928; soil clay and sand. The church of St. Peter is Dec. There is a charity of about £34 a year for clothing. The Roman road runs near here. The Augustinian canons had a priory here, founded in the reign of Richard I., and dedicated to St. James. T. Hill in this pa. is 800 ft. high. Rook's Nest, a mansion in Classic style, and T. Court, both in extensive grounds, are seats.

Tanera. [SUMMER ISLES.]

Taney, pa., Dublin and Rathdown bars., Mid co. Dub., Ir., principally included in the city of Dublin (q.v.).

Tanfield, eccl. pa., tp., and vil. on the Team, pas. of Chester-le-Street and Lanchester (q.v.), N. Dur., 12 N.W. of Durham; ac. 5,820. The church of St. Margaret (restored 1879) was rebuilt in Perp. style in 1749. The Primitive Methodists and Wesleyans have chapels. The charities are small. Here are collieries, coke ovens, stone quarries, and brick and tile works.

Tanfield, West, pa. and vil. on the Ure, N.R. Yorks., 6 s. of Bedale; ac. 3,286; soil clay, gravel, and limestone, overlying gravel and limestone. The church of St. Nicholas (rebuilt 1343) is Norm., Dec., and Perp. A small chamber on the north side of the chancel is supposed to have been a confessional; there are several tombs of the Marmions with effigies. The Wesleyans have a chapel. The gatehouse of the castle, standing near the river, is Perp.

Tangley, pa. and vil., W. Hants, on the borders of Wilts., 5½ N.W. of Andover Junction; ac. 1,556; soil and subsoil clay and chalk mixed with flints. The church of St. Thomas, originally Dec., has been rebuilt in the style of that period; the font, of the early Tudor period, is of lead with heraldic devices.

Tangley, Great, ha., pa. of Wonersh (q.v.), S.W. Surrey, about 2½ S.E. of Guildford.

Tangley, Little, ha., pa. of Wonersh (q.v.), S.W. Surrey, about 2 S.E. of Guildford.

Tangmere, pa., S.W. Sussex, 3 N.E. of Chichester; ac. 755; soil light loam, overlying marl. The church of St. Andrew (restored 1885) is Norm. and E. Eng.; the original altar-stone with its five consecration crosses was discovered in 1843, and has been replaced in its proper position. The register includes entries of marriages before justices of the peace during the Commonwealth, of "touching" for the King's evil, and many entries of burials in woollen.

Tankersley, pa., tp., and vil., W.R. Yorks., 9 N. of Sheffield; ac. of pa. 8,079, of tp. 2,463; soil various, overlying clay. The church of St. Peter (restored) is Norm. Here are collieries and chemical works. T. Park retains a portion of its old hall.

Tannach, vil., pa. of and 4 S.W. from Wick (q.v.), E. Caithn., Sc.

Tannachy, estate with seat of the same name, pa. of Rathven (q.v.), N. Banffs., Sc., 1 S.W. of Port Gordon.

Tannadice, pa. and vil. on the South Esk, Mid Forfs., Sc., 4 N. of Forfar; soil various, mostly fairly fertile. T. contains an Established church in Gothic style, erected in 1846, and a Free church. The eminence called St. Arnold's Seat (800 ft.) commands a magnificent view, embracing the city of Edinburgh and the Pentland and Lammermuir Hills. Several tumuli have been opened. Downie Park, Glenogil, and Tannadice are seats.

Tanna, Loch, in island of Arran, Butes., Sc., 4 W. of Glen Sannox.

Tanner Water, stream, S. Abers., Sc., rises near the border of the co. and flows for 12 miles in a N.E. direction to the Dee, which it joins about 1 mile above Aboyne.

Tannington, pa. and vil., N.E. Suff., 4 N.W. of Framlingham; ac. 1,602; soil heavy loam, overlying clay. The church of St. Ethelbert (restored 1879) is in E. Eng. style.

Tannochside, vil., pa. of Bothwell (q.v.), N.W. Lanarks., Sc., 1¾ S. by W. of Coatbridge.

Tanshelf, tp. within the bor. of Pontefract (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., adjoining the to. of Pontefract on the west; ac. 297. Here is a Catholic church.

Tansley, eccl. pa. (extending into pa. of Matlock) and tp., pa. of Crich (q.v.), Mid Derbys., 12 N. of Derby; ac. 1,137. The church of Holy Trinity is modern. The Wesleyan Methodists and Free Methodists have chapels. There is a smallware manufactory and a mill for spinning lambswool, a saw-mill, and some bleaching works and hosiery manufactory. The celebrated "Poor Lots" grindstone quarries are situated here.

Tansor, pa. and vil., N. Northants, 2 N. of Oundle; ac. 1,400; soil rich, mixed, overlying gravel, clay, and rock. The church of St. Mary (restored 1886) is Trans., Norm. and E. Eng.; portions of both aisles and the lower stage of the tower belong to the 12th cent.; the remainder of the structure, including the arcades of the nave, belongs chiefly to the 13th cent., but is mixed with later work; the north doorway is a fine example of the Trans. period. In the chancel are six stalls, originally in the collegiate church of Fotheringhay, and a double piscina; there is a little screen work and a brass inscription to John Colt, rector (d. 1440). The town estate produces about £24 yearly for fuel; there is a charity of £6 yearly for clothing, and one of £5 is for apprenticing.

Tanstern, ha., pa. of Aldbrough (q.v.), N.R. Yorks., 10½ N.E. of Hull.

Tantallon Castle, pa. of and about 3 E. from North Berwick (q.v.), N. Haddings., Sc. These ruins are seated on a precipitous eminence projecting into the sea; the outer walls, of hexagonal form, are of massive thickness, and above the entrance is a sculptured stone shield, bearing the device of its ancient proprietors, the Douglases. The interior consists of numerous apartments, inaccessible from the dilapidated state of the various staircases which formerly afforded an approach, and the vaults contain many dark dungeons. The original foundation of this castle is not distinctly ascertained; it was the stronghold of the Douglas family, on their obtaining the barony of East Lothian at the accession of Robert II., and for centuries the seat of their power. It was Tanton, ha., pa. of and adjoining Stokesley (q.v.), N.R. Yorks.

Tanworth, pa. and vil., Mid Warws., 11 S. of Birmingham; ac. 9,255; soil clayey, overlying gravel and clay. The church of St. Mary Magdalen (restored 1880-81) is Dec., but it has suffered greatly from alterations made in the 18th cent.; it contains a number of 16th- and 17th-cent. brasses and memorials. It was originally a chapel attached to Brailes, and was conveyed as such to the Canons of Kenilworth. Previously to the Conquest T. belonged to the Earls of Mercia. Umberslade is a seat.

Taplow, pa. and vil. on the Thames, S. Bucks., 1 E. of Maidenhead; ac. 1,920; soil loam, overlying chalk and gravel. The church of St. Nicholas is a small and plain structure of brick in Gothic style, erected in 1828 at a little distance from the site of the former edifice. In the nave are a large number of ancient brasses, some of which are palimpsests removed from the old church, including one to Nicholas de Aumberdene (1350), and one with three figures of Richard Manfeld, his sister and brother (1465). There is a small Wesleyan chapel, and a village reading-room with a library. The poor's allotment of 3 ac. with six cottages produces £36, distributed in fuel; and there are other charities amounting to about £25 a year. In 1883 a tumulus in the old churchyard was opened, when Anglo-Saxon arms and ornaments were found; these have since been deposited in the British Museum. The Taplow woods bordering the river are on the estate of Cliefden (q.v.); Glenisland, below the lock, and Taplow Court are also seats; the latter stands in a park and grounds of 200 ac., planted with choice shrubs and containing a long avenue of large cedars. (See page 135.)

Tapton, tp., pa. of and adjoining Chesterfield (q.v.), E. Derbys.; ac. 735. T. House, a seat, was formerly the residence of George Stephenson the engineer, and of Robert Stephenson, his son.

Tar, river, S. co. Tip., Ir., rises in the Galty Mountains, and flows for about 16 miles in an E. direction to the Suir, which it joins near Newcastle.

Tara (1), pa. and vil., Skreen bar., E. co. Meath, Ir., 5½ S.E. of Navan; ac. 3,364. In the pa. is the famed Hill of Tara (510 ft.), rising from a rich and fertile plain, and commanding panoramic views; in connection with it there is much legendary history, but it is considered certain that it was from a very early period up to the 6th cent. the principal seat of the monarchs of Ireland, with a palace and university with other buildings clustered around it, and the place of meeting of the Druids and musicians and for great ceremonies; the wisdom and greatness of Cormac, the most accomplished of Irish kings (A.D. 213), who maintained a splendid court, being the theme of the bards; Moore's ballad commencing "The harp that once through Tara's halls" is well known, but of the "halls" referred to there is no trace, only "raths or mounds" remaining to indicate their probable sites. A pillar of stone standing 6 ft. above ground, and reputed to be the "coronation stone" of the ancient kings, was placed in its present position some time after 1798. A triennial assembly was held here between the 2nd and 5th cents. The Danes were in 980 here signally defeated; English settlers held assemblies here 1173, and in much later times the rebels of 1798 (May 26) were routed, and later still, in 1843 (Aug. 15), one of the largest meetings was held here for the repeal of the Legislative Union, under Daniel O'Connell.

Tarannon, river, Mid Montgoms., flows for about 10 miles in an E. direction to the Severn, which it joins 5 W. of Newtown.

Taransay. [TARRENSAY.]

Tarbat, small pa. and vil. in the extreme north-east of Ross and Crom., Sc., forming a peninsula 7 miles by 3 between the Moray and Dornoch Firths; ac. 6,787; soil generally light, and a great proportion sandy, but there are also large portions of rich black loam of great depth. It contains besides the vil. of the same name the vil. of Portmahomack and part of that of Inver. The extreme northerly point of the peninsula is Tarbat Ness, on which there is a lighthouse, near which are the foundations of a monument said to have been built by the Romans for a landmark.

Tarbert (1), or East Tarbert, q.s. pa. and seaport vil., pas. of Kilcalmonell and Kilberry, and South Knapdale (q.v.), Kintyre, S.W. Args., Sc. The q.s. pa. extends in the pa. of Saddell and Skipness. The vil. is situated on the west shore and at the mouth of Loch Fyne, 39 S.W. of Inveraray, and forms a semi-circle round the harbour, the entrance to which is narrow, but vessels can lie within in security. The distance from the head of the harbour to the head of West Tarbert loch is a little over a mile. Boats were often formerly dragged across, and there have been several proposals to cut a canal, so as to form a shorter route to Islay, but this has never been done. The quays are commodious, and for many years T. has been a noted fishing station, particularly for herrings, which are mostly cured for the Glasgow markets. In a commanding situation, overlooking the vil. and harbour, are the remains of an ancient castle and fortification, formerly a place of great strength; it was built by Robert Bruce and inhabited by him in 1326. Immediately behind the vil., in a southern direction, is the Established church; there is also a Free church. An extensive fair is held on the last Thursday in July, which continues three days, and is for the sale of horses.

Tarbert (2), ha., pa. of Harris (q.v.), Invs., Sc., in the south portion of Lewis island, at the head of East Loch Tarbert. There is a Free church.

Tarbert (3), small coast to. and head of petty scss. div., pa. of Kilnaughtin (q.v.), N.E. co. Kerry, Ir., 9 N. of Listowel. There are Protestant and Catholic churches, and a place of worship for the Wesleyans. Here is a revenue station under the Board of Customs. A variety of articles are imported from Limerick for the inhabitants of the to. and neighbourhood, and corn, butter, pigs and other agricultural produce are exported to that city and to London. A market for pigs is held on alternate Mondays. To the west of the to. is a peninsula which narrows the Shannon at this point between Clare and Kerry. Here is T. House, a seat, which, from its elevated position, commands fine views of the river.

TAPLOW WOODS.

Tarbert, East. [TARBERT (1).]

Tarbert Island, a small island in the estuary of the Shannon, opposite the to. of Tarbert (q.v.), Ir. On it is a tower, a battery (dismantled since 1891), and a lighthouse. The island has a roadstead and harbour, where vessels may find shelter from tempestuous weather.

Tarbert, Loch, inlet of the sea, on the west coast of the island of Jura, S.W. Args., Sc. The loch extends about 8 miles inland, almost dividing the island into two nearly equal portions, situated on its north and south sides respectively.

Tarbert, Loch, East (1), inlet of the sea on west side of Loch Fyne (q.v.), S. Args., Sc. The loch forms part of the boundary between Knapdale and Kintyre, its upper extremity being situated about 2 miles from that of West Loch Tarbert (q.v.). The loch extends nearly 1 W., and has an extreme breadth of ½ mile. At its head is the vil. of Tarbert. The shores of the inlet are extremely rugged. It forms a commodious and nearly land-locked natural harbour. Above it rises a castle, built in the 14th cent., which has had among its occupants Robert Bruce and King James II.

Tarbert, Loch, East (2), inlet of the sea on the east coast of Harris, Outer Hebrides, N.W. Args., Sc. It extends about 5 miles inland in a N.W. direction, and has a breadth varying from 2 to 4¼ miles. An isthmus ¼ mile across separates it from West Loch Tarbert (q.v.).

Tarbert, Loch, West (1), inlet of the sea, separating Kintyre on the south from Knapdale on the north, S.W. Args., Sc. It extends 9 or 10 N.E. and has an average breadth of a mile or somewhat less. The narrow isthmus between the head of the loch and that of East Loch Tarbert connects the peninsula of Kintyre with Knapdale. Between these two lochs is the vil. of Tarbert. The scenery on the banks of the West Loch is picturesque but somewhat tame.

Tarbert, Loch, West (2), inlet of the sea on the west coast of Harris, Outer Hebrides, N.W. Args., Sc. It extends about 6 miles inland in an E. direction, and has an extreme breadth of 4½ miles. At its entrance is the island of Tarrensay (q.v.). High mountains rise from the shore of the loch on every side.

Tarbert, West, pl., pa. of Kilcalmonell and Kilberry (q.v.), Kintyre, W. Args., Sc., 1 S.W. of Tarbert. It has a good quay, and is seated at the head of a loch of the same name, which commences here, and in a circuitous route winds through the mountains to Ardpatrick, beyond which it empties itself into the ocean. Two roads follow respectively the east and west sides of the loch.

Tarbet, small vil. on Loch Lomond, pa. of Arrochar (q.v.), N. Dumbarts., Sc., about 8 N. of Luss, with a station on the North British Railway, and much visited by tourists on account of its attractive features. Here is a steamboat pier.

Tarbock, tp., pa. of Huyton (q.v.), S.W. Lancs., about 8 W. of Liverpool; ac. 2,447. Brewing is carried on.

Tarbolton, pa. and to. in the district of Kyle, Mid Ayrs., Sc.; ac. 12,059, the greater part under cultivation. The surface is undulating throughout. The to. is 8 N.E. of Ayr, about 5 miles from the shore of the Firth of Clyde, and is surrounded by a fine country; T. was erected into a burgh of barony in the reign of Charles II. The pa. church (1821) is an elegant structure, and has a tower with spire containing a clock having four dials. There is a Free Library and reading-room. A fair is held the first Tuesday after June 11.

Tarbrax, vil., pa. of Carnwath (q.v.), E. Lanarks., Sc.

Tardebigg, pa., E. Worcs., 3½ W. of Redditch; ac. 9,378, and 71 water; soil various, overlying sand and clay. The church of St. Bartholomew (restored 1879–80) is in Italian style, and contains some fine monuments. There are some small charities. Hewell Grange, standing in a fine park, is a seat.

Tarfside, ha. near the junction of the Tarf and the North Esk, pa. of Lochlee (q.v.), N. Forfs., Sc., 12 S.E. of Ballater. There is an Episcopal church.

Tarff Water, stream, S. Kirkcuds., Sc., rises in Loch Whinyeon, and runs E.S.E. through the pa. of Twynholm, N.N.E. through those of Twynholm and Tongland, and finally S. by E. to the Dee, at first through Tongland, and afterwards between Tongland and Twynholm. There are several beautiful waterfalls on the rivulet, the most picturesque being the Linn of Lairdmannoch, which has a descent of nearly 60 ft. The length of the stream is about 6 miles.

Tarf, Water of (1), stream, pa. of Blair Athol, N. Perths., Sc., rises near the Invs. border, and runs about 11 E. by S., joining the Tilt about 12 N.N.E. of Blair Athol. Just above its union with the Tilt the stream forms a series of fine cascades, descending between steep cliffs. Here was formerly a dangerous ford, now crossed by a suspension bridge built in 1884 to commemorate a Mr. Bedford, who was drowned whilst attempting to cross the Tilt in 1879. The Water of T. abounds in trout.

Tarf, Water of (2), stream, pa. of Lochlee, N. Forfs., Sc., rises on the Abers. border, 8 S.E. of Ballater, and running 7½ S.S.E., joins the North Esk shortly after passing the vil. of Tarfside.

Tarland. [TARLAND-MIGVIE.]

Tarland-Migvie, pa., W. Abers., Sc.; ac. 17,381. The lands near the vil. of Tarland are mostly level, but the greater proportion of the pa. is mountainous, and the seasons are cold; the woods which have been planted will, however, be the means of materially ameliorating the latter. The vil. of Tarland is 31 W. of Aberdeen. It contains Established and Free churches. Several fairs are held.

Tarleton, pa. and vil. on the Douglas, W. Lancs., 9½ S.W. of Preston; ac. 5,553; soil loam and moss, overlying clay. The church of Holy Trinity was built 1888 in E. Eng. and Dec. styles. The Wesleyans have a chapel. There is a small charity.

Tarmon, rivulet, S. co. Don., Ir., flows for 8 miles in a S.W. direction along the border of cos. Don. and Ferm., past Pettigoe, and falls into Lower Lough Erne.

Tarnacre. [RAWCLIFFE, UPPER, WITH TARNACRE.]

Tarner, another form of Taarner (q.v.).

Tarn Hows, lakelet, N. Lancs., 2½ N.E. of Coniston. It is a favourite spot for excursions from Coniston, as there is a very fine prospect from the hills above the lake.

Tarn Wadling, formerly a lake, has now been drained and filled up and converted into grazing land, pa. of and adjoining Hesket-in-Forest (q.v.), E. Cumb. It lies 600 ft. above the Eden, and carp used to be bred in the waters. On its north side stood a stronghold called "Castle Hewin."

Tarporley, pa., tp., and mkt. to. (T.), S.W. Ches., 9½ E. by S. of Chester; ac. of pa. 6,194, of tp. 1,164. T. received a charter in 1297, by which it was entitled to a market and fair, and it was governed by a Mayor down to 1348. It consists chiefly of a single long winding street, and many of the houses have picturesque gables fronting the road. The church of St. Helen (restored 1869 and 1877) is mainly Dec., with some Perp. features, but the chancel is modern; adjoining the aisle on its north and south sides respectively are the Utkinton and Arderne chapels, the former containing an altar-tomb with figures of Mary Crewe (d. 1674) and Jane Done (d. 1662), and the latter memorials of Sir John Done of Utkinton (d. 1629) and John Crewe (d. 1670). The other places of worship include Baptist, Wesleyan, and Primitive Methodist chapels. The Public Hall, built 1851, contains a spacious room, used for entertainments, and also a library. The market-hall is the meeting-place of the Cheshire Hunt, which has its headquarters at T.; in the upper part of the building is an interesting room containing a beautifully carved oak-chair, and portraits of local celebrities. The school, founded by Dame Dorothy Done in the reign of Charles I., was converted into a recreation room and library in 1888, when the building was restored and enlarged. Almshouses for widows were founded by Sir John Crewe in 1704, and restored in 1826. Races take place at T. in the month of April. In the south vicinity of the to. stands Beeston Castle, which was built early in the 13th cent. and dismantled in 1646. Utkinton Hall, a 17th-cent. mansion, formerly occupied by the Dones, has been converted into a farmhouse. Arderne Hall, the residence of the Earl of Haddington, and Portal Lodge, a mansion in Gothic style, are seats in the neighbourhood.

Tarradale. [URRAY.]

Tarrant, river, E. Dors., rises in pa. of Tarrant Gunville (q.v.), and flows in a S. direction for about 8 miles to the Stour, which it joins near Spettisbury.

Tarrant Crawford, pa., N. Dors., 3½ S.E. of Blandford; ac. 543; soil light clay, overlying chalk and gravel. It takes its name from the river Tarrant, which here joins the Stour. The church of St. Mary is E. Eng. In 1230 Richard Poor, successively Bishop of Chichester, Salisbury, and Durham, founded an abbey of Cistercian nuns in honour of the Blessed Virgin and All Saints; at the Dissolution its revenue was estimated at £239 11s. 10d. Joan, Queen of Scotland, and Joan, Princess of Wales, were buried here.

Tarrant Gunville, pa. and vil., Mid Dors., 6 N.E. of Blandford; ac. 3,431; soil light chalky loam, overlying chalk. The church of St. Mary was rebuilt, except the tower, 1845 in Perp. style. Eastbury House and the Manor House are seats.

Tarrant Hinton, pa. and vil. on the Tarrant, Mid Dors., 4½ N.E. of Blandford; ac. 2,277; soil light, overlying chalk. The church of St. Mary (restored 1891–92) is Perp. On the north side of the chancel is an Easter sepulchre of the reign of Henry VIII. with a Latin inscription; in the south aisle is a Norm. piscina. The font of Purbeck marble is also Norm. The remains of a Roman villa have been discovered, and spear-heads, fibulæ, and Roman coins have been found.

Tarrant Keynston, pa. and vil. on the Tarrant, Mid Dors., 3½ S.E. by E. of Blandford; ac. 1,018; soil light loam, overlying chalk. The church of All Saints was rebuilt 1852, except the tower, in Perp. style. The Primitive Methodists have a chapel.

Tarrant Launceston, pa. on the Tarrant, Mid Dors., 5½ N.E. of Blandford; ac. 1,644; soil light, overlying chalk and flint. On the Down are barrows.

Tarrant Monkton, pa. on the Tarrant, N. Dors., 4½ E.N.E. of Blandford; ac. 2,180; soil light chalky loam, overlying chalk. The church of All Saints (restored 1873) is an ancient edifice of stone and flint of different periods. Here was formerly a large monastic establishment connected with Tewkesbury Abbey, whence the epithet Monkton. There is a chapel for Wesleyans. On the Down are several barrows.

Tarrant Rawston, pa. on the Tarrant, N. Dors., 3½ E. by N. of Blandford; ac. 685; soil light loam, overlying chalk. The church of St. Mary is a small edifice of flint and stone, possessing no architectural pretensions.

Tarrant Rushton, pa. on the Tarrant, N. Dors., 3½ E. of Blandford; ac. 2,073; soil light loam, overlying chalk. The church of St. Mary (restored 1875) is an ancient cruciform building, chiefly of the 13th cent.; the chancel arch is Norm. and Early Eng.; it contains three perfect Dec. squints; the piscina, of the same period, is in good preservation, having a cinque-foiled heading under an ogee arch. During the restoration the capital of a Norm. piscina was discovered; in the chancel arch were also found two earthenware vessels, and the remains of what was once a very handsome cross, considered to have served as the cover of a tomb. The altar-stone, removed at the Reformation, is preserved in the vestry. Here was formerly a hospital, or charity, dedicated to St. Leonard, which was granted to the prior of Christchurch in the reign of Edward III.

Tarras Water, stream, E. Dumfs., Sc., rises on Hartsgarth Fell, on the Roxbs. border, and runs 11 S.S.W. and S. by W., traversing the pa. of Ewes, and afterwards separating those of Ewes and Langholm from Canonbie. The stream rushes impetuously down its rocky bed through the midst of wild and picturesque scenery. It abounds in trout.

Tarrell, stream, S. Brecons., rises on the Brecknock Beacons, and runs N. by E. and N.E. to the Usk, which it joins at Brecknock 6 miles (in a direct line) from its source.

Tarrensay, island at the mouth of West Loch Tarbert (q.v.), off west coast of Harris, Outer Hebrides, N.W. Invs., Sc., 32 S.W. of Stornoway. The island comprises a north-east and a south-west portion, the two being united by a narrow sandy isthmus. The total length of the island from south-west to north-east is 4 miles, and it has an extreme breadth of 3 miles. The surface, which rises to a height of 750 ft., consists chiefly of bare rock. The inhabitants are mostly engaged in fishing.

Tarretburn, formerly tp., pa. of and about 5 N.W. of Bellingham (with which it is now amalgamated), S.W. Northumb.

Tarring Neville, or East Tarring, pa. near the Ouse, S. Sussex, 2 N. of Newhaven; ac. 940; soil chalky, overlying chalk. The church (restored 1892) is E. Eng.

Tarrington, pa. and vil., E. Herefords., 7 W. of Ledbury; ac. 2,236; soil marl, overlying clay and marl. The church of St. Philip and St. James (restored 1872) is Norm. and E. Eng., and contains an ancient tomb with a recumbent effigy. There are several charities.

Tarring, West (in Domesday called "Terringes"), pa. and vil., S. Sussex, 1 N.W. of Worthing; ac. 1,226; soil various, overlying principally gravel. The church of St. Andrew (restored 1854) is E. Eng. Here is a fig orchard, the largest in England, which is much frequented by visitors from Worthing; a tradition exists that Thomas à Becket, Archbishop of Canterbury (1162–71), planted fig-trees near the rectory-house; and it is certainly known that Richard Poore, Bishop of Chichester (1214–17), planted fig-trees here with his own hand. The archbishops of Canterbury had a palace here, and what remains of it is now used as a National school.

Tartaraghan, pa., Oneilland West bar., N. co Armagh, Ir., 6 N. of Armagh; ac. 9,842. The pa. church was built in 1816–17. T. has a Catholic church, and places of worship for Presbyterians and Wesleyan Methodists.

Tarth Water, stream, N.W. Peebs., Sc., rises in the pa. of West Linton, and runs S. and E.S.E. joining Lyne Water 6 W. by N. of Peebles. It skirts the pas. of West Linton, Kirkurd, Newlands and Stobo. Trout are plentiful.

Tarves, pa. and vil., Mid Abers., Sc., 4½ N.E. of Old Meldrum; ac. 16,303. The general outline of the pa. is a flat surface, interspersed with some hills of inferior altitude. The soil is diversified in its composition, but is for the most part fertile, and there are some fine plantations on the verge of the river. In the vil. are the pa. church and public school.

Tarvin, pa., tp., and vil., Mid Chesh., 5½ E. of Chester; ac. of pa. 9,053, of tp. 1,929. The church of St. Andrew (partially restored 1875–76) is Late Dec. and Perp. The chancel is enriched with fine oak carving, and contains a brass (1584) to Henry Hardware, Alderman and twice Mayor of Chester: against the external wall of the south aisle is a memorial to John Thomasen, an eminent Greek scholar and thirty-six years master of the grammar school here. There are Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist chapels.

Tasburgh, pa. and vil., S. Norf., 8 S. of Norwich; ac. 884; soil various, overlying clay. The church of St. Mary the Virgin is Dec.; in the chancel is a piscina; there are several brasses of the 16th cent., and a fine altar-tomb to the Baxter family: the font is ancient. Here is a Friends' meeting-house and a chapel for the Primitive Methodists. The charities amount to £30 yearly, besides £14 rent of fuel allotment. This vil. derives its name from the river Tas (anciently the Taus), on which the Romans had a station called Ad Taum, which is an entrenchment of 24 ac. on a high hill. T. Hall is a Jacobean mansion in well-timbered grounds; it contains some very fine old oak panelling and antique furniture.

Tashinny, or Taghshinny, pa. and vil. on the Inny, Rathcline and Shrule bars., S. co. Longf., Ir., 8 S.W. of Edgeworthstown; ac. 4,883. The church here was built in the 17th cent. The river Inny is a good trout and salmon stream, and the adjoining land is rich pasture, and there is an accessible market at Ballymahon. Cattle fairs are held twice yearly in both T. and Barry vils. Clina House, Colehill House, and Doory Hall are seats.

Taston, ha., pa. of and ½ N.E. from Spelsbury (q.v.), N. Oxon. Here is a very ancient stone wayside cross, and a fountain to the memory of Henrietta, Viscountess Dillon (d. 1862). Immediately adjacent, standing by the roadside, is a monolith, believed to be that from which the hamlet derives its name, "Taston" being unquestionably a corruption of "Thor's stan."

Tatchbury Mount, hill, pa. of Eling (q.v.), S. Hants, 2 N.W. of Totton. There are traces of an ancient entrenchment on the summit.

Tatenhill, pa., tp., and vil., E. Staffs., 3 N.W. of Burton; ac. of pa. 9,647, of tp. 2,625; soil marl and loam. The church of St. Michael and All Angels (restored) is Perp., and contains a monument to Sir Henry Griffiths (d. 1641) and a slab to William Amis (d. 1585). The charities amount to £90 yearly.

Tatham, pa. and vil. on the Wenning, N. Lancs., 10 N.E. of Lancaster; ac. 8,547; soil sandy, overlying rock and gravel. The church of St. James (restored 1886) is Perp., and contains an E. Norm. doorway, sedilia, and two piscinæ (discovered during restoration), and a Saxon window. A carved oak screen divides the chancel and nave, and the whole of the stalls and pulpit are also of carved oak; there are some brasses of the 17th cent.

Tatham Fells, eccl. pa., pa. of Tatham (q.v.), N. Lancs., 14 N.E. of Lancaster. The church of The Good Shepherd (rebuilt 1888) is in Gothic style.

Tathwell, pa. and vil., E. Lincs., 3 S. of Louth; ac. 4,326; soil clay, gravel, and limestone, overlying clay and chalk. The church of St. Vedast (restored 1889) is Norm., and contains several memorials to the families of Hanby and Chaplin.

Tatsfield, pa., S.E. Surrey, on the Kentish border, 2½ N.W. of Westerham; ac. 1,303; soil calcareous, overlying chalk. The church (dedication unknown) dates from the 12th cent.; it was completely restored in 1882. Here is a Baptist chapel. Ken Court, formerly Cold Court, is a seat, dating from the reign of James II.

Tattenhall, pa., tp., and small mkt. to. (F.), S.W. Chesh., 7 S.E. of Chester; ac. of pa. 4,154, of tp. 2,925; soil partly clay. The church of St. Alban (rebuilt 1870) is in Perp. style; the old tower remains. The Wesleyans, Primitive Methodists, and Congregationalists have chapels. There are charities amounting to about £21 yearly, and fairs are held in May and November for cattle.

Tattenhoe, pa., N. Bucks., 3½ W. of Fenny Stratford; ac. 690; soil stiff clay, or gravelly, overlying clay and gravel. The church of St. Giles occupies a retired situation on the site of the ancient manor house, the moat belonging to which now partly surrounds the churchyard; the existing fabric was rebuilt in 1540 from the ruins of the neighbouring priory of Snelshall, in Whaddon pa.; the chancel is separated from the nave by an open screen of wood, elaborately carved and painted, and retains a piscina; the font consists of an octagonal basin, well carved, supported on four clustered shafts rising from an oval base.

Tatterford, pa., N.W. Norf., about 4 W.S.W. of Fakenham; ac. 950; soil sand, loam, and peat, overlying clay. The church of St. Margaret (rebuilt 1862) is an edifice of flint, in E. Eng. style. Drury's charity of £1 10s. yearly is for fuel. Pinkney Hall is a seat.

Tattersett, or Gatesend, pa. and small vil., N.W. Norf., 6 W. of Fakenham, on the road to Lynn; ac. 1,756; soil various, but rich and productive, overlying gravel. The church of All Saints is Perp. The charities amount to £4 yearly.

Tattershall, pa., tp., and to., formerly with a market, E. Lincs., 7 S.W. of Horncastle; ac. of pa. 4,524, of tp. 1,574; soil light sand, overlying gravel and blue clay. The church of the Holy Trinity, formerly collegiate, is Perp.; the chancel retains three sedilia, a piscina, and an aumbry, and there are also piscinæ in both transepts, and in the north porch a stoup; the stone screen was the gift (in 1528) of Robert de Whalley, a member of the college, who was buried beneath its archway; there is a mural brass to Hugh de Gondeby, supervisor to Ralph de Cromwell (d. 1411), and in the choir a very fine but mutilated brass with effigies and canopy to Ralph, 4th Baron Cromwell, lord treasurer to Henry VI., founder of the college and castle (d. 1455), and Margaret (Dayncourt) his wife (d. 1454); in the north transept is a slab of Purbeck marble, with brass effigy and inscription to Matilda or Maude (Stanhope), wife of Robert, 6th Baron Willoughby de Eresby, and a benefactress to the college (d. 1497); here also is a canopied brass with effigy and inscription to Joan (Stanhope), wife of Sir Humphrey Bourchier, 5th Baron Cromwell (d. 1479); there are also three brasses with effigies of ecclesiastics. Here is a Wesleyan chapel. There are almshouses for ten poor families, founded in 1440 by Ralph Cromwell, and endowed with £30 yearly. The charities for distribution amount to £12 yearly. An annual fair for cattle and sheep is held on Sept. 25. T. Castle (erected about the year 1440) was originally a strong fortress, but received considerable injury during the Civil War; the principal remains consist of the keep, a quadrangular tower of fine brickwork; at the angles rise four octangular turrets, with machicolated battlements, having low conical roofs; at the top of the south-east turret is a covered projecting gallery, resting on massive corbelled masonry and embattled.

Tattingstone, pa. and vil., S.E. Suff., 5¼ S.W. of Ipswich; ac. 1,637; soil mostly light, overlying sand and gravel. The church of St. Mary is a large Dec. building. Here is a Wesleyan chapel. A cottage and 1 ac. of land are appropriated to the use of the parish clerk. T. Place, a large brick mansion in a well-wooded park, is a seat.

Tatton, tp., pa. of Rostherne (q.v.), Mid Chesh., 2 N. of Knutsford; ac. 1,886. T. Hall, the seat of Lord Egerton, was built in 1805, and is a handsome structure of white freestone; the south front is of the Ionic order, and has a noble portico supported by four columns. In the mansion are preserved a number of portraits brought from Ashley Hall, being the original portraits of those assembled at the latter place during the rebellion of the Pretender, when the expediency of joining his standard was debated, and the resolution decided by the casting vote of the chairman, Thomas Assheton, in favour of the reigning sovereign. The park, about 9 miles in circumference, is finely timbered, principally with oak, and contains about 1,000 deer. The gardens are well laid out and planted with choice shrubs; the conservatories are extensive, and contain a rare and valuable collection of exotic plants. Experimental fields on a large scale have been placed by Lord Egerton at the disposal of the Manchester and Liverpool Agricultural Society, and on them a large amount of experimental work is carried out every year.

Tatworth, eccl. pa., pa. of and 2 S. from Chard (q.v.), S. Somerset. The church of St. John the Evangelist is in E. Eng. style. Here is a Particular Baptist chapel known as "St. Margaret's," which is believed to be an ancient chapel and to date from the reign of Elizabeth. The Baptists also have a chapel. There is a curious custom here said to date from time immemorial: In the pa. are 6 ac. of land without any legal owner; the holders of property in the locality share the rent, however, and hold a court once a year to let the land, an inch of tallow candle being lighted and the last bidder before the light burns out obtaining the land for the year at the price he offers. Parrock's Lodge is a seat.

Taughboyne, pa., Raphoe bar., E. co. Don., Ir., 7 S.W. of Londonderry, and bounded on the east by the Foyle; ac. 15,847. It contains the vil. of St. Johnstown (q.v.).

Taunton, parl. and mun. bor., co. mkt. and assize to., and head of petty sess., U., and Co. Co. dis., on the Tone, W. Somerset, 31 N.E. of Exeter. T. is a place of great antiquity, and was called by the Saxons Tantune from its situation on the Tone. From the discovery in the neighbourhood of several urns containing Roman coins, it is supposed to have existed in the time of the Romans. In the reign of William I. T. had a mint, and enjoyed the privileges attached to the possession of that honour. In 1497, during the reign of Henry VII., the impostor Perkin Warbeck seized the to. and castle, which he abandoned on the approach of the King's troops. During the Civil War the place was alternately occupied by both sides, and in 1645, after sustaining a prolonged siege, capitulated. At the Restoration the walls of the to. were razed to the ground, and so effectually that not even their site can now be traced. The inhabitants took a prominent part in the rebellion of Monmouth in June, 1685, presenting stands of colours to his troops, and to himself a richly embroidered standard. T. was incorporated by royal charter by Charles I. in 1627, but the charter was annulled on the restoration of Charles II. on account of the support given by the to. to the Parliamentary party during the Civil War; another charter, however, was granted a few years after, but this was lost in 1792. A new charter of incorporation was granted to the to. in 1877. T. is situated in a central part of the beautiful and luxuriant vale of T. Dean, and consists of three main streets, meeting in the centre of the to., where there is a fine open triangular space called "The Parade," in which stands a handsome market cross. A substantial stone bridge of three arches crosses the Tone, and connects the town proper with that portion called North Town. T. formerly returned two members to Parliament, but in 1885 the number was reduced to one; the bor. comprises nearly the whole of the pas. of St. James and St. Mary Magdalene, part of Wilton, and part of Bishops Hull. The church of St. Mary Magdalene, situated near the centre of the to., is a spacious edifice of stone, chiefly Perp.; the north aisle is in part E. Eng., and there are many ancient monuments. The interior was restored in 1845, and the famous tower was entirely rebuilt in fac-simile of the old tower (1858–62); it consists of four stages; the lowermost, containing a fine west window, forms an entrance porch; the only portions of sculpture belonging to the old tower now remaining are in the spandrils of the western entrance, and represent the Day of Judgment and Doom. The church of St. James is Late Perp.: the tower and chancel have been rebuilt, the former in fac-simile. It contains mural monuments with arms to the Yea family. There are also eccl. pas. with modern churches, a Catholic church and convents, and places of worship for various Nonconformist bodies. Fox's Grammar School (founded 1522) has been reconstituted, and the buildings have been acquired by the Corporation for municipal offices. The Shire Hall (opened 1858), in Elizabethan style, contains a fine entrance hall leading to the courts on each side, a grand-jury room, and a fine suite of apartments for the judges. The entrance hall is adorned with busts of Somersetshire worthies. The new market, on the west side of the Parade, is a building of the Ionic order; it contains apartments used by the School of Art, and the basement is occupied by shops. The markets are held on Wednesdays and Saturdays, and fairs for cattle, sheep, and horses on June 17 and July 7. In the old Market House, a plain brick building, are the Guildhall, an assembly-room, and rooms used by the Conservative Club. There are two silk factories, three producing linen collars and cuffs, and others for the making of gloves and paper boxes; besides these, there are several small iron and brass foundries, coach-making, malting, and brewing establishments, and cabinet manufactories. H.M.'s prison, in the High Street opposite the Shire Hall, is now closed. The T. and Somerset Hospital was founded in 1809 to commemorate the entry of George III. on the fiftieth year of his reign. There are several endowed almshouses, and a small educational charity. T. was the birthplace of Samuel Daniel, poet-laureate (1599–1619), who was born here in 1562; and (Jan. 4, 1683) of the Rev. Crimean War." Among the Bishops of Winchester who made the castle their occasional residence were Cardinals Beaufort (1405–47) and Wolsey (1530–31). T. Castle was founded by Ina, King of the West Saxons, in 702; during a rebellion in 722, when it was seized by Eadbricht, King of the South Saxons, its timber work was destroyed by Ethelburga, queen of King Ina, but was afterwards rebuilt. In the following reign, being then a royal residence, it was given with the manor of T. Dean to the church of Winchester. William Gifford, who as Bishop of Winchester (1107–29) held the lordship, Henry of Blois, his successor (1129–74), and following prelates resided here, and the castle received from them considerable additions, especially towards the end of the 13th cent. or early in the 14th cent., when the existing south front with its circular towers was erected. Jeffreys (Chief Justice 1683–85) held his "Bloody Assize" in the Great Hall in June, 1685, after the battle of Sedgmoor, when over 300 of the insurgents were executed in various parts of the co., nineteen being hanged opposite the "White Hart" inn in this to. This ancient fortress was acquired in 1875 by the Somersetshire Archæological and Natural History Society; the museum of this society contains a valuable collection of objects of interest in both departments. There is also a general natural history collection, illustrative of the fauna of the co., and a library containing some valuable books and manuscripts.

Taverham, pa. and pleasant vil. on the Wensum, E. Norf., 6 N.W. of Norwich; ac. 2,069; soil sandy, overlying sand, gravel, and clay. The church of St. Edmund (restored 1861) is a thatched building of flint with stone dressings, with a round tower said to be Saxon. Here is an extensive paper-mill which employs about 106 hands. The Hall, rebuilt in 1860 in manorial style, is a seat.

Tavistock, pa., U. and mkt. to. (T. and F.), head of U., Co. Co. dis., and petty sess. div., and one of the four Stannary tos., S. Dev.; 15 N. of Plymouth; ac. 11,503. The to. is picturesquely situated in the valley of the Tavy (whence the name), amongst the downs and hills on the western border of Dartmoor. T. was a bor. by prescription, but lost its parliamentary representation in 1885, the municipal charter having been abolished two years before. It gives the title of marquess to the Russells, dukes of Bedford. The church of St. Eustachius

Tavistock Division, one of the eight parl. divs. of Dev.; it lies in the west of the co., and returns one Member.

Tavy (1), river, S.W. Dev., rises on Dartmoor, about ½ S. of Cranmere Pool, and runs S.W. and S.S.W. to Tavistock and thence S. to the Tamar, its total length being 20 miles. In the upper part of its course it descends the romantic ravine called Tavy Cleave (q.v.); it then passes between the vils of St. Peter Tavy and St. Mary Tavy, and skirts the grounds of Mount Tavy, before reaching the to. of Tavistock, which is beautifully situated in a valley amidst green hills. The stream here runs onward with a broad current, rushing impetuously over the large boulders which form its bed. Below Tavistock the river, still passing through scenes of great loveliness, flows by many spots of historic interest, such as Crowndale, the birthplace of Sir Francis Drake (the old house has been destroyed). Walreddon House, another ancient mansion, and Buckland Abbey, where Drake lived towards the close of his life. Lower down are the beautiful grounds of Maristowe or Marystowe, and of Warleigh House. The estuary of the T. which runs S.W. is 3 miles long and about ½ mile broad.

Tavy (2). [ST. MARY TAVY, ST. PETER TAVY.]

Tavy Cleave, narrow ravine, S.W. Dev., 6 N.N.E. of Tavistock. The Tavy here runs between overhanging rocks, and after rainy weather presents a very impressive scene.

Taw, river, N.W. Dev., rises on Dartmoor, ½ E. of Cranmere Pool, and runs N. by E. past Belstone and South and North Tawton, making a considerable curve towards the N.W. before it reaches Lapford. Here the river turns N.W., and continues in that direction till it reaches the head of its estuary at Barnstaple. The scenery above Barnstaple, where the grounds of Tawstock Court lie opposite the vil of Bishops Tawton, is one of great beauty. At Barnstaple the river forms a fine estuary, extending 6 miles W. and S.W. to Instow, where it is joined by the Torridge. The joint estuary of the two rivers extends 2 miles N.W. and has a maximum breadth of a mile. The length of the T. is 50 miles.

Tawe, river, S.W. Brecons. and N.W. Glamorgs., rises on the Black Mountains and runs S. and, after its junction with the Llech, S.W. to the Bristol Channel at Swansea. In the upper part of its course through Glamorgs., before leaving the mountains, it passes the vils of Llangyfelach, Treboebill, Pontardawe, and Ynyspenllwch. Tawstock, pa. and vil., on the west bank of the Taw, N. Dev., 2 S. of Barnstaple; ac. 6,582; soil various, overlying clay. The church of St. Peter, picturesquely situated on rising ground and surrounded by fine trees, is Dec. and Perp.; the chancel retains a piscina and credence; in the church is an altar-tomb with recumbent effigy to Frances (Kitson), wife of John (Bourchier), Lord Fitzwarine (d. 1586); another altar-tomb bears the recumbent effigies of William (Bourchier), fifth Baron Fitzwarine and third Earl of Bath (d. 1636), and the Lady Elizabeth (Russell), his first wife; on the tomb are also three small kneeling effigies; to Henry, fifth and last earl (d. 1634), there is a large tomb with griffin supporters, and to his wife, the Lady Rachel (Fane), is a standing effigy of white marble, on a pedestal; within a recessed arch on the north side of the chancel is a recumbent effigy of a lady of the 14th cent., in wimple and mantle. The poor of the manor of T. have the rent of 22 ac. of land; the poor's lands produce about £94 yearly. T. Court is a very handsome mansion, beautifully situated, with an ancient gateway, dated 1574, the only remains of the original house, burnt down in 1787.

Tawton, North, pa. and small mkt. to. (TH.), Mid Dev., 12 W. of Crediton; ac. 5,784; soil various, overlying red sandstone. The church of St. Peter is Perp., with some remains of E. Eng. work, and retains some old glass; the nave has a fine oak roof. Here are Congregational, Bible Christian, and Plymouth Brethren chapels. The pa. has some small charities, and the school is endowed. The market house was built in 1849, and the clock tower erected in 1887. Here are woollen and flour mills. Fairs are held on the third Tuesday in April, the second in Oct., and the first in Dec., and great markets on the last Thursdays in Feb. and June, and the first in Aug. Near the church is a moated site called Court Green, believed to have been the seat of the Valletorts.

Tawton, South, pa. and vil. on the Taw, Mid Dev., 5 E. of Okehampton; ac. 8,305; soil loam and clay, overlying shale. The church of St. Andrew (restored 1881) is Perp.; in the Wyke chapel is a tomb with effigy, dated 1592, said to be that of John Wyke; in the north aisle is a mural tablet to the Burgoyne family, dated 1651, and there are memorials to the Oxenham and Battishill families; on the tower is an ancient sundial. The charities amount to £46 yearly. A fair is held on the first Thursday after July 9. Here is a limestone quarry and a copper mine. Oxenham Manor House is a seat.

Taxal, pa., tp., and vil., E. Chesh., 8 N.E. of Macclesfield; ac. of pa. 5,122, of tp. 3,799; soil clay and sand, overlying rock. The church of St. James (rebuilt 1825) is in Gothic style; there are some mural monuments and some old woodwork. The charities are small. Errwood Hall is a seat.

Tay, river, Mid Perths., Sc., rises on Ben Luie on the Abers. border, and runs 118 miles in an E. direction to the North Sea. Between its source and Logierait, where it is joined by the Tummel, the T. runs 57 E., E. by N., and E.N.E., traversing the pas. of Killin and Kenmore and Dull, and dividing those of Weem and Logierait from Little Dunkeld. In this part of its course it passes through Lochs Dochart and Tay, the stream above Loch Dochart being known as the Fillan and that between the two lochs as the Dochart. The Tummel (q.v.) is sometimes regarded as a north headstream of the T. From Logierait the T. flows S. by E. to Dunkeld, thence E. by S. to its confluence with the Isla, beyond which it makes a curve towards the west, again turning S.E. as it approaches the to. of Perth. This is the most picturesque part of its course, the scenery between Logierait and Dunkeld being romantic in the extreme. From Perth to the head of the Firth of Tay (q.v.) the direction of the river is E.S.E. Here also there is an abundance of beautiful views of a softer character than those higher up the river. Exclusive of the Firth of Tay, the length of the river is 93 miles. Between Logierait and the Firth it separates the pas. of Dunkeld and Dowally, Caputh, Cargill, St. Martin, Scone, Kinnoul, Kinfauns, and St. Madoc on its left side from Little Dunkeld, Kinclaven, Redgorton, Tibbermore, Perth, and Rhynd on the right. The T. is the largest river in Scotland, and carries the largest volume of water to the ocean. The salmon fisheries are extremely valuable. The T. is navigable to Perth for vessels of 200 tons burthen.

Tay Bridge, a long lattice-girder bridge of wrought iron crossing the Firth of Tay opposite Dundee. It was constructed in 1882–87 in place of the old bridge, 20 yds. to the east, which was blown down in 1879. The existing bridge is 2 miles and 231 ft. long, and at its highest part, in the centre, rises 77 ft. above the sea. It rests on 86 pairs of piers, which are constructed of brick, faced with granite and iron. A double line of rails runs along the bridge. (See page 144.)

Tay, Firth of, the estuary of the Tay (q.v.), Sc., extends 25 E.N.E. between Perths. and Forfs. on the left and Forfs. on the right. The Firth is tidal, and ranges from ½ mile to upwards of 3 miles in width. There is a large sandbank at its mouth below Broughty Ferry on the north and Tayport on the south; on the south side of this bank is the Abertay light-vessel. There are several other sandbanks, and the Firth is shallow in most places, but the navigation has been greatly improved, and it now offers great advantages as a harbour. On the north side of the estuary, 7 miles from its mouth, is the to. of Dundee.

Tay, Loch, lake, W. Perths., Sc., extends 14½ E. by N., N.E., and E.N.E. from Killin to Kenmore. Its extreme width is little more than a mile, and it is upwards of 500 ft. deep, reaching more than 150 ft. below the level of the sea. The Tay (q.v.) enters its south-west extremity at Killin, where it is known as the Dochart, and issues from it at Kenmore. At Killin the Dochart is joined by the Lochay.

Taynton (1), pa., W. Oxon., on the Glouc. border, 9 N.W. of Witney; ac. 1,944; soil limestone brash, overlying rock. The church of St. John (restored 1861) is chiefly Dec.; arcades of two arches each divide the nave and aisles, and in the north aisle is a niche with ball-flower mouldings; there are remains of a squint in the south aisle, which has also a richly-moulded Perp. doorway. The font is supported by quaintly-carved figures attached to a panelled shaft; in the north aisle are 17th-cent. mural tablets to the Sumner family. The charities for distribution in bread and money amount to £19 a year, and there is an annual sum of £5 for educational purposes. In the pa. are quarries of very excellent building stone.

The Tay Bridge. (See p. 143.)

Taynton (2), pa., W. Glouc., 6½ N.W. of Glouc., on the Herefords. border; ac. 2,501; soil generally a deep red loamy clay, and applied to pasture and arable in almost equal proportions; the subsoil is clay and rock. The church of St. Lawrence (erected in 1660 in place of the former church, destroyed during the Civil War in 1644) is a rectangular building of stone standing north and south; the pulpit, of beautifully-carved oak, retains an old hour-glass frame. The charities amount to about £24 yearly. Cider of the best quality is made here, and a perry of surpassing richness, called T. squash; bricks, drain-pipes, and brown pottery ware are also made. T. House has a pleasing and extensive prospect; it held a garrison during the Civil War in 1643, and was the scene of a fight which took place with troops under Colonel Massey.

Taynuilt, ha. with railway station, pa. of Ardchattan and Muckairn (q.v.), N. Args., Sc., 15 N.E. of Oban.

Tayport, known originally as "South Ferry," then successively "Ferry of Scotscraig" and "Ferry-port-on-Craig" (a name now confined to the pa. in which the to. is situated), seaport on the Firth of Tay, opposite to Broughty Ferry, N.E. Fifes., Sc., 5 S.E. of Dundee. The places of worship are the pa. church (1794), a Free church, a United Presbyterian church, and a Baptist chapel. For facilitating the shipping of goods the railway company have constructed a dock and a pier, which can be approached by steamers at all times of the tide. There are three factories here for the spinning of yarns and the manufacture of linen and jute goods, also a foundry, engine works, and an extensive timber-yard and works, which provide employment for many of the inhabitants. The salmon fishery, which is co-extensive with the pa. along the coast, is actively pursued during the season, the fish being mostly sent to the London markets; mussel dredging is also carried on extensively in the season. The to., with the pa., was originally an estate of the bishops of St. Andrews, having in the reign of Alexander III. been feued to Sir Michael Scott, better known as "the Wizard," who is believed to have given it the name of Scotscraig. Many houses and villas have been erected on the slopes of the Tay, commanding a fine prospect of the opposite shore, Broughty Ferry and Dundee, and it has become to some extent a residential suburb of Dundee. The pa., about 5 miles in length and from half a mile to a mile in breadth, stretches along the south margin of the Tay to its mouth, where it empties itself into the North Sea. The land rises to a hilly range extending westwards, and is bounded on the south by the pas. of Forgan and Leuchars, and on the north by the river Tay. The local position of the pa. naturally accounts for its name, situated as it is on a rock or crag, and here was formerly a ferry for the conveyance of passengers, horses and cattle, so that this was literally a ferry, whose port was on a crag (or craig)—hence the name; but now the steamers have long since abolished this mode of conveyance. The estate of Scotscraig, which comprises the whole pa., was formerly the property of Archbishop Sharp, of St. Andrews, of whose house some remains can still be traced. The present mansion-house (1807) is a substantial building amidst fine plantations and well-laid-out grounds.

were found to have been used in the construction of the windows; one of these, forming the sill of a window, bore an ornamental circular-headed cross, with other devices. There are Wesleyan, Primitive and Free Methodist chapels. Bayons Manor is a modern castellated manor-house, in an undulating park on the slope of the wolds; the house is surrounded by a moat crossed by a drawbridge, and includes all the architectural features and accessories peculiar to a baronial residence of the middle ages; the interior comprises a large and well-proportioned hall with an open and massive roof adorned with suits of armour, ancient weapons and portraits, a large and valuable library with a similar roof, besides other spacious apartments. In 1807 a glazed earthen vessel was turned up by the plough on the estate, containing about 6,000 silver pennies of Henry II. of various mints, and disclosing to antiquaries several mintages and specimens before unknown; by the liberality of the owner, collections were placed in the British Museum and in other repositories.

Teddington (1) (anciently called "Tuddington" and "Totington"), pa. and residential dis., S.W. Middx., situated on the high road from Richmond Bridge to Hampton Court through Bushey Park, 2 S. of Twickenham; ac. 1,196 and 18 water; soil gravelly, overlying gravel. Market-gardening is carried on here. T. is close to the river Thames; the second lock on the river, 17 miles above Westminster Bridge, is placed here, and has been rebuilt in masonry, and a small pound made adjoining the larger one for the passage of pleasure boats, which thus pass through in about three minutes, small boats being lifted over; this lock is the limit of the Port of London in this direction. The former pa. church of St. Mary probably occupied the site of an ancient chapel belonging to the Abbey of Westminster; the present edifice, a structure of brick, possesses neither beauty nor antiquity, and has been added to from time to time; the church, which is not now used, contains tablets to many distinguished characters buried here, among which is one to Sir Orlando Bridgeman, Chief Justice of the Common Pleas and Lord Keeper of the Seals to Charles II. (d. 1674); there are others to Margaret Woffington, the celebrated actress (d. 1760), and to John Walter, Esq., the founder and principal proprietor of the Times, who died here Nov. 16, 1812; on the south wall is a brass to John Goodyere (d. 1506) and Thomasyne, his wife. In the churchyard is buried Paul Whitehead, the poet (d. 1774), and Richard Bentley (d. 1782), the friend of Walpole, whom he assisted in designing and erecting Strawberry Hill. The new pa. church of St. Albans, at present incomplete, is in Dec. style. The altar ornaments are of ancient Florentine work. The seven lamps, presented by the Orthodox Patriarch at Jerusalem, are of Russian workmanship, except the centre one, which is Venetian. Until their transmission to T. they had been hanging in the Holy Sepulchre at Jerusalem. The church of the eccl. pa. of SS. Peter and Paul is in E. Eng. style. Besides a Free Church of England and a Catholic church there are places of worship for various Nonconformist bodies. The Town Hall, in Wolsey Road, is a structure of red brick, with ornamental moulded and carved dressings, and comprises public baths and shops in the basement, the parochial offices, lecture and auction rooms, and a theatre and ball room, capable of holding 1,400 persons, on the first floor. T. has several clubs, and Horticultural and Building Societies. The Cottage Hospital was established in 1875.

Teddington (2), pa. and vil. on the borders of Glouc., S. Worcs., 5 E. of Tewkesbury; ac. 820; soil stiff clay, overlying clay. The church of St. Nicholas is partly E. Eng., still retaining much of its original character and simplicity; the plain Norm. font is placed in the chancel, and on the south wall of the nave are the arms of William III. and Mary, 1689. A short distance north of the vil. is a guide-post of stone, called "the Teddington Hands," pointing to five different roads.

Tednambury, ha., pa. of and 1½ N.E. from Sawbridgeworth (q.v.), S.E. Herts.

Tedsmore, pl., pa. of West Felton (q.v.), N.W. Salop, 5½ S.E. of Oswestry. T. Hall, in a park of about 200 ac., is a seat.

Tedstone Delamere, pa. and vil., E. Herefords., 13 N.W. of Worcester; ac. 1,692; soil marl, subsoil various. The church of St. James (rebuilt 1856) is Norm. and Dec.; there are two lich gates in the churchyard, and an old sundial. The charities are small. Cider is made. Tedstone Court is a seat.

Tedstone Wafer, pa. and small vil., E. Herefords., 14 N.W. of Worcester; ac. 687; soil clay and loam, overlying rock and clay. The old church is disused; the modern church of St. James is in Gothic style.

Tedworth, South. [TIDWORTH, SOUTH.]

Teelin, vil. on the estuary of the Glen, often called T. Bay, pas. of Glencar and Glencolumbkill (q.v.), S.W. co. Don., Ir., 11 W. of Killybegs.

Teelin Head, the name often given to the most south-westerly portion of the cliffs commencing at Carrigan Head, Banagh bar., S.W. co. Don., Ir., and extending for six miles, with altitudes ranging from 745 ft. to 1,415 ft.

Tees, river of Cumb., Westmd., Dur., and N.R. Yorks., rises on the S.E. side of Cross Fell, and after forming for a few miles the boundary between Cumb. and Westmd., flows during the remainder of its course between Dur. and Yorks. The scenery above Middleton-in-Teesdale is characterised by some interesting features such as the mountain pool called the Weel, and the fine waterfalls of Calder Snout and High Force (q.v.). The river continues its S.E. course past Middleton to Barnard Castle, passing Egglestone Hall and Marwood on its left or Durham side, and Romald Kirk, Cotherstone, and Lartington Hall on the right. The situation of the to. and fortress of Barnard Castle on the north side of the river is extremely picturesque. In flowing E. from Barnard Castle to Winston the river makes a considerable curve towards the S., passing Egglestone Abbey, Rokeley Hall and the river Greta, celebrated in Scott's poem, and Wycliffe, the birthplace of the great reformer. The river now flows E. past Gainford to Pierce Bridge, and thence with many curves E.S.E. to Sockburn, passing Cleasby and Croft on the right, and on the left Hurworth and Neasham Hall. From Sockburn the T. runs N. to Over Dinsdale, and afterwards S.E. to Worsall. It then turns N.E. and continues in that direction till it falls into the North Sea. In this part of its course it passes the three tos. of Yarm, Stockton, and Middlesborough. The most beautiful scenery on the T. is perhaps that between Barnard Castle and Pierce Bridge. The banks of the river between Pierce Bridge and Worsall are less wild and romantic, but they are characterised by a soft beauty of their own. The interest of the river below Yarm is due to its industrial associations, not to any natural charm. The estuary, called Tees Mouth, is a fine expanse of water 5 miles long with an extreme breadth of 4 miles. The length of the river is about 80 miles.

Teesdale, name given to the dis. on the Tees, lying in the south-west part of Dur., in the parl. div. of Barnard Castle, and in the north-west part of the N.R. Yorks., in the Richmond parl. div. The dis. contains the tos. of Barnard Castle, Middleton-in-Teesdale, and Staindrop.

Tees Mouth. [TEES.]

Teeton, tp. and ha., pa. of and 1½ E. from Ravensthorpe (q.v.), W. Northants; ac. 668.

Teffont Evias, pa. and vil., S. Wilts., 9½ S. of Shaftesbury; ac. 742; soil sand and clay, overlying stone. The church (dedication unknown) is Dec.; the manor chapel contains the tombs of the Ley family, including three effigies of knights. There are almshouses for two poor families. In a quarry large numbers of Roman coins have been found. Teffont House, a seat, dates from Henry VII. and contains paintings by Mabuse, Peragino, Romano, Le Fevre, etc.

Teffont Magna, pa. and vil., S. Wilts., 10 W. of Salisbury; ac. 1,646; soil sand, clay, and chalk, overlying chalk and flint. The chapel (repaired 1843), standing in the middle of the vil., is an ancient stone building; the chancel is separated from the nave by an old carved oak screen. Here is a Primitive Methodist chapel. The interest of £50 is annually distributed to the poor in blankets, and £100 was bequeathed in 1877 for coal.

Tehallan, pa. on the Blackwater and the Ulster Canal, Cremorne and Monaghan bars., N. co. Monaghan, Ir., 2 N.E. of Monaghan; ac. 5,947.

Tehidy. [ILLOGAN.]

Teifi, or Teivy, river, Cardigs., Carmarths., and Pembs., rises in Llyn Teifi, in N.E. Cardigs., and runs 3 W.S.W. to Strata Florida Abbey, beyond which it makes a considerable curve to the north, and then runs S.S.W. to Tregaron, Llanddewi Brefi, and Lampeter. It here becomes the boundary between Cardigs. and Carmarths., and proceeding in the same direction runs by Llanwnnen (where its valley widens considerably), and by Llanybyther and Llanllwni to Llanfihangel-ar-Arth, where it turns W. Between the last-named place and Kenarth the river passes many spots of great beauty and interest, including Llandyssil, which stands amidst bold, richly-wooded hills; Bangor Church, the situation of which is most picturesque; Henllan, and Newcastle Emlyn, with its fine old castle. A little above Kenarth the river forms a fine cascade known as the Salmon Leap. For the rest of its course the river winds N.W., forming the boundary between Cardigs. and Pembs. It becomes navigable at Llechryd, near which is the beautiful seat of Castle Malgwn. A little lower down it passes the ruins of Kilgerran Castle. A little below Cardigan the river expands into a broad estuary. The grouping of the rocks at its mouth is very fine. Its length is about 53 miles.

Teigh, pa. and vil., N. Rutld., on the Leics. border, 5 N. of Oakham; ac. 1,289; soil and subsoil red loam. The church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity.

Teign, river, S. Dev., has its source in two streams which rise on opposite sides of an elevation on Dartmoor, about 5 S.W. of Chagford. After a somewhat circuitous course the North and South T. unite immediately above Chagford. As it flows E. from Chagford to Dunsford, the rock-strewn bed and wooded banks of the river present a succession of romantic views, the scenery between Whyddon Park and Fingle Bridge being singularly impressive. From Dunsford the T. runs S. past Christow, Chudleigh, and Teigngrace to the east vicinity of Newton Abbot, where it again turns E., and soon forms an estuary lined with picturesque woods and fields. After reaching a width of ¾ mile the estuary again narrows, its mouth having been partly obstructed by the sandbank called the Den, which now forms Teignmouth Esplanade. There is a ferry at Teignmouth, which stands on the north bank, and a bridge a little further up the river. The length of the T. is about 30 miles.

Teigngrace, pa. and vil. on the Teign, S. Dev., 16 S.W. of Exeter; ac. 1,400; soil loam, overlying clay and sand. The church of St. Peter and St. Paul was built in 1787, in E. Eng. style; there are mural monuments to various members of the Templer family. The charities amount to £60 yearly, and are partly devoted to educational purposes. Pipeclay and potters' clay are found in the district. Stover Lodge is a seat.

Teignholt, ha., pa. of Drewsteignton (q.v.), S. Dev., 5 S.E. of Okehampton.

Teignmouth, seaport, watering-place, mkt. to. and prescriptive bor., S. Dev., 14 S. of Exeter. It consists of the pas. of East and West T., formerly separated by a stream, now covered over. The to. is situated on the coast of the English Channel and at the mouth of the Teign, partly on and around the base of a triangular point of land which projects halfway across the estuary, and on the acclivities of the hill which rises from this point to the north-west and commands extensive views of the river and the sea. Although it is irregularly built and some of the streets are narrow and ill-paved, it contains some good shops and a number of villas, several fine terraces, and good residences. The Den (or Dene) is a grass plot running parallel with the sea, and forming a fine promenade of more than ½ mile in length; here is a small light-house, erected in 1844–45. From the Den runs a pier. The to. has two commodious quays—the Old and the New—a Custom House, and a coast-guard watch-house. T. is of considerable antiquity, having sent members to the Council at Westminster in the reign of Edward I. The to. is connected with the vil. of Shaldon by a ferry over the Teign, and also by a bridge of 34 arches. T. gives the title of Baron to the Shore family. St. Michael's Church, East T., overlooking the sea, is a cruciform building of stone, rebuilt in 1822–23, in Norm. style; the chancel retains double sedilia. St. James's Church, West T., is a large octagonal edifice of stone; it has a south porch and a low tower of Norm. date, the only remaining fragment of the ancient church. The Catholics have a church (dedicated to Our Lady and St. Patrick), a theological college for Redemptorists, and a Benedictine abbey; there are also places of worship for various Nonconformist bodies. The present market was erected in 1883, but the original charter dates from 1253; the market for provisions is open daily; the building contains board-room and offices for the Local Board, and an arcade of shops. The to. has club-houses, circulating libraries and reading-rooms, good hotels and boarding and lodging houses. The Baths are the property of a company. The Infirmary was established in 1848, and there is a Temperance Hall and a Sailors' Home. The to. has no manufactures. Pipeclay and potters' clay are dug, principally in the neighbouring pa. of Kingsteignton and brought down the river in small craft, and thence shipped to the Staffordshire and other potteries, to the extent of about 37,000 tons annually. The imports are principally coal and culm; there is also a good Newfoundland trade, and home fishery for whiting, herrings, mackerel and pilchards, which are caught in the Channel, and salmon in the river. There are also maltings and brewerie. upon a small scale, and a shipbuilding yard.

13 S.E., joining the Forth 2 N.W. of Stirling. The two headstreams both rise near the north extremity of Loch Lomond, the distance between their sources being little more than ½ mile, but it increases to nearly 10 miles before they begin again to approach one another. The north headstream, which passes through Lochs Doine, Voil, and Lubnaig, is sometimes known as the Leny. The south stream, passing through Lochs Katrine, Achray, and Vennachar, is a characteristic feature in the beautiful scenery of the Trossachs. The banks of the river below Callander are also very picturesque, although the landscapes here are less romantic than they are in the upper part of its course. The castle of Doune, situated at the confluence of the T. and the Ardoch, abounds in interesting historical associations. About ½ mile lower down the water-power furnished by the river is used to work some extensive cotton-mills. Between this point and its union with the Forth the T. is skirted by the grounds of Blair, Drummond, and Ochtertyre.

Telegraph, The. [ST. MARY'S (1).]

Tellarought, or Terrerath, pa., Shelburne bar., W. co. Wex., Ir., 3 S.E. of New Ross; ac. 1,653. There is a Catholic church and a school. A portion of an old Danish castle still remains, with a beautiful cemetery adjoining, and within the ruins some excavations were made about 1840 in pursuit of treasure. Around are a number of raths, some connected by underground passages.

Tellisford, pa. and vil. on the Frome, N.E. Somerset, 9 S.E. of Bath; ac. 757; soil brashy, overlying grit. The church of All Saints is Gothic.

Telscombe, pa. and vil., in a secluded valley among the Downs and extending to the sea coast, S. Sussex, 3½ N.W. of Newhaven; ac. 1,181 and 86 water. The church of St. Lawrence is a small but ancient edifice of flint, with some Norm. portions. Povey's charity of £17 yearly is applied to educational purposes. T. Tye, in this pa., the site of a Roman station, is one of the meeting-places of the South Down Harriers.

Teltown, pa. on the Blackwater, Upper Kells bar., Mid co. Meath, Ir., 3¾ S.E. of Kells; ac. 4,267. Hurdlestown is a seat.

Telych, ha., pa. of and 2 E. from Llandingat (q.v.), N.E. Carmarths.

Teme, river, S.W. Salop, N.W. Herefords. and W. Worcs., rises between Radnors. and Montgoms., on the west border of Salop. The river flows S.E. to Knighton and thence E. to Brompton Bryan, forming throughout this part of its course the boundary between Salop and Radnors. It then winds by Leintwardine, Downton Hall, Oakley Park, and Ludlow to Tenbury in Worcs., flowing alternately through the cos. of Herefords. and Salop, the general direction of its course being E. by S.: from Tenbury it runs E. to Stockton, thence S. to Knightwick, and again E. to the Severn, which it joins 1¼ mile S. of Worcester. The T. has a swift current, and the scenery on its banks is very picturesque. It is celebrated for its grayling. Its length is about 60 miles.

Tempand, vil., pa. of and 2½ N. from Lochmaben (q.v.), S. Dumfs., Sc.

Temple (1), pa. and vil., N. Cornw., about 9 N.W. of Liskeard; ac. 843; soil peat and clay loam, overlying clay, slate and granite. The church of St. Catherine, rebuilt 1883 on the foundations of the old Norm. church, is in E. Eng. style. Here is a Bible Christian chapel. At Temple Moor is an ancient cross.

Temple (2), ha., pa. of Selborne (q.v.), E. Hants, 4 S.E. of Alton.

Temple (3), pa. and vil., S. Edins., Sc.; ac. 14,537; the land is chiefly hilly, but contains a good deal of moor and pasture land. The vil., situated on rising ground on the banks of the Gladhouse water, which falls into the South Esk, is about 10 S. of Edinburgh. The old church, now in ruins, was founded by King David I. for the Knights Templar; the new church was built 1830 in Gothic style.

Temple (4), part of the vil. of Lower Largo, E. Fifes., Sc. [LARGO.]

Templeachally, or Templekelly, pa. on the Shannon, Owney and Arra bar., W. co. Tip., Ir., ¼ E. of Killaloe; ac. 8,942. There is a Catholic church. The pa., which contains the vil. of Ballina (q.v.), partly extends along the shores of Lough Derg and partly on the Shannon. The north portion is mountainous.

Temple Balsall, or Balsall, eccl. pa. and vil., pa. of Hampton-in-Arden (q.v.), W. Warws., 10 N.W. of Warwick. The church of St. Mary (restored 1849), which formerly belonged to the Knights Templar, is Dec.; in the chancel are sedilia, a piscina, and an aumbry; the tracery of the windows is fine. Balsall Street Chapel is in Gothic style. Lady Catherine Leveson's Hospital (endowed in 1670) is a handsome building occupying three sides of a quadrangle; the ancient Hall of the Templars is now the offices of the bailiff and governors, and other traces of the old buildings are extant.

Templebeg, pa., Upper Kilnamanagh bar., Mid co. Tip., Ir., 5 S. of Borrisoleigh; ac. 3,427. There is a Catholic church.

Templebodan, pa., Barrymore bar., E. co. Cork, Ir., 5 N.W. of Middleton; ac. 4,735.

Templeboy, coast pa., Tireragh bar., N. co. Sligo, Ir., 3 E. of Dromore West; ac. 9,104. The scenery along the sea-coast is the most beautiful and picturesque of the Sligo sea-board.

Templebredon, pa., Clanwilliam and Coonagh bars., S. co. Tip. and E. co. Lim., Ir., 6 N.W. of Tipperary; ac. 2,454.

Templebreedy, coast pa., Kerrycurrihy bar., S.E. co. Cork, Ir., 5 S. of Passage; ac. 2,654. The pa., which contains the vil. of Crosshaven (q.v.), is on the west of the entrance to Cork Harbour, opposite Roches Point on the sea-coast, and has a coastguard station at Myrtleville, a small bay, and is bounded on the north by the Owenboy river.

Temple Bruer, pa., W. Lincs., 6 N.W. of Sleaford; ac. 3,910; the land is mostly arable and heath. The church of St. John the Baptist is in E. Ehg. style. On T. B. farm are the remains of an extensive establishment, formerly belonging to the Templars, founded by Lady de Caux before 1174; a massive square tower and a few vaults still remain; the tower is E. Eng., and was erected probably about the middle of the 13th cent. Stone coffins and other remains have at various times been exhumed. In 1541 Henry VIII. when on his way towards the north, for the purpose of holding a conference with his nephew, the young King of Scotland, paid a visit here to Charles Brandon, Duke of Suffolk, who had held the Commandery buildings since the suppression of the house in 1538.

Templebryan, pa., E. Carbery bar., S. co. Cork, Ir., 2½ N.W. of Clonakilty; ac. 1,188. Here are the ruins of a small church and the remains of an ancient stone circle; many of the stones have disappeared, and others have been displaced.

Templecarn, pa. Tirhugh bar., S. co. Don., and Lurg bar., N. co. Ferm., Ir.; ac. 39,418. It contains a number of islands in Loughs Derg and Erne, and part of the to. of Pettigoe (q.v.).

Temple Cloud, vil., pa. of Cameley (q.v.), N.E. Somerset, 10 S. of Bristol. It is supposed to be the site of an ancient Roman encampment, and of a temple erected in honour of Claudius Cæsar, hence its name, "Templum Claudii"—corrupted into Temple Cloud. Cholwell House is a seat.

Templecombe, or Abbas Combe, pa. and vil., S.E. Somerset, 5 S. of Wincanton; ac. 1,842; soil loamy, overlying stone in the upper part of the pa., and clay in the lower part. The church of St. Mary is Perp., and contains a curious E. Eng. font; in the transept is a piscina, and the base of the tower forms a porch. There is a Congregational chapel. The charities amount to about £20 yearly. Here was anciently a preceptory of the Knights Templar, founded before 1185; the remains to the south of the vil. now form part of a farmhouse. There are large dairies in the pa. T. House is a seat.

Templecorran, pa., Lower Belfast bar., S.E. co. Antr., Ir., 5 N.E. of Carrickfergus, and bounded on the south by Belfast Lough; ac. 4,753. There is a Protestant church, and in the pa. are five National schools. Limestone and basalt are found in great abundance.

Templecrone, pa., locally known as the pas. of Kincasslagh or Lower T. and Dunglow or Upper T., Boylagh bar., W. co. Don., Ir., 25 W. of Letterkenny; ac. 51,942. It contains between three and four hundred islands, including Arran, Rutland, Cruit, Innisfree and the vil. of Dunglow (q.v.).

Templederry, pa., Upper Ormond bar., N. co. Tip., Ir., 6 S.E. of Nenagh; ac. 698. Besides the Protestant church, there are three Catholic churches. Castle Otway is a seat.

Templedowney, pa., Upper Ormond bar., N. co. Tip., Ir., 6 E. of Nenagh; ac. 1,850.

Temple-Etney, pa., Iffa and Offa East bar., S.E. co. Tip., Ir., 4½ N.E. of Clonmel; ac. 6,677. The pa. is partly in a mountainous dis. of the Slievenaman group.

Templemore (1), pa., small mkt. to. (W.), and head of petty sess. div., Ikerrin and Eliogarty bars., E. co. Tip., Ir.; ac. 8,471. Charmingly situated on the Suir, in the centre of an exceedingly fertile and well-cultivated district, throughout which are distributed in pleasing relief many elegant seats and neat cottages, surrounded by diversified and beautiful scenery; the to., which is 11 S. of Cashel on the road to Roscrea, is supposed to have originated from the Templars, who had a station here and occupied the ancient castle, which was destroyed by fire. The Protestant church is a remarkably handsome and well-proportioned structure, with a spire and steeple; the Catholic church is a capacious building. The Wesleyans have also a chapel. D'Arcy, Kt., in whose family it remained until the reign of Henry VIII., when Thomas Lord D'Arcy was beheaded on Tower Hill (June 20, 1538) and his estates forfeited for aiding the Northern insurgents in "the Pilgrimage of Grace," an attempt to compel the King to restore the dissolved monasteries; it then passed into the hands of Matthew, Earl of Lennox, during whose residence here, in 1545, Henry, Lord Darnley, husband of Mary Queen of Scots, was born. It is the "Templestowe" of Scott's "Ivanhoe." The present mansion is a Late Elizabethan building of red brick in an extensive deer-park.

Templeshannon, pa., South Ballaghkeen and Scarawalsh bars., Mid co. Wex., Ir., containing part of Enniscorthy (q.v.); ac. 4,982. Vinegar Hill (389 ft.), in this pa., close to Enniscorthy, became notorious during the great rebellion of 1798. On May 23, 1798, the rebellion commenced at Rathfarnham, and the intentions of the leaders were to rise in Dublin at the same time as well as at other points in the country, the non-arrival of the mail coaches (which were to have been detained) being the signal; the outbreak in the city was averted by the arrest of Lord Edward Fitzgerald on the evening of May 19, and by the precautions taken by the authorities. The small body which actually got under arms at Rathfarnham was dispersed, but other bodies assembled in towns more remote, principally in co. Kildare. Several towns and villages were attacked between May 23 and 24, and there were risings in various parts of Wicklow and Wexford. On May 29 the rebel leaders took possession of Vinegar Hill and erected batteries on it, and in a few days collected nearly 10,000 men there, which formed their headquarters, and was the seat of a revolutionary committee composed of rebel officers and priests, who issued orders in the name of the new Irish Republic; here they confined their Protestant prisoners, and each morning executed some of them. It is believed nearly 400 persons were massacred here. On June 21 General Lake assaulted Vinegar Hill from several points, and Temple, The, a range of buildings occupied by the two Inns of Court on the south side of Fleet Street, Central London, E. Middx., ½ W. by S. of St. Paul's. The T. takes its name from the Knights Templar, who in 1184 migrated hither from Holborn, where they had resided since their foundation in 1118. When this order was suppressed in 1313 the T. became the property of Aymer de Valence, Earl of Pembroke, and ten years later passed into the hands of the Knights Hospitaller, who leased the Inner and Middle Temples to those engaged in the study of the Common Law. The society of Knights Hospitaller having been dissolved at the Reformation, the buildings became Crown property, but they were still occupied by the members of the Inns of Court, and in 1608 letters patent were issued granting them to the benchers in perpetuity. The Temple Church, erected by the Knights Templar, comprises two portions—a Trans. round edifice, dating from 1185, built in imitation of the Holy Sepulchre at Jerusalem, and an E. Eng. choir; the entrance doorway is remarkably good, and there are several interesting memorials of Knights Templar with cross-legged figures; at the south-east is a recumbent effigy, supposed to represent William Marshall (d. 1119), Earl of Pembroke and Protector of England. Other monuments commemorate John Selden (d. 1654) and Edmund Gibbon (d. 1794); Oliver Goldsmith (d. 1774) is interred in the adjoining graveyard. The Inner T. and the Middle T. are distinct societies with separate buildings. The most noteworthy of these is the Middle T. Hall, a handsome Elizabethan structure with a beautiful hammer-beam roof and a richly-carved screen. The Middle T. Library, in Gothic style, was erected in 1861. The part of Fleet Street opposite the Temple has been known as T. Bar since the beginning of the 14th cent., a bar or chain having been placed here by the Knights Templar to show the limits of the district outside the City, which was under the jurisdiction of the civic authorities. The gate designed by Wren and put up in 1672 was taken down in 1878 and removed ten years later to Theobalds (q.v.), near Cheshunt, Herts., where it now stands. Its site has been occupied since 1880 by the figure of a griffin.

Tempsford, pa. and vil. on the Ouse and Ivel, E. Beds., 9 N.E. of Bedford; ac. 1,620; soil clay, overlying clay and gravel. The church of All Saints (restored 1867) is E. Eng., Dec., and Perp., with a fine Perp. rood screen and some Late Norm. arcading; in the aisle there is a piscina and a squint, at the north door is an aumbry, in the south porch a stoup, and in the chancel a curious recess containing an old stained window, a piscina, and a trefoiled opening into the vestry. Here are Wesleyan and Moravian chapels. There is a small charity. Tilbrook Hall is a seat.

Tenandry, q.s. pa., pas. of Blair Athole, Dull, and Moulin (q.v.), N. Perths., Sc., about 15 N. of Dunkeld. The Established church dates from 1836.

Tenbury, pa., U. and mkt. to. (T.), and head of a petty sess. div. and Co. Co. dis., N.W. Worcs., 22 N.W. of Worcester; ac. 5,544 and 38 water; soil clayey marl, overlying gravel. The to. (now called Tenbury Wells) is pleasantly seated in a sheltered and fertile valley, surrounded on all sides by beautiful scenery, cornfields, hop gardens, and apple orchards, contrasting strikingly with the Titterstone Clee Hill, which, owing to its height, is seen from all parts of the surrounding country. The Teme, not less celebrated for its trout and grayling than for its scenery, flows by the to., and is here crossed by a bridge of five arches connecting the cos. of Salop and Worcester. The church of St. Mary the Virgin is a building of stone, of various periods, the oldest part being the Norm. western tower. In the south aisle are two monuments of considerable interest: one bears the recumbent stone effigy of a knight of the Sturmy or Exturmey family, as indicated by the arms on his shield; the other has two alabaster effigies and an inscription to Thomas Acton, of Sutton, and his wife, placed in 1581 by the daughter and sole surviving child, who married Sir Thomas Lucy, Kt., of Charlecote, the "Justice Shallow" of Shakespeare. [For the church of St. Michael and All Angels, and St. Michael's College, see OLD WOOD.] There are Baptist, Wesleyan, and Primitive Methodist chapels. There is a bank, a savings bank, a corn exchange, and a market-house, besides pump- and bath-rooms, with news- and reading-room attached, for the purpose of affording the public the use of the mineral waters discovered here. Taken internally the waters are very beneficial in cases of glandular swelling, congestion of the liver, scrofula, and scurvy; and their external application relieves gout and rheumatic affections. The trade is mostly in hops, fruit (apples, pears, plums, cherries, currants), and cider; there is some malting. A fair is held on April 22, and there are stock sales on alternate Tuesdays. The charities amount to about £160 yearly, of which £140 is expended in the maintenance and repair of the public footpaths, bridges, etc., and the remainder in providing apprenticeship fees and in supplying aids to emigration, etc.

Tenby, parl. and mun. bor., pa. (T. St. Mary), mkt. to. (W. & S.), seaport, and watering-place, S.E. Pembs., 9½ E. of Pembroke; ac. of mun. bor. 629, of pa. 2,047. The to. is situated on the summit and sides of a rocky promontory on the west side of Carmarthen Bay. After declining greatly as a place of trade since the time of Elizabeth, it has recently entered on a new career of prosperity owing to the great advantages it offers as a watering-place. These include an equable climate, a mild winter season, and constant south-west winds, while the two stretches of sand on the north and south sides of the to. afford abundant facilities for bathing. The church of St. Mary (partly rebuilt 1885) is mostly E. Eng. and Perp., with a massive tower, partly detached, above which rises a lofty octagonal spire; the west doorway is noteworthy, and there are some interesting memorials, including a tomb with figures of John and Thomas White, merchants at T. in the 15th cent. The other places of worship include a Roman Catholic church and Presbyterian, Baptist, Wesleyan, and Congregational chapels. Among the more important buildings of T. are a town hall (1860), assembly-rooms, a cottage hospital (1871), and a museum with good natural-history collections. The ruins of the castle stand on the rocky peninsula stretching into Carmarthen Bay; they consist of the keep (which appears to have been built by the Flemings), portions of the walls, and the chief entrance gateway. Henry VII., then Earl of Richmond, remained within its walls for some time, sheltered by the Mayor, Thomas White, whilst waiting for an opportunity to escape to France (1471). The Castle Hill, which has been laid out as a public promenade, commands beautiful views; it is crowned by a large marble statue of the Prince Consort, erected in 1865. At the extremity of the peninsula is St. Catherine's Rock, which has been fortified. T. retains great part of its ancient walls, which were repaired in 1588 owing to the threatened approach of the Armada; to this period probably belongs the semicircular bastion which protects the remaining gateway; the walls are flanked by several circular and square towers. Near St. Mary's Church there are traces of a Carmelite priory. T. is a meteorological station. It offers great attractions to the scientific student in consequence of the abundance and variety of its shells and marine fauna. The to. appears to have been a British fishing village at a very early period, but its ancient importance probably dates from the introduction of a colony of Flemish weavers in the reign of Henry I. It was incorporated by William de Valence, Earl of Pembroke, in the 13th cent., and subsequently by Royal charter in 1402. In the reign of Henry VIII. the to. was a thriving port. It belongs to the Pembroke dis. of parl. bors.

The to. stands on elevated ground, the greater part being built on each side of the high road leading from the western parts of Kent through this pa. to the south-east; it is well built and contains many good residences and seats. T. possesses all the privileges of the Cinque Ports and received a charter of incorporation from Henry VI.; it is a member of the ancient to. of Rye, and at the time of its annexation the sea flowed up to the pa. at Small Hythe. The church of St. Mildred is E. Eng. and later; the nave is divided from each aisle by five arches, on alternately circular and octagonal columns; and the nave roof is coved and panelled with richly-worked bosses; this church in 1259 formed part of the ancient possessions of the monastery of St. Augustine, at Canterbury, and so continued until the Dissolution. Attached to the church on the north side is an exclusorium, or penitentiary, supposed to have been used by some religious person; it was also used in the reign of Queen Mary for the confinement of martyrs previous to their being taken to Canterbury; in the north aisle is a fine marble monument to Herbert Whitfield, of T. (d. 1622). The diversion of the funds for the maintenance of the sea walls on the Goodwin to the building of T. church is said to have been the origin of the proverb as to the influence of T. steeple in causing the Goodwin Sands. There are Wesleyan, Baptist, and Unitarian chapels. The Town Hall (1792) is situated on the north side of High Street; here the county court, quarter sessions and public meetings are held, and it is also used for concerts and lectures. The corn market is held on Friday. There is an annual fair held on the first Monday in May for cattle and wool, and a lamb fair on the first Friday in Sept. Heronden, Heronden Hall, Homewood, and Summer Hill are seats.

Termoncarragh, pl., pa. of Kilmore (q.v.), N.W. co. Mayo, Ir., about 4 N.W. of Belmullet.

Termoneeny, pa. on the Moyola, Loughinsholin bar., S.E. co. Londy., Ir., about 3 S.E. of Maghera; ac. 4,801.

Termonfeckin, or Termonfechan, pa. and vil., situated ½ mile from the shore of the Irish Sea, Ferrard bar., S. co. Louth, Ir., about 4 N.E. of Drogheda; ac. 6,307. The Protestant church, in the chancel of which some of the archbishops of Armagh were interred, and a Catholic church are the places of worship. The place is of very remote antiquity, and the vil. was formerly a to. of considerable importance; it is at the present day resorted to, in the summer season, as a pleasant sea vil. Dr. Oliver Plunket, Catholic Archbishop of Armagh, resident here, was accused by the infamous Titus Oates of high treason, and through evidence collected by him was tried and hanged at Tyburn (1681), but it was subsequently discovered that the conviction was obtained by false testimony. The pa. belonged to the see of Armagh, and the archbishops resided here up to 1612. Black Hall is a seat.

Termonmaguirk, pa., East Omagh bar., Mid co. Tyr., Ir., 9 E. of Omagh; ac. 39,725. It contains the vil. of Carrickmore (q.v.). The Protestant and Catholic churches are in the vil. of Carrickmore.

Termon Rock, ha., pa. of Termonmaguirk (q.v.), Mid co. Tyr., Ir., 3 S.W. of Carrickmore.

Tern, river, N.E. Salop; rises in N.W. Staffs., close to the Salop border, and runs S.S.W. between Staffs. and Salop to Market Drayton, passing Oakley Hall on the left, and the vil. of Norton and Tunstall Hall on the right. From Market Drayton, where it enters Salop, the T. runs S.W. to Hodnet, and then flows S. and S.S.W. through a very flat district to Longdon, passing the vils. of Stoke, Bolas Magna, and Waters Upton. From Longdon it flows W.S.W. to Attingham Hall, the grounds of which it intersects as it runs S. to the Severn. The confluence of the river is in the E. vicinity of the vil. of Atcham The length of the T. is about 30 miles.

Ternewan, ha., pa. of Lansallos (q.v.), S.E. Cornw., about 11 S.W. of Liskeard.

Terregles, pa. near the confluence of the Nith and Cluden, S.E. Kirkcuds., Sc., 2½ W. of Dumfries; ac. 3,842; soil light loam alternated with sand, overlying sandstone. The spot was anciently known as "Tir-eglwys" (Terra Ecclesia), now corrupted into "Terregles." T. House is a seat. [INCLUDEN COLLEGE.]

Terrington, pa., tp. (T. and Wiganthorpe), and vil., N.R. Yorks., 15 N.E. of York; ac. of pa. 3,953, of tp. 3,223; soil mixed, overlying clay and limestone. The church of All Saints (restored 1870) is Norm., with some Saxon work; among several brasses is one to Sarah Hitch (d. 1681); there is an ancient register chest. The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have chapels. The charities are small. Here is a stone quarry. Cliff House and T. Hall are seats.

Terrington and Wiganthorpe. [TERRINGTON.]

Terrington St. Clement, pa. and vil., N.W. Norf., 5 W. of Lynn by the ferry, and 6½ by road; ac. 9,410; soil loamy, subsoil clay and silt. The church of St. Clement (restored) is a spacious cruciform structure of freestone of the Perp. period; the font has a lofty Gothic tabernacle cover, and its panels are painted with representations of the Baptism and Temptation of the Saviour. There are Wesleyan, Free Methodist, and Primitive Methodist chapels. The charities are of the yearly value of £10. Orange Farm was the residence of Baron Feagle, a Netherlands refugee, who entertained the Prince of Orange here when the French had invaded Holland, from which circumstance the house obtained its name. Walter Terrington, LL.D., and John Colton, Archbishop of Armagh (1382–1404), were both born here in the 14th cent. In 1844, on removing part of the Roman bank, several Roman coins were found. Hamond Lodge, restored in 1810, is a Tudor mansion, standing in a park sheltered by plantations.

Terrington St. John, pa. and vil., N.W. Norf., 6½ S.W. of Lynn; ac. 2,320; soil clay and loam, overlying gault and clay. The E. Eng. church of St. John, on the north side of the pa., was built at "Peyke's Cross" in 1423, under a licence granted by the Bishop of Ely and made parochial by the Archbishop of Canterbury in 1530; the tower stands about 15 ft. from the church, but is connected with it by a building called the Priest's House. The charities amount to about £32 a year, derived from the poor's land of 13 ac. There is an endowment from 25 ac. of land of about £30 a year, which is applied to the maintenance of the church. Almshouses for four widows are endowed with 4 ac. of land for the purchase of coals.

Terryglass, pa. on the upper reaches of Lough Derg, Lower Ormond bar., N. co. Tip., Ir., 5 N.W. of Borrisokane; ac. 7,772. Limestone is found in abundance. There is a Catholic church.

Terwick (in Domesday "Tordewyke"), pa., N.W. Sussex, 5 W. of Midhurst; ac. 783; soil sandy loam, overlying sandstone. The church of St. Peter (restored 1871) is a small edifice of the E. Eng. period; in the churchyard is an ancient and curious cross. Here is a convalescent home. Dangstein is a seat.

Test, river, W. Hants, rises in the north-west of the co., near the Berks. and Wilts. borders, 7 E.N.E. of Ludgershall, and runs among the chalk downs first 9 S.E. to Whitchurch and then 7 S.W. to its junction with the Anton at Fullerton, after which its course is S. by W. and S. to the head of its estuary. Although the T. rises above Hurstbourne Tarrant, it is only below St. Mary Bourne that its stream becomes perennial. On approaching Whitchurch it skirts the grounds of Hurstbourne Park, and between Whitchurch and Fullerton it passes within a short distance of Harewood Forest. At Stockbridge its valley narrows considerably, and it here divides into several branches. About 10 miles below the to. of Stockbridge the T. runs through that of Romsey, famous in ecclesiastical history, the most interesting spot between the two being the beautiful grounds of Mottisfont Abbey. Immediately below Romsey Broadlands, the seat of Lord Palmerston, borders the river for more than a mile. The estuary of the T. runs 4 E.S.E. to the head of Southampton Water, of which it may be considered a continuation. At its upper extremity is the vil. of Redbridge, and in the south vicinity of the latter that of Eling; both these vils. carry on a considerable coasting trade. The length of the T., including its estuary, is about 39 miles. It abounds in trout and grayling.

Testerton, pa., N.W. Norf., 3 S.E. of Fakenham; ac. 613; soil loamy. The church of St. Remigius, which fell into ruins many years since, has almost entirely disappeared, a portion of the tower alone now remaining. T. House, a fine mansion commanding an extensive prospect, is a seat.

Teston, pa. and vil. on the Medway, Mid Kent, 4 S.W. of Maidstone; ac. 519; soil sandy loam, overlying rock. The church of St. Peter and St. Paul was rebuilt about 1846, and contains the monument of the Rev. James Ramsay, who was one of the founders of the movement for the abolition of slavery. The charities amount to over £60 yearly. Roman remains have been found in the neighbourhood. Barham Court, a seat, was a favourite resort of William Wilberforce and Hannah More.

Tetbury, pa. and U. and mkt. to. (W.), E. Glouc., 10 S.W. of Cirencester; ac. 4,441. The name of this to. is supposed to denote it having been a military station; it is said the Britons called it Caer Bladon, from a supposed king of that name; the English afterwards called it T. Camden mentions, in his account of Malmesbury, that Cunwollow Mulmertius, King of the Britons, built castles at T. and Lacock about the time he built Malmesbury. A camp which once existed here has now long been levelled; heads of arrows and javelins, horseshoes and spurs without rowels, such as were used soon after the Norman accession, have at times been met with, and on the site of the agger (or rampart) several old English coins have been found. The church of St. Mary Magdalen is in Dec. style; the original church is said to have been built soon after the Norm. accession, but this structure was taken down (with the exception of the tower and spire) about 1785 and the present building erected on the site. In the north aisle is an altar-tomb, with recumbent effigies of a man in armour and his wife (1586), to members of the Gastrell family, whose arms appear on the tomb; there is also a monument to Sir William Romney, Knight, of the 17th cent., and one to Thomas Alexander (1805), a local benefactor. In the churchyard is a mutilated cross-legged effigy of a knight in armour, said to represent one of the Barons Braose of Gower. There is a chapel-of-ease, and various Nonconformist bodies have places of worship. Fairs are held on Ash Wednesday and on the third Wednesday in July for cattle and sheep, and another on the Wednesday before or after Nov. 10, free for cattle; the statute fairs for hiring servants are held on the Wednesday before April 5, and the Wednesdays before and after Oct. 11. There is an almshouse for eight poor women, and the charities, which are considerable, are administered by feoffees. There was formerly at the east end of the to. a religious house of the Cistercian order, afterwards called Hacket Court, to which the monks of Kingswood retired in the 12th cent.; the site is now occupied by a modern residence. Elmestree House, an Elizabethan mansion in a small park; Highgrove, a handsome stone mansion; Upton Grove, an Elizabethan house, and Upton House are seats.

Tetchwick (anciently "Touching-wyke"), ha., pa. of Ludgershall (q.v.), Mid Bucks., 3¼ N. of Brill.

Tetcott, pa. and vil. on the Tamar and Claw, W. Dev., 5½ S. of Holsworthy; ac. 2,181; soil and subsoil clay. The church of the Holy Cross (restored) is E. Eng., and contains monuments to Sir Shilston Calmady (d. 1675), and to members of the Arscott family; the font is Norm. There is a Bible Christian chapel. The charities are small.

Tetford, pa. and large vil., E. Lincs., 6½ N.E. of Horncastle; ac. 2,210; soil chalk and clay, overlying sand and clay. The church of St. Mary is chiefly of the Dec. and Perp. periods, with some E. Eng. remains and modern work; the porch retains a stoup; on the south wall is a memorial surmounted by a breastplate and helmet of large size to Captain Edward Dymoke, the Hon. the King's Champion (d. 1760). In the churchyard stands part of the base of a cross. Here are Free and Wesleyan Methodist chapels. The National school has a small endowment. Limestone is obtained in large quantities and burnt for manure. In the pa. are traces of extensive encampments.

Tetney, pa. and vil., N.E. Lincs., 7 S.S.E. of Grimsby; ac. 4,828; soil and subsoil clay. The church of SS. Peter and Paul (restored 1860–61) is E. Eng., Dec., and Perp.; an inscription with the date 1363 on one of the pillars of the north arcade is commonly supposed to record the erection of the nave; the west end of the fabric, exclusive of the tower, is Norm. work, and contains a number of calcined stones, supposed to be part of an Anglo-Saxon church burnt down by the Danes during their incursions in 870, and in the south wall is a Norm. doorway of rude construction, now built up. In the church are memorials to Robert de Elkynton and Christiana his wife (d. 1322), and to William de Elkynton and Alice his wife (d. 1348); there is also a slab of the 14th cent., inscribed to Thomas Jekyll, then vicar. In the churchyard stand the base and part of the shaft of a cross. Here are Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist chapels, and a small Temperance Hall. T. pleasure fair, now of but little importance, is held on the first Monday after July 12. Here are several blow wells that send forth copious streams of pure water.

Tetney Lock, ha., pa. of Tetney (q.v.), N.E. Lincs., 2 E. of T. vil., and close to T. Haven, which is the outfall of the Louth navigation. There are coal wharfs and brick works, an inn and a coastguard station. A great part of the ha. consists of low but fertile marshes.

Tetsworth, pa. and vil., S.E. Oxon., 12 S.E. of Oxford; ac. 1,172; soil clay, overlying clayey subsoil. The church of St. Giles was rebuilt 1855 on the site of the old church. The earliest portions of it, including the south doorway, are Norm. There is a Congregational chapel.

Tettenhall, large pa. and vil., S. Staffs., about 2 W. of Wolverhampton; ac. 7,600; soil and subsoil various. The vil. is on the old road from London to Holyhead, at the foot and on the acclivities of a lofty and picturesque eminence. The church of St. Michael, anciently collegiate, was founded previously to the Norm. conquest. The present church is supposed to be part of the original foundation, but was enlarged in 1825 and restored in 1882. The chancel retains its piscina; the Wrottesley chancel, which is divided from the north aisle by an ancient oak screen, contains some fine monuments of the Wrottesley family, including an altar-tomb dated 1578, and another of earlier date; the ancient font (restored) is curiously sculptured, and has an oaken canopy. The Congregational church is in E. Dec. style. The T. Institute (1872) comprises reading- and smoking-rooms and a library. The Wolverhampton Waterworks are here. There are charities of the annual value of £105, a sum not exceeding £43 of which is appropriated for the purposes of education; the remainder is distributed in doles at various periods of the year. Before the Norm. accession this place was called "Theotenhall," and is named after the great English tribe of the Tattings. In 910 a severe battle was fought here between the Danes and Edward the Elder, and the ashes of the slain are supposed to rest under a barrow in Lowhill Field. T. is occupied chiefly by the gentry, merchants, and traders of Wolverhampton. Wrottesley Hall is the seat of Lord Wrottesley, Lord-Lieutenant, whose ancestors have possessed it since the reign of Henry II.; it is a handsome structure, erected in 1696, and stands on rising ground in a park of over 500 ac.; near it are some vestiges of what is conceived to have been a British to., destroyed during the conflicts of the English and Danes. T. Towers, Wergs Hall, and Woodthorne are also seats.

Tettenhall Wood, eccl. pa., pa. of Tettenhall (q.v.), S. Staffs., about 2 W. of Wolverhampton. Christ Church (1865) is in E. Eng. style.

Tetton, tp., pa. of Warmingham (q.v.), S. Chesh., 3½ N.W. by W. of Sandbach; ac. 997.

Tetworth, pa., S. Hunts., 8 S.E. of St. Neots; ac. 1,878; soil clay and sand. The church of St. Mary (restored 1865) is Norm., E. Eng., and Perp., and contains memorials to the Astell family and a tablet to Sir Humphrey Winche (d. 1624) In the churchyard is buried the Rev. John Berridge (d. 1793), the friend of Wesley and Whitefield. Here are brick and tile works. Silvester de Everton, Bishop of Carlisle (1246–53), and John, Lord Tiptoft, Earl of Worcester, were born here.

Teversall, pa. and vil. near the source of the Meden, W. Notts., extending into Derbys., 4 W. of Mansfield; ac. 2,820; soil sandy, overlying limestone. The church of St. Catharine is chiefly Norm. There are collieries in the neighbourhood. The Manor House is a seat.

Teversham, pa. and vil., E. Cambs., 3½ E. of Cambridge; ac. 1,174; soil white clay, overlying clay. The church of All Saints (restored 1863) is chiefly E. Eng.; the piscina and sedilia, richly carved, are Perp., and there is a rood screen of oak with Perp. tracery; in the north aisle is an altar-tomb (with mutilated recumbent alabaster effigies) to Sir Edward Steward, Kt., and his wife, and surrounding it a railing of hammered ironwork, probably Elizabethan. Here is a Baptist chapel. The proceeds of 11 ac. of land are divided annually between the school and the poor.

Teviot, river, Mid Roxbs., Sc., rises on the Dumfs. border, amidst the hills which screen Eskdale on the north, and flows N.E. to the Tweed at Kelso. Its source is about 15 E. of Moffat and 12 N. of Langholm. After traversing the pas. of Teviothead and Hawick, it skirts those of Hawick, Cavers, Bedrule, and Jedburgh on the S.E., and those of Witton, Minto, and Ancrum on the N.W., and then runs through the pas. of Crailing, Eckford, Roxburgh, and Kelso. Its principal tributaries are Borthwick Water and Ale Water on the right bank, and Allan, Rule, Jed, and Kale Waters on the left. The T. flows through some beautiful country, rich meadow-land alternating on its banks with sloping ground and steep cliffs. The principal places by which it passes are Hawick, Jedburgh, Roxburgh, and Kelso. At Jedburgh its banks—here rugged and abrupt—are pierced by some remarkable caverns. The situation of Kelso, at the confluence of the Teviot and the Tweed, is singularly picturesque. The T. abounds in excellent trout, and salmon are also abundant. Its length is about 37 miles.

Teviotdale, the valley of the river Teviot (q.v.), Mid Roxbs., Sc. The upper part of T. consists of a valley of no great width enclosed by bold green summits, which gradually diverge and finally disappear, giving place to a fertile tract of open and level country.

Teviothead, q.s. pa., W. Roxbs., Sc.; ac. 31,458. It is a mountainous district, and famous for its breed of Cheviot sheep. As its name implies, the source of the Teviot is in this pa., and the Allan Water, a feeder of it, runs through its eastern part. The pa. church is about 9 S.W. of Hawick station. A monument erected to Henry Scott Riddle, former minister of the pa. and author of "Scotland Yet," stands on the summit of one of the hills; and it was at the churchyard here that Johnnie Armstrong (mentioned in the "Tales of the Borders") and his band were hanged by James V.

Tew, Duns. [DUNS TEW.]

Tew, Great, pa. and very pretty vil., N. Oxon., 6 N.E. of Chipping Norton; ac. 2,918; soil and subsoil limestone and clay. The church of St. Michael, in a beautifully wooded enclosure, is of various periods; the south doorway is Late Norm. and the porch E. Eng. In the north aisle are two altar-tombs of the 13th cent., one of which has a full-length effigy of a knight in chain armour with aillettes, supposed to represent Robert de Vere; the other bears the recumbent effigy of a female with veil, wimple, and jacket under a long mantle. In the chancel are two brasses dated 1410, one dated 1513, and a fragment dated 1500. At the east end of each aisle is a piscina. Viscount Falkland, who fell fighting by the side of the King at the battle of Newbury (1643), was buried here.

Tewin, pa. and vil., E. Herts., 4½ W. of Hertford; ac. 2,630 and 19 water; soil gravel, overlying chalk. The church of St. Peter (restored 1864) is a building of brick, flint, and rubble. In the south porch, the entrance to which is built up, is a marble monument about 15 ft. high to General Joseph Sabine, Governor of Gibraltar, who died there in 1739. On the floor of the aisle is an ancient slab with a defaced inscription in Lombardic capitals to Walter de Louthe; here also is the brass with effigy of a man in civil robes and an inscription to Thomas Pygott, gent. (d. 1610); there are also memorials to former rectors and others. In the churchyard, a little east of the chancel, is a plain altar-tomb to Lady Ann Grimston, wife of Sir Samuel Grimston, Bart., of Gorhambury (d. 1710); issuing from beneath the tomb are seven ash-trees growing from one root, and three sycamores similarly connected; these have lifted up the solid stonework of the tomb, and the iron railings enclosing it are in some places so completely embedded in the wood that it is impossible to sever them; a fence has been erected around it by subscription for the purpose of protecting the tomb, which is visited every year by thousands of persons. The charities are considerable. Queen Hoo Hall, now a farmhouse, stands on rising ground near the boundary between this and the neighbouring pa. of Bramfield; it contains some interesting relics of Elizabethan date, including a painting in fresco on the walls of one of the upper rooms; it once belonged to the Boteler, who are buried at T., and was used as a hunting lodge by Queen Elizabeth. Marden Hill and T. Water are seats.

Tewkesbury, pa., mun. bor., U. and mkt. to., and head of petty sess. div. and Co. Co. dis., N. Glouc., on the Worcs. border, 10 N. of Gloucester; ac. of pa. and bor. 2,226. The to. is surrounded by a wide and level extent of pasture and arable land, intersected by four rivers, which almost insulate the to.; the most considerable of these are the Severn and the Avon; the former forms the boundary of the pa. for several miles. T. returned two Members to Parliament, nominally from 1609–13, but no representatives are recorded until the Parliament 18 Jas. I. (1620–21). In 1867 the bor. was deprived of one of its Members, and in 1885 the representation was merged in that of the co. The first church at T. appears to have been built in the latter part of the 7th cent. by a missionary monk named Theoc, from whom the place derived the name of "Theocesbury," now softened into its modern form of Tewkesbury. The abbey was founded in the 12th cent. When surrendered in 1539 there were thirty-eight monks, and the revenues amounted to about £40,000 of our money. Most of the conventual buildings were destroyed, but the church was purchased by the parishioners. John Wiche, or Wakeman, the last abbot, retired on a pension, and was consecrated the first Bishop of Gloucester in 1541. The Abbey Church of St. Mary (restored 1874–79) consists of a nave of eight bays, with aisles and north porch; north transept, with chapels on the east and north-east; south transept, with eastern apsidal chapel; choir or presbytery of two bays, with three others forming the eastern apse; an ambulatory, surrounded by five polygonal chapels; and a massive central tower, containing eight bells. The nave has on either side seven massive circular pillars supporting circular arches, above which rises a plain and low triforium, with two double-arched openings in each bay, and over this a low clerestory, pierced with small three-light windows; much of the upper portion is covered by the groined vaulting of the 14th cent.—a work of elaborate character, enriched at the intersections of the ribs with a most interesting series of carved bosses, which have been recoloured and gilt. The present Perp. west window dates only from 1686, but is said to have been a copy of an earlier one destroyed by a storm in 1661. The church retains a quantity of ancient stained glass, displaying figures of saints and prophets and eight of the former lords of T., including Robert FitzHamon, the founder. The whole presbytery is surrounded by a series of elaborate tombs, occupying the spaces between the piers. At the entrance of the chapel of St. Edmund is the cenotaph said to be that of Abbot Wakeman; a broad slab supports a recumbent cadaver, and above this rise foliated arches. In the ambulatory, immediately behind the altar screen, is the vault in which rest the remains of George, Duke of Clarence, murdered in the Tower (Feb. 18, 1477), and Isabel (Nevill) his wife (d. Dec. 12, 1476), and interred here (Jan. 4, 1477). The west front consists of a lofty and deeply recessed Norm. arch of seven orders, the upper portion of which is completely filled up by the west window, below which is the western entrance, a simple Pointed arch. In the centre of the floor, immediately under the tower, is an ornamental brass inscribed to Edward, Prince of Wales, son of Henry VI., murdered after the battle of T. (1471), and said to have been interred in this spot, but search made during the restoration showed no trace of a grave. Adjoining the west front on the south-west is "the Abbey House," formerly the misericord and infirmary of the monastery, and now the residence of the vicar; in its north front is an oriel window, bearing a defaced inscription in Lombardic characters, the arms of the abbey and FitzHamon, and the crowned initials H.R. West of this stands the Gatehouse (1389–1420), a square embattled structure, with fine arches and grotesque figures; it was partly restored in 1849. Trinity Church is in Perp. style; the Catholic chapel is dedicated to St. Joseph; and there are places of worship for various Nonconformist bodies. The Grammar School was founded in 1576. The Town Hall is a late 18th-cent. building. The Corn Exchange, erected by a company, has been acquired by the Corporation. Other public buildings are the Philharmonic Hall, the Tolsey Hall, and the Rural Hospital. The principal market is on Wednesdays, for corn and cattle; but there is also a market for meat, butter, and vegetables, on Saturday. At T. is a large collar and front factory. There are several almshouses. The to. is rich in ancient houses, and contains fine examples of half-timbered work, especially in the High Street. Near the abbey church was fought (May 4, 1471) the memorable battle between the rival houses of York and Lancaster, in which the spirited Queen Margaret of Anjou was so signally defeated, and her son, Prince Edward, ruthlessly slain; a few days after the battle a number of men of rank belonging to Queen Margaret's army, who had taken sanctuary in the abbey, were dragged out and beheaded in the market-place. The remains of an ancient wall have been discovered at various points in the line of the rail near here, and at other places in the vicinity. Some singularly perfect remains of a Roman road are also to be found at the Mythe and near the banks of the Severn, in the direction of Ripple. Mineral waters, possessing the same qualities as some of the springs at Cheltenham, are found in the immediate neighbourhood of T. T. Park, formerly the property of the Earls of Gloucester, is a seat on an eminence about 1 mile from the to.; from the lawn, Gloucester Cathedral, Christ Church, Cheltenham, and Great Malvern can be distinctly seen. On the estate is "the Bloody Meadow," in which, after the disaster at T., some of the fugitive Lancastrians were overtaken and cut to pieces.

Tewkesbury Division, one of the five parl. divs. of Glouc. It lies in the north of the co., and returns one member.

Tew, Little, pa. and vil., N. Oxon., 6½ N. of Charlbury; ac. 1,502. The vil. is built upon a small patch of red rock, but the soil and subsoil of the pa. are stonebrash and clay. The church of St. John the Evangelist is a singular specimen of E. Eng. style. There is a Baptist chapel. There are three almshouses. The poor's land yields about £20 annually. L. T. Grange is a seat.

Tey, Great, pa. and vil., E. Essex, 7 W. of Colchester; ac. 2,623; soil rich loam, overlying loam and clay. The church of St. Barnabas is Norm. The charities amount to about £30 a year. A pleasure fair is held on Trinity Monday and Tuesday.

Tey, Little, pa., E. Essex, close to the ancient Roman road from Colchester (Camalodunum) to St. Albans (Verulamium), 7 W. of Colchester; ac. 491; soil loam and clay, overlying clay. The church of St. James is a small building of stone, consisting of chancel and nave and a small wooden tower at the west end containing one bell; the south door is Norm. The interest of £200 is annually distributed in coals to the poor.

Here are extensive Roman and Portland cement works; brick-making is also carried on extensively. T. was given to Christ Church, Canterbury, by Kenulf, King of Mercia (794–819), and the Archbishops of Canterbury had a palace here. King Henry III. granted to the to. a market and a fair. Richard Harris, fruiterer to Henry VIII., planted 105 ac. of rich land here with cherries, pippins, and golden rennets, which he had obtained from beyond the sea; hence all the cherry gardens and orchards in Kent have been stocked with the Flemish cherry. On account of the marshes T. was formerly reputed to be unhealthy, but at present the health of the district is very satisfactory, this improvement being accounted for by the drainage of the marshes. T. Court Lodge and Upper Newlands are seats.

Thakeham, pa., vil., and head of a U., Mid Sussex, 11 N. of Worthing; ac. 2,937; soil various, overlying rock and clay. The church of St. Mary (restored 1893) is E. Eng. with Perp. insertions. At the north-west corner of the pa. is a cottage called "Blue Idol," belonging to the Society of Friends and used by them for religious purposes. William Penn, founder of Pennsylvania, used to attend the services here while living in the adjoining pa. of Warminghurst.

Thame (1), pa., U. and mkt. to., and head of Co. Co. dis., S. Oxon., on the borders of Bucks., 10 S.W. of Aylesbury; ac. 5,316. The to., on the south bank of the Thame, consists principally of one broad and spacious street of considerable length, with a market-place nearly in the centre. The church of St. Mary the Virgin (restored 1889–90) is chiefly E. Eng.; the south porch, a fine example, is groined, and over the doorway is a niche, in which was formerly an image of the Virgin Mary. The chancel has a good Dec. east window; the nave is divided from the aisles by arcades of five arches, of the Dec. period. The transepts and tower are Perp.; the font, enriched with foliage, is E. Eng. The most striking monument in the church is that to John Lord Williams of T., Treasurer of Augmentations and Chamberlain to King Philip (d. 1559), and his first wife; this is a massive altar-tomb of marble, in the centre of the chancel, and surrounded with an iron railing, upon which rest the effigies of the deceased, attired in the costume of the reign of Elizabeth; their heads repose on cushions, the feet of the male figure resting upon a greyhound, and those of his wife upon a unicorn; the sides of the tomb are embellished with the armorial achievements of this family. On the south side of the chancel, under a canopy of Purbeck marble, is an altar-tomb with shields of arms, and above it at the back a kneeling effigy in brass, with inscription to Sir John Clerke, of North Weston, Knight, who took prisoner Louis of Orleans, Duke of Longueville, at the siege of Terouanne (August 16, 1513), and died in 1539; above this, with a shield of arms, is a mural tablet to Edward, son of Sir John and Philadelphia Clerke (1677), and adjoining is a similar monument to Philadelphia (Carr), wife of Sir John Clerke, Knight and Bart. (1698); there is also a large stone, with brass shield of arms and long Latin inscription, to Sir John Clerke himself (1667), and other memorials to Richard Clerke (1658) and to Edward Clerke (1677). The church still retains a number of other fine brasses with effigies, of which the most important are those of the Quatremayns, now on altar-tombs in the south transept; there are others to Geoffrey Dormer (1502), his wife Margery and children; Cristofre Bridgman (1503), wife Maud and children; Walter Pratt (1508), wife Isabel and children; John Galey, gent. (1543), and wife Joan; Edward Harris, M.A. (1597); and a civilian and his wife (1500). Other brasses once here are recorded to John Benet (1460) and a civilian of the 16th cent. On the outside of one of the lancet windows in the chancel is a carving in stone of the arms of Adrian Barwis, prebendary of T. in 1480. There are also Congregational, Baptist, Wesleyan, and Primitive Methodist chapels. The Grammar School was founded in 1558. Many eminent men have been educated here. The to. and school claim the distinction of having been the place of birth and education of John Hampden, but the former is not authenticated, though there is a local tradition that he died here at a house till lately the "Greyhound" Inn, whither he was brought mortally wounded from the engagement at Chalgrove Field (June 18, 1643), and was buried at Great Hampden, Bucks. John Wilkes, M.P., Lord Mayor of London in 1774, was also educated in this school. The town hall stands on the site of the old market hall, pulled down in 1887; it contains a council chamber, a reading-room, and a library and bagatelle room. The weekly market is held on Tuesday; there are good supplies of cattle and corn; for the latter it is a sample, not a pitched, market. Annual fairs are held on Easter Tuesday, for horses, cattle, and pigs; a Christmas fat cattle market on the first Tuesday after Dec. 6; and a statute fair on Oct. 11, which is continued on the two following Tuesdays, for hiring servants. The employment of the population is purely agricultural, and the land partakes in some degree of the richness and fertility of the celebrated Vale of Aylesbury, which it adjoins on its eastern confines. There are charities of about £120 a year for distribution in money and kind, of £20 for apprenticing, and of £26 for church purposes. Five decayed tradespeople divide £33 yearly between them—an allowance in lieu of almshouses. T. is supposed to be a place of Roman origin, for Roman coins have been found here, and held a position of some importance at the beginning of the 10th cent.; it suffered severely from the incursions of the Danes at the commencement of the 11th cent. During the Civil War several skirmishes took place here between the Royal and Parliamentary forces, which have been spiritedly detailed by Anthony à Wood, then a student in the to. Adjacent to the to. is a piece of ground, 8½ ac. in extent, which is used as a recreation ground. The mansion of T. Park is beautifully situated in a deer park of 418 ac., and near it is an ancient chapel; it occupies the site of a Cistercian monastery translated hither from Otmoor in 1138 by Alexander, Bishop of Lincoln (1223–48). Near the mansion are some remains of the monastic buildings.

Thame (2), river, W. Bucks. and S.E. Oxon., is formed by the confluence of several streams in the neighbourhood of Aylesbury, and flows W.S.W. to Thame, passing the vils. of Nether Winchendon and Chearsley. From Thame to Waterperry it flows in a W. direction, dividing the cos. of Bucks. and Oxon. From this point it winds S.S.W. to the Thames at Dorchester, passing the vils. of Stadhampton and Newington on the left, and those of Cuddesdon, Chiselhampton, and Drayton on the right. The length of the river is 30 miles.

Thames, the principal river in England, rises close to the south border of Gloucs., 3 W.S.W. of Cirencester, and, running S.E., immediately enters Wilts. Forming a curve at Ashton Keynes, it flows E. by N. partly through Wilts. and partly along the borders of Wilts. and Oxon. past Cricklade to Lechlade. The Churn, which joins it at Cricklade, and the Coln and Leach which flow in at Lechlade —all rising, like the main stream, on the slopes of the Cotswolds—are sometimes reckoned amongst its head waters. At Lechlade it is also joined by the Cole, a river running N. between Wilts. and Berks. In its progress beyond Lechlade, along the north boundary of Berks., the T. divides that co. from Oxon. as far as Henley, and afterwards from Bucks. It follows a very irregular course, continuing E. by N. as far as Northmoor, where it makes a great curve N.E., S. by E., and W., past Ensham and Oxford to Abingdon. Winding E.S.E. from Abingdon past Dorchester to Bensington, it there turns S. and runs by Wallingford to Goring. Here it makes another and larger curve, running E.S.E. past Pangbourne to Reading, N.E. from Reading to Shiplake, and N. by W. from Shiplake to Henley. The river then flows E. by N. past Great Marlow to Cookham, and thence S. by E. and S.S.E. past Maidenhead to Eton and Windsor. The Ock joins the T. at Abingdon, the Kennet at Reading, and the Loddon opposite Shiplake, the principal tributaries on the other bank being the Windrush, the Evenlode, the Cherwell, and the Tame, which flow in at Standlake, Ensham, Oxford, and Dorchester respectively. Just before reaching Egham the T. becomes the north boundary of Surrey, separating that co. from Bucks. for a few miles and then running between Surrey and Middlesex. Its course is S.E. from Windsor past Egham, Staines, and Chertsey to Weybridge, thence E. by N. past Walton and West and East Moulsey to Kingston, above which it curves round Hampton Park; from Kingston it flows N. with many windings past Teddington, Twickenham, and Isleworth to Brentford, where it finally assumes that eastward direction which it maintains throughout the remainder of its journey. The bends towards the north-east and south-east between Brentford and Woolwich are, however, very numerous. The streams which flow through Surrey to the T. are the Wey, the Mole, the Hogg's Mill, the Brent, and the Wandle, joining the main river at Weybridge, Moulsey, Kingston, Brentford, and Wandsworth. The Coln runs from the north, forming the boundary between Bucks. and Middx. The eastward course of the T. between Kent and Essex is considerably more regular than that between Surrey and Middx. It is here joined on the south by the Darent, opposite Purfleet, and the Medway at Sheerness, the principal streams which flow from Essex being the Lea and Roding, both of which join it a short distance below the metropolis. The Nore (q.v.) is generally regarded as occupying the mouth of the river. Its width, which at this point is 5½ miles, diminishes to 800 yds. at Gravesend, 490 yds. at Woolwich, and 266 yds. at London Bridge. Its total length, allowance being made for its numerous windings, is estimated at 250 miles. The fame of the T. is due to the commercial importance of the lower part of the river, between London Bridge and Tilbury and Gravesend. The dock accommodation is very extensive, and the river is frequented by vessels from all parts of the globe. The largest ocean steamers can ascend to Tilbury Docks, ships of 800 tons to St. Katherine's Docks, and barges to Lechlade. Further up, the river is connected by numerous canals with all parts of the country, the Regent's and Paddington Canals, the Grand Junction Canal, the Kennet and Avon Canal, and the Thames and Severn Canal being among the more important. The scenery of the T. is picturesque and varied, broad rich meadows skirting its banks above Oxford, whilst below that town are the beautifully wooded slopes of Goring, Pangbourne, and Cliefden.

Thames and Medway Canal, or Gravesend and Rochester Canal, between Gravesend and Frindsbury, opposite Rochester, N. Kent; was constructed 1804–24. It was a level canal, 7 miles in length, with two locks. The scheme proving unsuccessful, the canal passed into the hands of the North Kent Railway Company, and was partly adapted to railway traffic.

Thames and Severn Canal, Mid Gloucs. and N.E. Wilts., runs from the Stroudwater Canal at Stroud to the Thames at Lechlade, connecting the navigation of the Severn and the Thames. The canal passes by Chalford, Sapperton (where there is a long tunnel), Siddington, and Latton, near Cricklade, where it is joined by the N. Wilts. Canal. The canal was constructed 1783–92; it is 30 miles long and 42 ft. broad, and has many locks. It rises 243 ft. between the Stroudwater Canal and Sapperton, and falls 134 ft. between Sapperton and the head of the Thames.

Norm. period, consists of a massive basin with rude carving on its sides, and is placed on a modern pedestal. All the monuments have been strictly preserved; the brasses, which formerly were on the floor, are now placed on the walls, and include several effigial brasses of the 16th cent.; there is also a recessed monument with kneeling figures in brass to Erasmus Forde, treasurer to Edward VI. (d. 1553), his wife and seventeen children. Here is a Congregational chapel. Charities producing £60 yearly are distributed in bread and clothing. Here are almshouses for twelve persons, six of which were founded in 1720 for six married couples, each of whom receives 25s. quarterly. The Village Hall was erected in 1887. A handsome drinking-fountain was presented to the vil. in 1879. In the vil. are electrical and mechanical engineering works, a bronze foundry, and a cocoa factory. On the south bank of the Thames, opposite Hampton Court Park, in a secluded and delightful nook of the river, is the Swan Inn, which is much frequented by anglers.

The Victoria Embankment, from Waterloo Bridge.

Thames Embankments, a series of ornamental roadways on the banks of the Thames, in the west part of London, E. Middx. The project of embanking the Thames, originally proposed by Sir Christopher Wren, was eventually undertaken in 1862. The Victoria Embankment, from Blackfriars Bridge to Westminster Bridge, on the north or Middx. side, is upwards of a mile long, the breadth of the roadway being 100 ft., and that of the river wall (constructed of solid granite) 8 ft. The Albert Embankment, extending along the south side of the river from Westminster Bridge to Vauxhall, is about 4,300 ft. in length, with a roadway 60 ft. broad. The Chelsea Embankment extends from the Grosvenor railway bridge to Battersea Bridge. These embankments were completed in 1870, 1869, and 1874 respectively.

Thames Tunnel, a tunnel beneath the Thames, in E. London, E. Middx., leading from Wapping to Rotherhithe. It was constructed by Sir Mark Isambard Brunel in 1835–43, and is 1,300 ft. long and 35 ft. broad. The summit of the tunnel is 16 ft. below the bed of the Thames and 75 ft. beneath low-water mark. It consists of two arched passages 16 ft. in height, between which runs a brick wall. The tunnel was intended for the use of foot-passengers, but since 1865 it has served to conduct a line of rail belonging to the East London Railway Company.

Thanet Division. [Isle of Thanet Division.]

Thanet, Isle of, at the extreme north-east of Kent, is formed by the course of the Stour from the north coast to the east, is 10 miles in length from east to west, and about 4 miles from north to south; it is intersected by the London, Chatham and Dover and the South-Eastern Railways, and contains the popular bathing towns of Margate and Ramsgate, and the lesser watering-places of Broadstairs and Westgate; and the pas. of Acol, Birchington, Minster, Monkton, St. Lawrence, St. Peter, St. Nicholas-at-Wade, Sarre, and Stonar. The island forms a division for Parliamentary purposes. The land rises along the coast into cliffs 50 to 100 ft. high, on one of which, the North Foreland, the extreme eastern point, is a lighthouse; the soil on this part is comparatively shallow, resting on the chalk. The southern and western parts are marshy along the banks of the Stour, with rich alluvial soil, on which corn, fruit, and vegetables are grown. The area is 26,021 ac.

The church of St. Mary the Virgin (restored 1886) is Dec.; in the chancel is a piscina; there are monuments and tablets to John Woolmer, Esq. (d. 1598), and Alice, his wife, and other members of the family; to the Woode family, and to General Sir R. J. Harvey (d. 1860). Thomas Clabburn's charity of £4 15s. yearly is for fuel, and the fuel allotment produces £18 yearly; there is also a sum of £2 10s. derived from 2 ac. of land called "Nellands' Pightle," which is for bread; there are some other small charities. In a field on a farm in this pa. is a remarkable oak tree, 8 yds. in circumference, supposed to be over 500 years old.

Thatcham, pa., tp., and vil., S. Berks., about 3 E. of Newbury; ac. of pa. 11,860, of tp. 7,214, and 79 water, with about 500 ac. of common; soil and subsoil gravel and clay. The pa. is intersected by the Kennet and the Kennet and Avon Canal. The church of St. Mary (restored 1852) is a very fine structure of various periods; adjoining the chancel is the Fuller chapel, containing a monument of the Fuller family, of Chamber House (1620), as well as memorials to the Croft family; there is also an altar-tomb to Sir William Danvers, one of the judges of the Common Pleas (d. 1504); and floor stones of the Tull family, to whom the chantry now belongs. There is a fine Norm. doorway in the porch; the chancel arch is also in Norm. style; the tower has a Dec. doorway and windows of the same period. Here are Congregational and Wesleyan chapels. There are several endowed charities, amongst which is Lady Winchcomb's Blue Coat School for 40 boys, who are clothed and taught reading and writing, the parents also receiving assistance towards their apprenticeship; the remaining charities include a sum of £71 yearly for the repair of houses left for charity, the surplus goes towards the church repairs; £97 for the support of almshouses; £6 15s. for distribution in bread, and £6 15s. to three of the oldest men in the vil. T. had anciently a market, confirmed to the Abbey of Reading by Henry II., but it has long since been discontinued. Crookham Heath, in the southern part of the pa., was the site of a camp for the cavalry manœuvres of 1890. Crookham House, a modern stone building, and Little Park House, a handsome red-brick building, are seats.

The old Inn of Chancery—partly demolished during the construction of Holborn Viaduct—was bought by Lincoln's Inn in 1550, and sold to a private owner in 1771. The name is taken from a certain John Thavie, belonging to the Armourers' Company, who owned property here in the time of Edward III.

Thaxted, pa. and ancient to., N. Essex, situated near the source of the Chelmer, 7 N. of Dunmow, on the road to Saffron Walden; ac. 6,240 and 12 water; soil heavy, overlying gravel and clay. The to. was formerly a bor., incorporated by charter from Philip and Mary, but the corporation was extinguished in 1687. The church of St. Mary the Virgin, St. John the Baptist, and St. Lawrence is Late Perp., the whole fabric being embattled and supported by strong buttresses, terminating in canopied niches; the pillars and arches seem to belong to an earlier period. The chancel, with its aisles, was built by Edward IV. in or about 1465. The font has an enriched spire-like cover; and portions of the carved choir stalls may be seen in the screen now enclosing the tower arch. There are also some fragments of the fine stained glass with which the windows were once filled. There is the figure in brass of a priest in vestments (c. 1450). On the church are several crosses, and on the east wall and on the north porch are carvings of the Crucifixion. One of the buttresses on the south side, towards the east, exhibits traces of an entrance through it, leading down to a crypt under the chancel; this was opened about 1865, but nothing was discovered. There are Congregational and Baptist chapels, and a meeting-house for Friends. Samuel Purchas, the author of "Purchas: his Pilgrimage," and "Purchas: his Pilgrimmes," was born here in 1577. The Guildhall, built in the reign of James I., is now used for pa. purposes—the old council chamber as a reading-room and the upper chamber for pa. meetings; there is also a lock-up in the same building, used by the county police. The total amount of charities for various purposes was at one time about £1,000 yearly, but has materially decreased owing to the depressed state of agriculture, and the gross value is now about £600. A pleasure fair is held on the Monday before Whit-Monday, and another for cattle on Aug. 10. Herham Hall, about 2 S.W., is a fine castellated edifice partly covered with ivy; this was the residence of Princess Elizabeth during part of the reign of Queen Mary, and she subsequently visited it when Queen in 1571.

The Grand Union Canal passes through the pa. The church of All Saints (restored 1858) is Norm. and E. Eng., and has some fine monuments and mural tablets to the Bathurst family. The chancel retains a piscina and sedilia. In the Bathurst Chapel is a monument of the time of James I., with recumbent male and female effigies, but without inscription. Here also is a marble monument to George Bathurst, Esq. (d. 1656), his wife Elizabeth (Villiers) (d. 1650), and seventeen children; there are demi-effigies of both in Puritan garb, and each holding a book; underneath are kneeling figures of twelve sons, four daughters, and an infant. Here is a Congregational chapel. The Institute contains reading- and recreation-rooms and a library. There is a charity of £5 annually for the apprenticing of poor children, and other charities (amounting to £4 10s.) given away on St. Thomas's Day.

Theddlethorpe All Saints, pa. and vil. near the seashore, E. Lincs., 10 E. of Louth; ac. 1,670; soil strong loam, overlying clay. The church of All Saints (restored) is principally Perp. The chancel is divided from the nave by a very elaborately worked screen divided into seven compartments, the central division being wider than the others and retaining its original gates; the east end of each aisle is also enclosed with screen-work of the late 15th cent. Two altar slabs still remain, and on the north side the approach to the rood-loft. Much of the old seating exists in different parts of the church, and some portions of the timbered roofs exhibit very good carved work. In the south chapel is a slab with the brass effigy of a knight, wearing the then almost disused camail depending from the helmet over the shoulders, and remarkable as being the latest known brass exhibiting this piece of defensive armour; the slab also bears two shields, and is inscribed to Robert Hayton (1424); there is also a brass inscription on another slab to Roger de Hagnaby, and a third bearing a shield of the Angevine family. The church land comprises about 3½ ac. for the repairs of the fabric. Here is a Wesleyan chapel. The charities for the poor amount to £3 yearly.

Theddlethorpe St. Helen, coast pa. and vil., E. Lincs., 11 E. of Louth; ac. 1,866 and 640 water; soil strong clay, overlying clay. The church of St. Helen (rebuilt 1866) is in E. Eng. style. Here is a Primitive Methodist chapel. The charities amount to £3 6s. yearly.

Banbury; ac. 1,028; soil various. The church of St. Mary (restored) is an ancient building of stone; the chancel retains a piscina; in the north aisle is a fine recumbent effigy of stone, apparently of the 16th cent., but without inscription, and a stained window of ancient date, with figures of two saints. The charities amount to about £15 a year. T. House, in extensive grounds, is a seat.

Theobalds Park, pa. of and about 2 S.W. from Cheshunt (q.v.), E. Herts., seat of Sir Henry Bruce Meux, Bart.; the mansion, situated on rising ground in a park of 200 ac., was erected in the 18th cent.; in plan it somewhat resembles St. James's Palace, but has been considerably enlarged and improved. Temple Bar, removed from Fleet Street, London, in Jan. 1878, was re-erected in 1888 at one of the entrances to T. P. The original house, which is supposed to have stood on a slight eminence of no great extent, but still visible, was rebuilt by Sir William Cecil, Knight, afterwards Baron Burghley, and Lord High Treasurer, who purchased the estate in 1560–61, and here in 1564 was visited by Queen Elizabeth; this house, surrounded by beautiful gardens and a wide moat filled with water, was finished in 1571, and subsequently became the property of James I., who gave in exchange for it, to Sir Robert Cecil, Knight, afterwards first Earl of Salisbury, the more valuable mansion of Hatfield (q.v.), and it continued to be a royal palace until the outbreak of the Civil War; here James I. died March 27, 1625; and from Theobalds Charles I. set out in 1642 to raise his standard at Nottingham. The palace as then existing was an embattled structure of considerable extent, and consisted of two principal quadrangles, besides several courts; on the south side of the mansion was a large open cloister, enriched with paintings, inscriptions and pedigrees, which remained until 1765, although the greater part of the palace was pulled down in 1650; the site of the last remaining portion of the palace is now occupied by the houses forming T. Square in the vil. of Cheshunt, and on portions of the gardens still possessing some fine cedars and other trees and evergreen shrubs several large mansions have been erected.

Theobald Street, ha., pa. of and 3 N.W. from Aldenham (q.v.), Mid Herts.

Therfield, pa. and vil. on the chalk range, N. Herts., 3 S.W. of Royston; ac. 4,833; soil mixed, overlying chalk and clay. The church of St. Mary the Virgin, on the site of the former church, is in Dec. style; there are six bells, but the tower has not yet been built, and the only bell in use hangs on a tree in an adjoining field. Here is a Congregational chapel, with a minister's residence. The charities amount to about £70 a year.

Thet, river, S. Norf., is formed by the union of several headstreams at East Harling, and flows W. by S. past West Harling, Bridgham, Brettenham, and Kilverston to the Little Ouse, which it joins at Thetford, on the Suff. border. The length of the stream from its furthest source to Thetford is 16 miles.

Thetford (1), mun. bor., mkt. to. (S.), chiefly in S.W. Norf., but a small part of the bor. lies in Suff.; the cos. are divided by the Little Ouse, which is here joined by the Thet; over the two is a cast-iron bridge. The to. lies 7 E.S.E. of Brandon; from 1075 to 1094 it was the head of the see of the East Angles, and formerly had twenty churches. The bor. now consists of three pas.—St. Cuthbert, St. Mary, and St. Peter, with areas of 306, 4,622, and 2,370 ac. St. Cuthbert's Church was almost entirely rebuilt in 1852 in Perp.; the chancel is separated from the nave by a beautiful oak screen. The church of St. Mary (restored 1866), situated on the Suff. side of the river, is a large structure of flint with stone dressings of the Norm. and Perp. periods; the tomb of Sir Richard Fulmerstone, Knight, anciently a benefactor to the to. and founder of the Grammar School and of the precentorship in this church, was some years since removed, and the parts containing the inscription were placed against the south wall of the nave; there is a Norm. font. St. Peter's, White Hart Street, is a Dec. building of cut flint, whence it was formerly called the "Black Church"; the embattled western tower was rebuilt in 1789. T. has also a Catholic church, Baptist, Congregational, Primitive Methodist, and Wesleyan chapels, and a Friends' meeting-house. The Grammar School was founded in 1556; the buildings occupy the site of Trinity Church, once the Cathedral, some arches of which remain. A new scheme was formulated by the Commissioners in 1879. The Guildhall, where the quarter sessions for the bor. are held, is situated in the centre of the to., overlooking the market-place. The Mechanics' Institution (1887) has a library; the Odd Fellows' Hall dates from 1891. The to. contains a brewery, an extensive tannery and fellmongery, brick and lime kilns, water and steam mills (flour), several maltings, bone-crushing, manure and chemical works, an extensive iron foundry and agricultural-implement manufactory, and steam-engine works, employing about 320 hands, and which is situated on the site of old St. Nicholas Church; also a manufactory of papier-mâché goods. At the eastern part of the to. are a few tenements occupied by the poor, on the site of Harbord Hospital, so-called from their having been endowed by Sir Charles Harbord for 99 years, which time expired many years ago; and there is a hospital for the aged poor in Bury Road. In St. Mary's pa. are also four almshouses, built chiefly of flint, with antique brick chimneys, which, as well as the Grammar School, bear the date 1610, and the name of their founder, Sir Richard Fulmerstone, Knight. At the north-west part of the to. are four well-built almshouses (1885) for the aged poor of T. The King's House, in King Street, a mansion of flint and brick, was formerly the residence of Elizabeth and James I. In the pa. of St. Mary, on the Suff. side of the river, are the remains of the monastery of the Holy Sepulchre and the Sacred Cross, founded in 1139 by William de Warrenne, Earl of Warrenne and Surrey, for canons of the Holy Cross. The porter's gate remains, as also a part of the church, now converted into a barn; another portion of the house, now a residence, is called the "Canons." Of the other religious houses formerly existing here may be mentioned the Cluniac priory of SS. Mary and Andrew, founded in 1104 by Roger Bigod; by a rule of this order 18 poor persons were fed every day at the priory; the Perp. gate-house remains; the Benedictine convent of SS.

George and Gregory, founded in 1176 by the Abbot of Bury, for nuns from Ling; the convent of SS. Mary and John, for Augustinian canons, founded by Geoffrey de Favanhes in the time of William I.; the College of SS. Mary and Bartholomew, Bailey End, founded by Gilbert de Pyckenham in the time of Edward I. T. was a Roman station. At the eastern extremity of the to. is Castle Hill, a mound upwards of 1,000 ft. in circumference at the base, supposed to be an ancient fortification of Roman or Saxon origin; its height is 100 ft., and the top, overlooking an immense tract of country, is crowned by five stately trees. The surrounding country contains several "barrows."

Thetford (2), tp., pa. of and 3 N.E. from Stretham (q.v.), N. Cambs.; ac. 1,035. The chapel of St. George is a 14th-cent. building. There is a charity of £45 a year for fuel.

Theydon Bois, pa. and vil. on the Roding, S.W. Essex, 2 S. of Epping; ac. 2,176; soil mixed, overlying clay. The church of St. Mary, which occupies the site of a former building, was built 1851 in E. Eng. style; it contains a curious painting of the Royal Arms, temp. James I. The Baptists have a chapel. There are four almshouses (founded 1753), and a charity of about £30 yearly. John Strype was vicar here in 1669, and John Elwes, the miser, lived here for some time.

Theydon Garnon, pa. and vil., S.W. Essex, 6 S.W. of Ongar; ac. 3,168; soil variable, overlying clay. The church of All Saints (restored 1892) is a rubble and brick building, and has a tower, erected in 1552, by Sir John Crosby; among the monuments are those to Sir John Archer (d. 1681), Anne Fitzwilliam (d. 1602), Mary Archer (d. 1776), Sir Charles Dun, William Eyre Archer, James Meggs, vicar, Elizabeth Waldegrave (1556), and a brass to William Kyrkeby (d. 1458). There are numerous charities, including the Fitzwilliam almshouses, founded in 1602. The Epping Union workhouse is here. Gaynes Park, a Tudor mansion, and Coopersale House, another Tudor building, are seats.

Theydon Mount, pa. and vil. on the Roding, S.W. Essex, 7 S.W. of Ongar; ac. 1,500; soil mixed, overlying clay. The church of St. Michael, destroyed by lightning in the 17th cent., was rebuilt in Norm. style, and contains monuments to Sir Thomas Smijth (d. 1577) and Colonel Sir William Smijth (d. 1626). Hill Hall, an Elizabethan mansion, is a seat.

Thirsk, pa., tp., mkt. and U. to., and head of Co. Co. dis., N.R. Yorks., 11 N.E. of Ripon; ac. of pa. 8,548, of tp. 3,100. There are two stone bridges over the Cod beck, a feeder of the Swale, which connect the Old with the New Town. T., though never incorporated, was a bor. by prescription; the Reform Act of 1832 reduced the representation to a single member, and in 1885 the bor. was absorbed in the T. and Malton parl. div. The church of St. Mary the Virgin (restored 1877) is a large and handsome embattled Perp. structure; the interior has superb open roofs of Irish oak, enriched with carved bosses and cusped ornament at the intersections. At the east end of the north aisle is a screen, open above and panelled below, enclosing one bay, which forms a chapel and retains a piscina; the font retains its original Perp. cover, 21 ft. in height. On the north of the chancel is a panelled doorway with square padlock, and on the south side three sedilia and a piscina; the communion table, of carved oak, is said to have belonged to Byland Abbey; on either side of it is a trefoiled niche; between the clerestory windows are wall paintings of large figures. Above the porch is a parvise in which a hermit named Parkinson resided about the year 1513. There is a good glebe house close to the church. The Catholic church of All Saints has a priest's residence attached. There are Congregational, Wesleyan, and Primitive Methodist chapels; also a Friends' meeting-house. T. has several parochial charities. The market day is on Monday, and the market is regarded as one of the best in the Riding. The fairs are—Shrove Monday and April 4 and 5, for horses, horned cattle, sheep, and leather; Easter and Whit-Monday are pleasure fairs; August 4 and 5 and Oct. 28 and 29 for sheep and horned cattle; and on the first Tuesday after Dec. 1 for horned cattle and leather. Cattle sales are held on alternate Mondays. The Savings' Bank and Assembly Rooms is a large and handsome building erected in 1849. The Institute, in Westgate, has a library. T., being situated in the midst of a luxuriant and fertile district in the Vale of Mowbray, produces large quantities of timber, corn, wool, bark, and other agricultural produce. Extensive agricultural engineering works afford employment to a large number of hands. Tanning and dressing of leather, malting, brickmaking, and ironfounding are carried on to some extent in the to. and neighbourhood, and there are several corn mills. Races are held here in the last week in April; the course, which has a grand stand, is to the west of the to. On the part of T. which is now the New Town there once stood an ancient castle of the Mowbrays; the moats are still to be traced, but of the building there are now no remains; the materials of the castle are said to have been used in the erection of the church.

Thomastown (1), pa. and mkt. and U. to., Gowran bar., Mid co. Kilk., Ir., 10 S.E. of Kilkenny; ac. 2,041. The to. is pleasantly situated on the banks of the Nore (here crossed by a bridge), and consists of five streets of tolerable width, well paved. T. is said to have been founded by an Anglo-Norman and incorporated by several charters, and it sent two members to the Irish Parliament until the Legislative Union. An abbey was founded for Dominicans here at some remote period; some ruins of a portion remain. The Protestant church is a stone structure with a tower, and the Catholics have also a handsome church. A large National school, a union poor-house, fever hospital, and a dispensary are the principal charitable institutions. There is a frieze factory here, considerable trade is carried on in grain, and there are extensive corn mills. Fairs are held on Jan. 6, March 17, May 25, June 29, Sept. 15, and Nov. 1.

Thomond, one of the ancient divs. of the province of Munster, Ir. Munster was divided into five portions by the descendants of Olioll Oloim, who obtained the sovereignty of the whole of Munster in the 2nd cent. One of these was Tuadhmhumhain or T., which originally extended from Loop Head to Stradbally in Q. Co., and from the Slieve Aughty Mountains to Limerick. At the time of the Anglo-Norm. invasion T. embraced cos. Clare and Lim. (excepting the to. of Limerick, which was in the hands of the Ostmen). Its king was Donnell O'Brien, who offered strenuous resistance to the invaders.

Thompson, or Tompson, pa., S.W. Norf., 3 S. of Watton; ac. 2,890; soil light, with a clay or black gravel subsoil. There is some heath land used as a cattle run and sheep walk, and a mere called T. Water. The church of St. Martin, standing close to the road, is a building of rubble, erected apparently about 1300; the south chapel, which retains a piscina, appears to have been built about 1450 as a chantry and place of interment for the founder, Sir Thomas de Shardelow and his family; the nave is fitted with oak benches which have well-carved poppy heads, every one being of a different pattern; a carved oak screen divides the chancel and nave; in the chancel are three sedilia and a piscina; the font is octagonal and of carved stone. Here is a Primitive Methodist chapel and a reading-room and library. The town lands produce about £31 a year, divided between the church and the poor. In the time of Edward I. a small chantry was established here by the then lord of the manor; Sir Thomas de Shardelow, fifty years after, gave the society a chantry house, called Tompson's College, an estate, and the advowson of the living. The College Farm still marks the site of the ancient residence of the chantry priests.

with floriated crosses were exhumed; these are now at the west ends of the north and south aisles. There are also three ancient slabs inscribed to Sir Philip de Chauncey, John de Gothmundham, and one to a member of the De Bohun family.

Thorganby, pa. and vil. in a picturesque valley of the Wolds, E. Lincs., 9 S.W. of Grimsby; ac. 1,583; soil light and chalky, overlying chalk. The church of All Saints is a small building of the Norm. and E. Eng. periods. T. Hall is an ancient mansion in well-wooded grounds, descending on one side to a narrow vale and fine trout stream.

Thorganby with West Cottingwith, pa. and vil. on the Derwent, E.R. Yorks., 10 S.E. of York; ac. 2,921 and 17 of water; soil sand and clay, overlying clay. The church of St. Elena is Perp. There is also a chapel for Wesleyans. On a piece of ground in this pa., projecting towards the Derwent, stood the Benedictine priory of Thicket or Thyckhed, founded in the reign of Richard I. by Roger FitzRoger, and dedicated to St. Mary the Virgin. The priory church was 60 ft. long, but only 18 ft. wide, and with a low roof covered with lead. In the choir were fifteen stalls, and the church had four altars. On the north side was a cloister, 60 ft. square, with alleys 6 ft. wide; a chapter-house on the east side with dorter (dormitory) over, brewhouse on the north, parlour on the west, and numerous other domestic buildings. At its dissolution there were a prioress and eleven nuns, and revenues estimated at £22 net. It is believed there are now no remains. Thicket Priory, an Elizabethan structure in a park of about 150 ac., bounded on the east by the river Derwent, is a seat.

Thorington (1), pa., N.E. Suff., 4 S.E. of Halesworth; ac. 1,378; soil principally of a light sandy nature, overlying sand, gravel, and in some parts clay. The church of St. Peter is E. Norm. and Perp. T. Hall, in a pleasant park of nearly 200 ac., is a seat.

Thorington (2). [THORRINGTON.]

Thorlby. [STIRTON-WITH-THORLBY.]

Thorley (1), pa. and vil., E. Herts., on the Essex border, 3 N. of Sawbridgeworth; ac. 1,527; soil mostly clay, overlying clay and gravel. The church of St. James (restored 1854) is Norm. and E. Eng.; at the western entrance is a holy-water stoup; the ancient font was recently rescued from a neighbouring farmyard, where it had served as a horse-trough. There is a church-room, used for public meetings. A charity of £4 yearly is for apprenticing, and 6s. is distributed in bread. Twyford House is a seat.

Thorley (2), pa., I. of W., about 1 E. by S. of Yarmouth; ac. 1,589 and 31 water and foreshore; soil and subsoil clay. The church of St. Swithin is in Dec. style; the bells are from the old church, also the oak of which the pulpit is constructed. A portion of the old church is still standing. There has been a voluntary church rate here since 1614.

Thormanby, pa. and vil., N.R. Yorks., 6 S.E. of Thirsk; ac. 982; soil light and sandy, overlying gravel and clay. The church of St. Mary is E. Eng., and there is a small Wesleyan chapel.

Thorn, a sub. of Johnstone (q.v.), Mid Renfs., Sc. It adjoins the to. on the south-east.

Thornaby, eccl. pa., tp., and mun. bor. (Thornaby-on-Tees), pa. of Stainton (q.v.), N.R. Yorks.; ac. of tp. 1,636 and 59 water. The bor. was incorporated in 1892. Previous to this the to. was known as South Stockton; it is connected by bridges with Stockton-on-Tees. The church of St. Paul is a modern building in E. Eng. style, replacing an older church. There are also places of worship for Catholics and various bodies of Nonconformists. The other principal public buildings are the Mechanics' Institute, the Public Library, and the Temperance Hall. Here are extensive ironworks (whence the Governments of this country and India are frequently supplied), large yards for building iron ships, saw-mills, potteries, and flour-mills; a large trade is also done in timber and corn.

Thornaby-on-Tees. [THORNABY.]

Thornaby with South Stockton, the former name of the tp. of Thornaby (q.v.).

Thornage, pa. and vil., N. Norf., 2½ S.W. of Holt; ac. 1,266; soil mixed, overlying clay. The church of All Saints is chiefly E. Eng.; there is an ancient oak table and a monument to Sir William Butts; and a stone to the memory of Lady Heigham (1590).

Thornborough, pa. and vil. on the Ouse, N. Bucks., 3 E. of Buckingham; ac. 2,473; soil clay, subsoil various. The church of St. Mary is Dec. and Perp.; there are brasses to William Barton and his wife (1389), and tablets to John Crowche (1473), Dorothy Stevens (1685), Elizabeth Woolhed (1696), and John Woolhed (1709). There are Wesleyan, Congregational, and Baptist chapels. The old Manor House stands in the centre of the vil. In the pa. are tumuli, in one of which vases, urns, etc., have been discovered.

Thornbrough (1) (formerly called "Hundulthorpe"), tp., pa. of South Kilvington (q.v.), N.R. Yorks., 2½ N.E. of Thirsk; ac. 532. The place formerly belonged to a Mr. Walker, who made a fortune in the pre-railway times by keeping relays of fast cobs on the North Road, with the object of supplying early information to newspapers.

Thornbrough (2), tp., pa. of and 2 E. from Corbridge (q.v.), S. Northumb.; ac. 782.

Thornbrough (3), vil., pa. of West Tanfield (q.v.), N.R. Yorks., 2½ S.E. of Masham. There are Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist chapels. Between T. and Nosterfield are three circular entrenchments placed in a line, the extreme distance from point to point being about a mile; their exact purpose has not been ascertained; adjacent are numerous tumuli, which have been found to contain rude pottery and flint instruments.

including water and foreshore. T. was formerly a mun. bor., but with no municipal authority, and it became extinct in 1883. The church of St. Mary (restored 1889) is Perp.; the chancel retains piscina and sedilia, and there is a piscina and a recessed tomb in the south chapel; the north chancel window is a memorial to Edward, ninth Duke of Norfolk (d. 1777), and there are other memorial windows. There are Congregational and Wesleyan chapels. In 1888 the Cossham Hall (named after the donor, and used for concerts and lectures) was presented to the to. There is a market for the sale of cattle, sheep, pigs, and cheese, held here the second Wednesday in each month; also a mop, or hiring fair, Tuesday, Thursday, and Friday before March 25; and the Horticultural Society of T. and district holds a show annually, when prizes are given. The almshouses, founded in the 16th cent. by Sir John Stafford, situated in Back Street, are for six aged women. The other charities amount to about £174 a year, and are administered under a scheme of the Charity Commissioners, which also applies to the Grammar School (founded 1606). T. Castle, a magnificent but incomplete Late Perp. structure, is a seat; it was erected in 1511 by Edward (Stafford), third Duke of Buckingham, who received licence from Henry VIII. to impark 1,000 ac.

Thornbury (2), pa. and vil. on the Waldon, W. Dev., 5 N.E. of Holsworthy; ac. 2,772; soil clayey, overlying clay. The church of St. Peter (restored 1876) is of mixed periods, and retains a fine Norm. doorway in the south porch, and a piscina in the north aisle; in the transept is a monument to Sir John Speecott (knighted 1604) and Elizabeth his wife. There is a Wesleyan chapel.

Thornbury (3), or Thornbury with Nether Wood, pa. and vil., E. Herefords., 7 S. of Tenbury; ac. 2,399; soil clay and loam, overlying red marl and rock. The church of St. Ann is Norm. The charities are small. Here is a Roman encampment.

Thornbury (4), vil., pa. of Calverley (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., 4 N.E. of Bradford.

Thornbury Division, one of the five parl. divs. of Gloucester. It lies in the south of the co. and returns one member.

Thornbury with Nether Wood. [THORNBURY (3).]

Thornby, pa. and vil., Mid Northants, 10½ N.N.W. of Northampton, on the road to Leicester; ac. 1,200; soil chiefly light and sandy, overlying clay and gravel. The church of St. Helen (restored 1870) is Perp.; the chancel retains a Dec. piscina in good preservation; at the west end of the nave is a tablet to Sir William Weltden, Knight (d. 1631). Union Chapel is used by various denominations. There is a reading-room. T. Hall, a short distance from the vil., on the road from Welford to Northampton, is an Elizabethan mansion, with well laid-out grounds; Cromwell is said to have stayed here on the eve of the battle of Naseby.

Thorncliff, small but pleasant vil., pa. of and 2½ N.E. of Leek, N. Staffs.

Thorncombe, pa. and vil., W. Dors., 7 N.E. of Axminster; ac. 5,331; soil light clay and stonebrash, overlying flint. The church of St. Mary, rebuilt in 1867 in Perp. style, contains a monument to Sir Thomas Brook (d. 1447). The Village Hall was erected in commemoration of the Jubilee of Queen Victoria (1887). Holditch Court, formerly a family seat, is now a ruin, and the chapel has been desecrated and is used as a barn; the castle keep and the ivy-clad tower still remain. Forde Abbey, on the banks of the Axe, was preserved from total destruction, and exhibits the remains of a splendid building converted into a princely residence; the abbey was founded 1135; it was of the Cistercian order, and one of the "greater abbeys," being valued at the Dissolution at about £380 yearly; of the church there are now no remains. Much of the monastic buildings is still left, and, with modern additions, forms a seat. The monastic kitchen is still in use, and the refectory has been divided into several apartments. The 14th-cent. gateway and the conventual barn still stand. In the abbey is some valuable old Flemish tapestry. Sadborow, a modern mansion commanding a fine view, is also a seat.

Thorncote, ha., pa. of Northill (q.v.), Mid Beds., 4½ N.W. of Biggleswade.

Thornden, ha., pa. of Herne (q.v.), N.E. Kent, about 4 S.W. of Herne Bay.

Thorndon, pa. and vil., N.E. Suff., 3½ S. of Eye; ac. 2,650; soil mixed clay, overlying gravel. The church of All Saints (restored 1866) is Perp., with an embattled tower on the south side, through which is the entrance. A Reformatory for boys was established here in 1856 by the late Sir E. C. Kerrison, Bart., and was taken over by the co. in 1887, and it now contains the full complement of eighty boys, who are employed on the land. The rents of the to. estates amount to £100 yearly, one-third of which is for the poor, one-third for school purposes, and one-third for improvements in the pa. The church fund of £30 is applied to the repairs of the church. The poor have also £2 a year from Lee's Charity and a yearly rent-charge of £2.

Thorne (1), pa., U. and small mkt. to. (W.), and head of a Co. Co. dis., W.R. Yorks., 10 N.E. of Doncaster; ac. 12,408; soil sand, clay, and warp, overlying clay. The Don flows about a mile northwest of the to., and a canal on the south gives access to the Trent. The church of St. Nicholas (restored 1860) is chiefly Late Dec. There are several Nonconformist places of worship. Brooke's Grammar School (built 1861–62) is in Gothic style; the school of Travis's charity, endowed with about £80 yearly, is in Perp. style. The trade of keelbuilding is carried on. T. Agricultural Show is largely attended, and is held—the cattle fair on the first Tuesday after June 11, the agricultural show on Wednesday, and the gala and fireworks display on Thursday. A cattle fair is also held on the first Monday and Tuesday after Oct. 11. Matthew de la Pryme, a Flemish refugee, was perpetual curate here (1701–4), and made large collections for a history of the place and neighbourhood, now among the Lansdowne MSS. in the British Museum. T. Moor or Waste, upwards of 4,000 ac. in extent, comprises the eastern portion of the pa. It was formerly a swampy bog, but has been efficiently drained and improved by warping. Since 1880 the moors have been developed in an extraordinary manner by the manipulation of the surface for peat moss litter, which has now become a most important trade, the T. Moors finding employment for over 300 hands in stripping the surface of the waste for litter. When the surface has been cleared, sluices are opened to admit the tidal water from the Ouse, which deposits warp, and by this means extensive tracts of waste land have been converted into valuable fertile land.

Thorne (2), or Thorn Coffin, small pa. and vil., S. Somerset, 3 N.W. of Yeovil; ac. 406; soil loamy and clayey, overlying clay and heavy sand. The church of St. Andrew (restored 1893) is E. Eng.; the pulpit is of oak, and bears the date 1624. T. House is a seat.

Thorner, pa., tp., and vil., W.R. Yorks., 7 N.E. of Leeds; ac. of pa. 4,698, of tp. 2,460; soil clay, overlying limestone and ironstone. The church of St. Peter (restored 1855) is E. Eng.; there is a monument to John Philip Gemas (d. 1722). Here is a Wesleyan chapel, a reading-room, and an endowed school. The charities are small.

Thornes, eccl. pa. and vil. on the Calder, pa. of and 1 S.W. from Wakefield (q.v.), W.R. Yorks. The church of St. Philip and St. James was built 1831. Here are four almshouses. Worsted, woollen, and soap are manufactured. Lupset Hall and T. House are seats. [ALVERTHORPE-WITH-THORNES.]

Thorne St. Margaret, pa. and vil. between the Tone and the Great Western Railway, W. Somerset, 3 W. of Wellington; ac. 824; soil sandy, overlying limestone and sandstone. The church of St. Margaret (which, with the exception of the tower, was rebuilt in 1865) contains a brass of the Tudor period to — Worth, with curious Latin epitaph and translation.

Thorness Bay (= "Thor's Headland Bay"), inlet of the Solent, N.W. I. of W., 2½ S.W. of West Cowes. The bay is about a mile and a half wide at its mouth, and extends ½ mile inland. The name is obviously of Norse origin.

Thorney (1), pa. and vil., N.W. Cambs., adjoining Northants, 14 W. of Wisbech; ac. 17,590; soil black vegetable loam, overlying rich clay. The fens in the neighbourhood were formerly relieved of their superfluous waters by the very uncertain help of windmills; these have given way to a complete system of drainage. Some of the chief roads in several parts of the pa. are adorned with avenues of fine trees; the Causeway, Willow Hall, and the Whittlesey roads are most noticeable. The vil. is built on an eminence, eye, or island, and was anciently called "Ankeridge," from a monastery for hermits or anchorites founded here in 662 by Saxulf, abbot of Peterborough; in 810 it was wasted by the Danes, and in 972 was restored by St. Ethelwold, Bishop of Winchester, as a house for Benedictines. The members of this house exerted themselves much, like most of their brethren, for bettering the neighbourhood. The abbots attained to great power, were mitred, and sat in Parliament, and at the Dissolution the income was stated to be £411 12s. 11d. yearly. That the abbey was a building of vast extent is manifest from the remains of foundations laid bare at sundry times at great distances from the still remaining portion of the church, originally 290 ft. in length, and rebuilt 1098–1108; in 1638 it was fitted up as a pa. church, and is named in honour of St. Mary the Virgin. The west front, of massive Norm. work, has square flanking turrets, surmounted by panelled turrets of Perp. date reaching a height of 100 ft.; above the west window are niches with images and elaborate panelling. The church was well restored in 1888. The earliest register, which is in French, dates from 1654, and appears to establish the fact that a number of Protestants settled here after the revocation of the Edict of Nantes in 1685. Here is a small Primitive Methodist chapel. The Literary Society, founded in 1854, has a news-room and library. There is a right of market on Thursday, which has fallen into disuse; and fairs for horses, chiefly of the heavy kind, are held on July 1 and Sept. 21, and are well attended by dealers and others from all parts of the kingdom.

Thorney (2), pa. and tp. near the Fossdyke, N.E. Notts., 11 S.E. of Retford; ac. of pa. 4,123, of tp. 2,250; soil light sand, overlying gravel. The church of St. Helen was rebuilt in Norm. style 1849–50; it retains a piscina and sedilia; in the chancel are a number of 18th-cent. monuments. T. Hall is a seat.

Thorney (3), ha., pa. of Iver (q.v.), S. Bucks., on the Middx. border, about 1 N.W. of West Drayton. Here are large paper-mills.

Thorney (4), ha., pas. of Kingsbury Episcopi and Muchelney (q.v.), S. Somerset, about 1 N. of Kingsbury Episcopi.

Thorneyburn, pa. and tp. on the North Tyne, W. Northumb., 6 N.W. of Bellingham; ac. of pa. 21,764, of tp. 2,978; soil sandy, subsoil loamy. The church of St. Aidan is modern Gothic.

Thorney Lanes, ha., pa. of Hanbury (q.v.), Mid Staffs., 3 N.E. of Abbots Bromley.

Thorney, West, pa., S.W. Sussex, 10 W. of Chichester; ac. 1,216 and 1,590 water and foreshore; soil loam, overlying marl. The church of St. Nicholas (restored 1886) is Norm. and E. Eng.; it retains a Norm. font and an elaborately carved oak chancel screen. W. T. is an island—the "Island of Thorns"—and is 8 miles in circumference.

Thorn Falcon, pa., Mid Somerset, about 3 E. of Taunton, on the main road to Ilminster; ac. 810; soil chiefly clay and red marl, overlying marl. The church of the Holy Cross (restored 1882) is an ancient building of mixed periods; some of the bench ends are finely carved. Court House is a seat.

Thornford, pa., N. Dors., 4 S.E. of Yeovil; ac. 1,465; soil clay, overlying gravel. Its situation is remarkably beautiful, overlooking the valley of the Yeo towards Sherborne on the east, and commanding views extending into Devon and the hill country of Dorset. The church of St. Mary Magdalen (restored) is Perp.; the chancel is separated from the nave by a carved stone Perp. screen. Roman remains are frequently found.

Thorngate Hill, ha., pa. of Romaldkirk (q.v.), N.R. Yorks., about 5 N.W. of Barnard Castle.

Thorngrafton, tp., pa. of and 5½ E. from Haltwhistle (q.v.), S.W. Northumb.; ac. 3,151. Here are sand and ironstone quarries and a colliery. [HOUSESTEADS.]

Thorngumbauld, chap., tp. and vil., pa. of Paull (q.v.), E.R. Yorks., 8 W. of Patrington; ac. 1,450. The church of St. Andrew is an ancient building. Here are Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist chapels. T. Hall is a seat.

Thornham (1), coast pa. and vil., N.W. Norf., 5 E.N.E. of Hunstanton; ac. 2,160, and 780 water; soil partly loam and chalk, overlying brick-earth and chalk. The church of All Saints (restored 1877) is Dec.; the nave is seated with massive oak benches; the pulpit is also of oak and bears date 1631; the lower portion of the 15th-cent. rood-screen remains, and has six panels with painted figures, nearly obliterated; the chancel retains a piscina. There are Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist chapels. The charities for distribution amount to £30, together with about 29 ac. of land reserved for fuel; the rent of 8 ac. of land is applied for the repairs of the church. Here is a limekiln, and bricks are made in the pa. T. Hall is a seat.

Thornham (2), or Thurnham, pa. and vil., Mid Kent, about 3 E. of Maidstone; ac. 3,362; soil in the higher parts chalky and light, in the lower parts richer. The church of St. Mary the Virgin is Perp. Godard's Castle (q.v.) is in this pa. Aldringham Place is now used as a farmhouse. T. Court is a seat.

Thornham (3), tp., pa. of Middleton (q.v.), S.E. Lancs., 3½ S.W. of Rochdale; ac. 1,936. Here is a Wesleyan chapel. Coal is mined, and fustian cutting is carried on.

Thornham Magna, pa. and vil., N.E. Suff., 3 S.W. of Eye; ac. 1,324; soil clay and heavy land, some mixed, overlying clay and brick-earth. The church of St. Mary (restored 1851) is Perp. The town estate lets for £9 yearly, which is applied to the repairs of the ornaments of the church. T. Hall is a seat, and in May, when the thorns are in blossom, the origin of the name cannot be doubted; the house is built in the old half H-form, but has been altered and additions made to it. There is a part of the old house untouched; the architecture is Tudor; and it is probable that Queen Elizabeth slept there in one of her East Anglian progresses, as "she lay at Thornham," so says her chronicler. Charles II. also spent a night or more here. Successive owners have added to the collection of pictures. There is an interesting portrait of Sir Charles Brydges, one of the Chandos family, the keeper of the Tower, who saved Queen Elizabeth's life (then princess) by delaying her execution; and one of Richard Cromwell. Amongst other objects of interest are specimens of Lowestoft, Yarmouth, Swansea, Wedgwood and Oriental china, as well as old Chippendale furniture, and an organ built by the third Lord Henniker; the park is between 300 and 400 ac., and the gardens are about 25 ac. in extent.

Thornham Parva, pa. and vil., N.E. Suff., about 2½ S.W. of Eye; ac. 676; soil clay and heavy land, some mixed, overlying clay. The church of St. Mary is a small Norm. edifice with thatched roof; it was restored in 1883, when a small Norm. window was discovered; there is also a Norm. doorway.

Thornhaugh, pa., N. Northants, 9 W. by S. of Peterborough; ac. 2,726; soil sandy clay, overlying stone. The church of St. Andrew (restored 1889) is Norm. and Perp.; in the transept is a monument with recumbent effigy to Sir William Russell, Baron Russell, of T., commander of Queen Elizabeth's forces in the Low Countries, and Lord Deputy of Ireland (d. 1613); in the chancel is an E. Eng. piscina. The poor's money amounts to 13s. 4d. yearly.

Thornhill (1), pa., tp., and vil., on elevated ground, overlooking the south bank of the Calder, W.R. Yorks., about 2 S. of Dewsbury; ac. of pa. 8,020, of tp. 2,487; soil and subsoil various. The pa. is partly in the parl. bor. of Dewsbury. The church of St. Michael is of various periods; the chapel on the north side of the chancel has been the burial-place of the family of Savile, and contains some fine monuments, including a large altar-tomb with recumbent effigies of oak to Sir John Savile, Knight (d. 1529), and his wives Alice (Vernon) and Elizabeth (Paston); the most ancient remaining monument is the figure of a cross-legged knight in armour and wearing a surcoat, with his head under a canopy; the oldest of the Savile monuments is a fine altar-tomb of alabaster, with recumbent figures of Sir Thomas Savile, Knight (d. 1449), and Margaret (Pilkington), his wife; and there are two others, one with recumbent effigy of Sir George Savile, Knight and Bart. (d. 1622), and another to his son, Sir George Savile, Knight (d. 1618), and Anne (Wentworth), his second wife, with two sons, George and William; and on the walls hang a helmet and gauntlets; the east window contains the remains of a tree of Jesse in magnificent glass of Perp. date, and there are other fragments in the north aisle, including a mutilated invocatory inscription on behalf of the souls of Sir John Savile, Knight, temp. Henry VI., and Alice (Gascoigne), his wife, and their son William; the tower and chancel also retain ancient glass. The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have chapels, and there is a parochial hall. The Local Board offices (built

Thornton Childer. [CHILDER THORNTON.]

Thornton Curtis, pa. and scattered vil., N. Lincs., 5 S.E. of Barton-on-Humber; ac. 4,934; soil light loam, overlying clay. The church of St. Lawrence (restored 1883–84) is E. Eng.; the font is E. Norm.; there is a singular monument near the south porch to Mr. Skinner (d. 1626). Here is a Wesleyan chapel. About 1½ E. of the vil. are the ruins of the Augustinian abbey of St. Mary, founded by William le Gros, Earl of Albemarle, in 1139; in 1517 it became a mitred abbey. The remains of the abbey church are insignificant, the only existing portions being the end of the south transept and a fragment of the adjoining chapter-house; within the area of the nave and north transept are a number of stone coffins and incised slabs, and outside the east wall of the choir a slab with a very rich cross and marginal inscription to John Girdyk (1363) and Johan his wife. The ruins are generally of the E. Dec. period, the chapter-house dating from 1282–1308, choir 1315, and the presbytery 1443–73. The remains of the abbot's house is now a farm; the entrance gatehouse is one of the finest existing specimens in England of the E. Perp. period, and was built about 1382, the general plan being that of a parallelogram of two storeys, with octagonal towers at the angles and on either side of the entrance; the front is enriched with several canopied niches, from some of which the figures have disappeared; the three largest, however, remain, and are in a perfect state. The roof of the gateway is handsomely groined, and there are some remains of the original oak doors; the second storey is reached by a winding newel staircase, which has an elegant stone roof, with eight cusped ribs springing from corbels and meeting in the centre. The whole area of the abbey, surrounded by a wall and moat, was 100 ac.

Thornton Dale, pa. and vil., E.R. Yorks., 9 S. of Malton; ac. 6,461; soil limestone, overlying rock and limestone. The church of All Saints, an ancient Gothic building, contains a piscina, a recumbent effigy of Catherine Cholmley, and a Norm. font. Here are four Wesleyan chapels. There are twelve almshouses, built in 1656, and an endowed grammar school. Stone is quarried and Thorpe Abbotts, pa. and vil. on the Waveney. S. Norf., 4½ E. of Diss; ac. 1,153; soil heavy and light lands mixed, overlying clay and gravel. It takes its suffix from the abbots of Bury St. Edmunds, who formerly held the land. The church of All Saints (restored 1888) is Perp. The poor have £5 yearly in fuel.

Thorpe Achurch, pa., N. Northants, about 3 S. of Thrapston; ac. 1,525; soil clay, overlying clay and limestone. The church of St. John the Baptist (restored 1862) is E. Eng. and Dec., and contains monuments to Sir Thomas Powys, Kt., Justice of the Queen's Bench (d. 1719), and to several other members of the family; these, formerly in Lilford Church, were erected here on the removal of that building. There is a Sunday-school with house attached. Near the Thrapston road stands an ancient barn, with a massive open-timbered roof.

Thorpeacre, ha., pa. of Dishley-with-Thorpeacre (q.v.), N. Leics., about 1½ N.W. of Loughborough.

Thorpe Arnold, pa. on the Eye, N. Leics., 1½ E.N.E. of Melton Mowbray; ac. 1,742; soil clay and sand, overlying clay. The church of St. Mary (restored 1876) is E. Eng., and contains a Saxon font. There is a charity of about £40 annually, part of which is devoted to educational purposes.

Thorpe Audlin, tp. and vil., pa. of and 1 N. from Badsworth (q.v.), W.R. Yorks.; ac. 1,311. Here is a Wesleyan chapel.

Thorpe Bassett, pa. and small vil., E.R. Yorks., 5 E. of Malton; ac. 1,806; soil light and sandy, subsoil various. The church of All Saints (restored 1879) is Norm., and contains the recumbent mitred effigy of an ecclesiastic; the south doorway is a fine example of Norm. work. Here is a Wesleyan chapel.

Thorpe Bochart. [THORPE-IN-THE-GLEBE.]

Thorpe Bulmer, tp., pa. of Hart (q.v.), E. Dur., 4 N.W. of Hartlepool; ac. 842.

Thorpe-by-Ixworth, pa. and small vil., N.W. Suff., 8 N.E. of Bury St. Edmunds; ac. 1,059; soil mixed, subsoil various. The church of All Saints is a building of rubble of the E. Eng. period; the chancel retains a piscina and two 17th-cent. mural monuments to the Croft family; the church is seated with oak benches adorned with poppy heads and carving. The pa. has some small charities. Bricks are made here. The manor was formerly held by Ixworth Priory.

Thorpe-by-Water, tp. and ha. on the Welland, pa. of and 2 S. from Seaton (q.v.), S. Rutld.; ac. 689.

Thorpe Constantine, pa. and small vil., E. Staffs., on the borders of Warws., 5 N.E. of Tamworth; ac. 947; soil light loam, overlying gravel and clay. The church of St. Constantine (restored 1883) is a small building of stone in Gothic style. The charities amount to about £6 yearly. T. Hall, in an extensive park, is a seat.

Thorpe, East, ha., pa. of and 1 E. from Londesborough (q.v.), E.R. Yorks.

Thorpe Hesley, eccl. pa. and vil., pas. of Ecclesfield, Rotherham, and Wath-upon-Dearne (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., 4 N.W. of Rotherham. The church of Holy Trinity is in Gothic style. There are Wesleyan, Free Methodist, and Primitive Methodist chapels. In the pa. are collieries, and bolts, nails, and screws are made here.

Thorpe-in-Balne, tp. on the Don, pa. of Barnby-upon-Don (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., 6 W. of Thorne; ac. 2,268. A chapel formerly stood at T., assigned to the time of Henry II., and the walls of the chancel still remain, forming part of a farm building.

Thorpe-in-the-Fallows. [THORPE, WEST.]

Thorpe-in-the-Glebe, or Thorpe Bochart, small pa., S. Notts., on the Leics. border, 8 N.E. of Loughborough; ac. 862. The church has long been a ruin.

Thorpe-in-the-Street. [THORPE-LE-STREET.]

Thorpe Langton, chap. and tp., pa. of Langton (q.v.), S.E. Leics., 3½ N.E. of Market Harborough; ac. 1,167. The church of St. Nicholas (restored) is E. Eng.; the chancel is divided from the nave by an old screen; the rood-loft stairs remain in the south aisle, and the font is ancient.

Thorpe Latimer, ha., pa. of Helpringham (q.v.), S. Lincs., about 6 S.E. of Sleaford.

Thorpe-le-Soken, pa. and vil., N.E. Essex, 9 S.E. of Manningtree; ac. 3,191 land, 81 water; soil mixed, overlying clay and gravel. The church of St. Michael (rebuilt 1876) has a Perp. tower; Sir William Gull (d. 1890) is buried here; in the chancel are several ancient monuments, including an effigy temp. Edward I., and a tablet to Thomas Wharton (d. 1663) is in the west porch. Here is a Baptist chapel, where Dr. Andrew Fuller (d. 1815) was minister, a Primitive Methodist chapel, and a Working Men's Institute. There are two large malt-houses. Thorpe Hall and The Grange are seats.

Thorpe-le-Street, or Thorpe-in-the-Street, tp., pa. of Nunburnholme (q.v.), E.R. Yorks., 3½ N.W. of Market Weighton; ac. 676

Thorpe, Little. [LITTLETHORPE.]

Thorpe Lubenham, pa. (formerly extra-parochial), Mid Northants, separated from Leics. by the Welland, 2½ W. of Market Harborough; ac. 353. The Hall, a plain brick building pleasantly situated, is a seat.

Thorpe Malsor, pa. and vil., Mid Northants, 2½ W. of Kettering; ac. 896; soil red loam and ironstone, overlying clay. The church of St. Leonard (restored 1877) is Dec.; all the woodwork is of oak. Savage's charity of £8 yearly is for fuel. T. Hall is a seat.

Thorpe Mandeville, pa. and small vil., S. Northants, 6 N.E. of Banbury; ac. 1,030; soil sandy, overlying clay. The church of St. John the Baptist (restored 1857) was erected about the 13th cent.; on one side of the tower is a figure of St. John. In the north aisle is a finely-carved mural monument to Thomas Kirton, Esq., Common Sergeant of the City of London (d. 1597), and Mary his wife (d. 1601), with effigies of himself, his wife, six sons and six daughters; there are also marble tablets, some with armorial bearings to the Humfrey family. The rectory-house is pleasantly situated on a hill, in grounds of 20 ac. The Manor House, a mansion on an eminence, in park-like grounds and commanding an extensive view of the surrounding landscape, is a seat.

Thorpe Market, pa. and vil., E. Norf., 4½ S.E. of Cromer; ac. 1,189; soil sand and gravel, overlying gravel and marl. The church of St. Margaret (restored 1796) is a modern building in Dec. style. Here are almshouses, founded in 1671 by Sir J. Rant, for four poor widows.

Thorpe Morieux, pa. and small vil., S. Suff., 9 S.E. of Bury St. Edmunds; ac. 2,457; soil and subsoil clay. The church of St. Mary (restored 1869) is Perp. Here is a small Congregational chapel. The annual value of the single charity is 10s.

Thorpe-near-Newark. [THORPE (2).]

Thorpe-next-Haddiscoe, pa. and vil., S. Norf., 10 S.W. of Yarmouth; ac. (of which about a third is marsh land) 816; soil mixed, overlying clay, gravel, and sand. The church of St. Matthias is a small thatched Norm. building.

Thorpe-next-Norwich, pa. and picturesque vil., E. Norf., 2 E. of Norwich, on the road to Yarmouth; ac. 1,849; soil sandy and gravel, overlying chalk and limestone. There are several gentlemen's seats and villa residences, pleasantly situated on the side of a declivity overlooking a part of the city of Norwich, the railway, and the river Yare. The old pa. church of St. Andrew has been dismantled by faculty, and forms a picturesque ruin; many old monuments still remain on the ruined walls, but others have been removed into the porch of the new tower. The new church of St. Andrew (1866), near the old church, is in Dec. style. The parochial cemetery, situated about ½ S. of the vil., comprises 2 ac. of ground, half of which is for the use of the County Lunatic Asylum (which is in this pa.), and there is a mortuary chapel. seat of the Bishops of Norwich, stands at the entrance to the vil., and adjoining are the remains of a chapel, now converted to secular uses.

Thorpe-on-the-Hill, pa. and scattered vil. near the Roman Fossway, W. Lincs., 6 S.W. of Lincoln; ac. 1,820; soil clay and moor land, overlying clay and rock. The church of St. Michael (restored 1874) is a plain E. Eng. building. Here are Wesleyan and Free Methodist chapels. A charitable bequest of 32s. is distributed half-yearly to poor widows of this pa.

Thorpe Parva, formerly a pa., S. Norf., 3 E. of Diss, now annexed to Scole with Thorpe Parva and Frenze (q.v.).

Thorpe St. Andrew, formerly a pa. of E. Norf., now absorbed in the city of Norwich (q.v.).

Thorpe St. Peter, pa. and scattered vil., E. Lincs., 1½ N.W. of Wainfleet; ac. 2,996; soil rich grazing land, overlying clay. The church of St. Peter (restored 1866) is chiefly Dec., with remains of E. Eng. work and Perp. additions; a Perp. carved oak screen separates the nave and chancel, and there is a richly carved pulpit of the Jacobean period; the chancel appears to have had lateral chantry chapels, and the piscina of one of these appears on the external north wall; several large stone coffins were discovered during the restoration of the nave, and a slab at the west end bears a foliated cross, the head of which is encircled by a label bearing a legend. There are Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist chapels. The pa. has some small charities, and there are also two bede-houses. Bricks are made here.

Thorpe Salvin, pa. and vil., W.R. Yorks., 5 W.N.W. of Worksop; ac. 2,295; soil mixed, overlying limestone. The church of St. Michael is chiefly Norm., and contains several monuments of the Sandford family.

Thorpe Satchville, chap. and tp., pa. of Hungarton (q.v.), E. Leics., 5 S. of Melton Mowbray; ac. 1,306. The church of St. Michael (restored) is Late Perp. There is a Primitive Methodist chapel. T. S. Hall is a seat.

Thorpe Stapleton, tp. near the Aire, pa. of Whitkirk, W.R. Yorks., 3 S.E. of Leeds; ac. 431. It is chiefly noted for the ruins of old Thorpe Hall, a mansion of the 15th cent., and formerly the residence of the Scargill family; not much of the ancient structure is now standing, but one of the towers is occupied as a labourer's dwelling.

Thorpe-sub-Montem. [THORPE (5).]

Thorpe Thewles, vil. with railway station, pa. of Grindon (q.v.), S.E. Dur., 5 S.E. of Sedgefield.

Thorpe Tilney, tp., pa. of Timberland (q.v.), Mid Lincs., 8 N.E. of Sleaford; ac. 1,874.

Thorpe Underwood, ha., pas. of Harrington and Rothwell (q.v.), Mid Northants, ¾ N.E. of Harrington.

Thorpe Underwoods, tp., pa. of and 2 S.E. from Little Ouseburn (q.v.), W.R. Yorks.; ac. 2,413 Thorpe Green Hall is a seat.

Thorpe-upon-Ouse, a local name for Bishopthorpe (q.v.).

Thorpe, West, or Thorpe-in-the-Fallows, pa. watered by the Till, N.W. Lincs., 8 N.N.W. of Lincoln; ac. 847; soil clayey, overlying clay. The church has long since disappeared, but the site of the building, the foundations of which have been removed, may still be traced.

Thorpe Willoughby, tp. and vil., pa. of Brayton (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., 2 W. of Selby; ac. 463.

Thorpland, ha., pa. of and adjoining Wallington-with-Thorpland (q.v.), S.W. Norf. The church which used to stand here has entirely disappeared.

Thorp-under-Stone, ha., pa. of Catterick (q.v.), N.R. Yorks., about 2 W. by S. of Richmond.

Thorrington, pa. and vil., E. Essex, 8 S.E. of Colchester; ac. 1,994; soil light and partly marshy. The church of St. Mary Magdalene (restored 1866) is a Gothic building. Here is a Wesleyan chapel.

Thor's Cave, large natural hollow, pa. of Alstonefield (q.v.), N.E. Staffs., 7 N.W. of Ashbourne. The cavity is situated at a considerable elevation on the hillside near the left bank of the Manyfold. It has been suggested that the name had originally no connection with the Norse god, but was derived from its position on the side of the "tor." Romano-Britannic remains were found within it in 1864.

Thorverton, pa. and vil. on the Exe, E. Dev., 7 N. of Exeter; ac. 4,036; soil clay and sand, overlying red rock. The church of St. Thomas à Becket is a Gothic building (restored 1864), containing some interesting old benches. Here is a Baptist chapel. The charities amount to £100 yearly, and the school has a small endowment. There is a monthly cattle market, and fairs are held on the last Monday in February and the Monday after July 18.

Thousla Rock, isolated rock in Calf Sound, off south-west coast of the I. of M., 5 W. of Castletown. It greatly impedes navigation, and its position is shown by a beacon.

Thoydon Bois. [THEYDON BOIS.]

Thrandeston, pa. and scattered vil., N.E. Suff., 2½ S. of Diss; ac. 1,374; soil mixed, inclining to stiff, overlying chiefly clay. The church of St. Margaret is a handsome building chiefly of the Perp. period; the chancel is divided from the nave by a handsome carved screen, and the tower is also separated from the nave by a screen of like design; there are several armorial shields to the families of Rix and Blakeby. There is a charity of £3 yearly expended in coals and distributed to the poor; also about 14 ac. of land, with cottages, the rent of which is applied to repairing and beautifying the church.

Thrang, ha., pa. of and about 2 S.W. from Grasmere (q.v.), W. Westmd. Here is a slate quarry.

Thrapston, pa., U. and mkt. to., and head of petty sess. div. and Co. Co. dis., N. Northants, 7½ S.W. of Oundle; ac. 1,124. The to. is on the Nen, over which is a substantial bridge, connecting the to. with the vil. of Islip. The church of St. James is E. Eng., Dec., and Perp.; in the chancel are three sedilia with crocketed canopies, and a double piscina; in the north aisle is another piscina of E. Eng. date. Here are Baptist and Wesleyan chapels. A sum of money producing £21 10s. yearly, left for the education of twelve girls, has been transferred as an endowment to the National schools. A County Police Station, with magistrates' room attached, was built in 1860. A Corn Exchange was built in 1848, and a cattle market was established in 1871. A very extensive market for grain, cattle, sheep, and pigs is held on Tuesday. Fairs are held on the first Tuesday in May, August 5, and on the first Tuesday after Old Michaelmas Day.

Threapland, pl., pa. of Torpenhow (q.v.), W. Cumb., 3 miles from the pa. church. [BOTHEL AND THREAPLAND.]

Threapwood, pa., W. Chesh. (extending into Flints.), 3 W. by S. of Malpas; ac. 200; soil clay, overlying marl. The church of St. John (in the Flints. portion of the pa.) is in Perp. style. There are Congregational and Wesleyan New Connexion chapels. Bricks and tiles are made here.

Threave Castle, ruin, pa. of Balmaghie (q.v.), Mid Kirkcuds., Sc., 1½ W. of Castle Douglas. It was built in the 14th cent. A tall roofless tower remains, surrounded by the ruins of a strong outer wall with circular towers at the four angles.

Threckingham, or Threekingham, pa. and small scattered vil. at the intersection of the Roman roads Ermine Street and the Salter's Way, S. Lincs., 7 S. of Sleaford; ac. 2,270; soil heavy loam, overlying clay. The church of St. Peter is Trans., E. Eng., and Dec.; the chancel furnishes a singular example of the admixture of earlier periods, having three equal circular-headed windows separate on the outside, but connected in a continuous arcade on the inside; the upper portion of the tower and spire present one of the best examples of a heavy broach spire to be met with, and there is some good ironwork on the south door, and several singularly-carved bench ends of very late date; at the east end of the chancel is a beautiful early triplet. In the north aisle of the church are three stone coffins with lids entire, which were removed from the churchyard about 1806. At the end of the nave are two recumbent effigies on a low raised slab of Lambert de Trekingham and his wife, the former in chain mail and flowing tunic, and bearing a shield with the arms of Trekingham (1245–1315). Here are Baptist and Calvinist chapels. T. House is a seat.

Three Barrow Down, eminence, pa. of Sibertswold, S.E. Kent, 6 N.W. of Dover. Here are three large tumuli, and the remains of a camp surrounded by a deep ditch.

Three Barrows Tor, eminence (1,522 ft.) on Dartmoor, S. Dev., 4 N. by E. of Ivybridge. On its summit is a cairn, and across it runs an ancient road, descending in a N.W. direction, the width of which is in some places 16 ft.

Three Bridges, ha. with railway station, pa. of and 1¼ W. from Worth (q.v.), N. Sussex.

Threekingham. [THRECKINGHAM.]

Three Mile Cross, ha., pa. of and 1½ W. from Shinfield (q.v.), S. Berks.

Three Rock Mountain, eminence (1,469 ft.), Rathdown bar., S. co. Dub., Ir., 5½ S.W. of Kingstown. The mountain forms the extreme point of a granite range running west to Naas in co. Kildare. The summit commands fine views of the Hill of Howth, Dublin Bay, and a considerable tract inland.

Three Shire Stones. [SHIRE STONES.]

Three Sisters, headland on west side of entrance to Smerwick Harbour, Corkaguiny bar., W. co. Kerry, Ir., 8 N.W. of Dingle. The headland is one of the most prominent points in a fine line of cliffs.

Three Tarns, lakelet immediately under Bow Fell, S.W. Cumb. It lies more than 2,500 ft. above sea level.

Three Trouts, stream, N.E. co. Wick., Ir., rises in the Glen of the Downs, and runs about 5 miles to the Irish Sea, past Delgany and between the bars. of Rathdown and Newcastle.

Threlkeld, eccl. pa., tp., and vil., pa. of Greystoke (q.v.), Mid Cumb., 4½ N.E. of Keswick; ac. 5,927. The church of St. Mary is a small plain stone building. There is a Wesleyan mission room. The charities amount to about £25 yearly.

Thremhall. [STANSTED MOUNTFITCHET.]

Threshfield, tp. and vil., pa. of and 1 N.W. from Linton (q.v.), W.R. Yorks.; ac. 2,646. Netherside Hall is a seat.

Thresthwaite Glen, mountain valley, N.W. Westmd., 5 N.N.E. of Ambleside. The valley extends from the head of Troutbeck Valley in the S.S.E. to that of Patterdale in the N.N.W. It is traversed by a stream called Pasture Beck (q.v.).

ac. 1,047; soil mixed, overlying chalk and clay. The church of All Saints (restored 1865) is a building of flint, of mixed periods; the roof is in five bays, and has carved mouldings and bosses; the splays of the arches are covered with elegant arabesques; the benches are of solid oak, with carved poppy-heads; the pulpit and desk are Jacobean. Near the church are the remains of a Roman camp, and a great number of coins and other Roman antiquities have been found here. T. House is a seat.

Thribergh. [THRYBERGH.]

Thrigby, pa., E. Norf., 7 N.W. of Yarmouth; ac. 575; soil mixed, overlying gravel. The church of St. Mary is an ancient building of stone and flint. T. Hall stands in extensive grounds containing many fine old trees and an old yew fence of considerable length.

Thrimby, eccl. pa., tp., and vil., pa. of Morland (q.v.), N. Westmd., 4 N. of Shap; ac. 1,574. The church (1814) is dedicated to St. Mary. T. Hall, now a farmhouse, is a 17th-cent. building.

Thringstone, tp., pa. of Whitwick (q.v.), N.W. Leics., 5 N.E. of Ashby-de-la-Zouch; ac. 872. Here are Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist chapels.

Thrintoft, or Thirntoft, tp. and straggling vil., pa. of and 1 N. from Ainderby Steeple (q.v.), N.R. Yorks.; ac. 1,350.

Thriplow, or Triplow, pa., W. Cambs., 8 S. of Cambridge; ac. 2,434; soil sandy and gravelly, overlying gravel and chalk. The church of St. George (restored 1876) is E. Eng., Dec., and Perp. Here is a Congregational chapel. The charities amount to £9 7s. yearly. T. Heath was the scene of an assembling of the Parliamentary army under the command of Fairfax and Cromwell in July, 1647.

Thrislington, tp., pa. of Bishop Middleham (q.v.), Mid Dur., 4½ N.E. of Sedgefield; ac. 582.

Thrivewell, ha., pa. of Kirkharle (q.v.), S. Northumb., 12 N.E. of Hexham.

Throapham, or Throapham St. John, tp., pa. of and 1 S.W. from Laughton-en-le-Morthen (q.v.), W.R. Yorks.; ac. 1,062. The church of St. John the Baptist, a Norm. building, contains a stone coffin (c. 1100) and a slab dated 1328.

Throcking, pa., N. Herts., 2 N.W. of Buntingford; ac. 910; soil mixed, generally stiff, overlying clay, with a small portion of gravel, subsoil chalk. The church of the Holy Trinity (repaired 1880) is E. Eng. and Dec., and contains some fine monuments. There was formerly a mansion standing here, but it was pulled down; a great portion of the extensive and massive foundations still remains, adjoining the Hall Farm. A very small part of the to. of Buntingford is in this pa.

Throckley, tp. and vil. on the Tyne, pa. of and 1 N.W. from Newburn (q.v.), S.E. Northumb.; ac. 760. Here are Wesleyan and Methodist chapels. T. has collieries and firebrick and fireclay works.

Throckmorton, tp. and chap., pa. of Fladbury (q.v.), S. Worcs., 10 S.E. of Worcester; ac. 1,860. The church (restored 1880) is chiefly Dec. with traces of Norm. work, and is one of five churches in this co. which have a central tower without being cruciform.

Throop, vil. on the Stour, pa. of Holdenhurst (q.v.), S.W. Hants, within the parl. bor. of Christchurch.

Throope, ha., pa. of Bishopstone-near-Salisbury (q.v.), S. Wilts. It adjoins the vil. of Bishopstone on the south-east.

Throwleigh, or Throwley, pa. and vil., Mid Dev., 7 S.E. of Okehampton; ac. 1,884; soil sandy, overlying granite. The church of St. Mary is E. Perp.; the roof of the chancel is waggon-vaulted, with good carved oak panelling and bosses; the priest's door is a richly ornamented work of the 13th cent.; on the south side of the chancel is a sepulchral recess. The pa. contains a mission church and a Bible Christian chapel. The charities amount to £4 16s. yearly.

Throwley (1), pa. and vil. on high ground in a picturesque country, N.E. Kent, 4 S. of Faversham; ac. 3,256; soil and subsoil various. Hops are extensively grown. This place bestows the title of Viscount on the Earls Sondes. The church of St. Michael and All Angels (restored 1867) is Dec., but retains some Norm. and E. Eng. portions of an earlier church; the chancel has stalls with misereres, and near the tower is a stoup on a stone shaft. In the north chapel is a monument and statue to George, first Baron Harris of Seringapatam and Mysore, who was so created (August 11, 1815) for his gallant capture of the Indian stronghold of that name (d. 1829); in the other chapels are various memorials to the family of Sondes. There are three almshouses for the relief of aged persons. Belmont, an 18th-cent. mansion in an extensive park, and T. House are seats.

Throwley (2), ha. on the Manyfold, pa. of and 1½ N.W. from Ilam (q.v.), N.E. Staffs. T. Hall, formerly a seat, is now falling into ruins.

The church of St. Leonard (restored 1871) contains a piscina, an incised slab to Sir Ralph Reresby (1525), a monument to Sir Leonard Reresby, and two ecclesiastical effigies. The school has an endowment. There are two old crosses in the vil. T. Park is a seat.

Thulston, or Thurlston, ha., pa. of Elvaston (q.v.), S. Derbys., 5¼ S.E. of Derby.

Thunderbridge, ha., pa. of Kirkburton (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., 1 N.W. of Shelley.

Thunderfield Castle, extensive moated ground, pa. of Horne-with-Harrowsley (q.v.), S.E. Surrey, near Harrowsley. It is supposed to have been the site of a residence of Athelstan.

Thunderly, ha., pa. of Wimbish (q.v.), N. Essex, about 2 S. of Saffron Walden. It was once a distinct pa., but in 1425 was united with Wimbish. The pa. church has long ceased to exist, but the foundations are still to be traced. T. Hall, formerly a seat, is now a farmhouse.

Thundersley, pa., S.E. Essex, 1½ S.W. of Rayleigh; ac. 2,499; soil loam, overlying clay. The church of St. Peter (restored 1885 and 1887) is E. Eng., and contains some E. Eng. arcades in which the carving of the capitals, no two of which are alike, is especially remarkable Thundridge, pa. and small vil. on the Great North road, E. Herts., 2 N. of Ware; ac. 2,206; soil various, overlying gravel. The church of St. Mary, at Wade's Mill (q.v.), is in E. Eng. style; the tower of the old church is still standing in a valley about ½ mile distant. A reading-room was opened in 1889. The charities are of about £55 yearly value. Poles, a modern mansion in a well-wooded park of about 100 ac., is a seat.

Thurcaston, pa., tp., and vil., Mid Leics., 4½ N.W. of Leicester; ac. of pa. 2,391, of tp. 1,177; soil and church contains some good modern stained glass, also fine old wood-carving and stalls. The only charity consists of the interest on £150, given to the poor at Christmas. Close to the church is The Priory, a modern mansion of brick erected on the site of the ancient Augustinian priory, some fragments of which remain.

Thurgarton (2), pa., E. Norf., about 6 N. of Aylsham; ac. 961; the surface is flat, and the soil a good loamy earth. The church of All Saints is Dec. The poor have £1 6s. per year, left by John Bacon in 1732. T. Hall has been in the possession of the Spurrell family for nearly 350 years; it was rebuilt in the Tudor style in 1733.

Thurgoland, eccl. pa., tp., and vil. on the Don, pa. of Silkstone (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., 10 N.W. from Sheffield; ac. 2,221. The church of Holy Trinity was rebuilt in 1871 in E. Eng. style. Here are Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist chapels. Steel wire is manufactured.

Thurland Castle, seat. pa. of Tunstall (q.v.), N. Lancs., about 2½ W. of Burton-in-Lonsdale. It is surrounded by an ancient moat, and was taken and dismantled by the Parliamentary forces during the Civil Wars.

Thurlaston (1), pa. and vil., S.W. Leics., 7½ S.W. of Leicester; ac. 2,980; soil clay and marl, overlying clay. The church of All Saints (restored 1850) is E. Eng., and contains some monuments of the families of Turville and Grundy. The Baptists have a chapel. There is a small charity. Normanton Hall is a seat.

Thurlaston (2), tp., pa. of Dunchurch (q.v.), E. Warws., about 4 S.W. of Rugby; ac. 1,823.

Thurlbear, pa., Mid Somerset, about 3½ S.E. of Taunton, on the road to Chard; ac. 955; soil and subsoil clay. The church of St. Thomas is Norm., with a Perp. embattled western tower.

Thurlby (1), or Thurlby-by-Bourn, pa. and large agricultural vil., S. Lincs., 5 N.W. of Market Deeping; ac. 5,070; soil loam, overlying clay, silt, and gravel. The church of St. Firmin is Norm. and E. Eng.; the nave, including the arcades, is chiefly Norm., as is also part of the chancel, which has a richly designed piscina with a canopy; both transepts were used as chapels, and each has a squint; the porches are E. Eng., the south porch having a Norm. doorway. There are Wesleyan and Free Methodist chapels. At the Working Men's Institute is a reading-room. There are lands in the pa. left by unknown donors for keeping the causeways in repair, and the poor have the interest of £100. The pa. abounds in fine oak. Bricks are made here. A few yards westward of the church runs the Carr Dyke, a vast artificial canal of Roman origin, extending through the fens (or Carrs) from Peterborough to Lincoln, with a total length of 56 miles.

Thurlby (2), or Thurlby-by-Newark, pa. and small vil., W. Lincs., 9 N.N.E. of Newark; ac. 1,802; the land is now in a good state of cultivation; part of it was formerly an open common or moor. The church of St. Germain (restored 1843) is Norm. and E. Eng. The charities are about £4 yearly, derived from land.

Thurlby (3), ha., pa. of Bilsby (q.v.), Mid Lincs., about 2 E. of Alford. It was formerly a pa., but of the church there are now no traces. T. Grange is a seat.

Thurlby-by-Bourn. [THURLBY (1).]

Thurlby-by-Newark. [THURLBY (2).]

Thurleigh, pa. and vil., N. Beds., 7 N. of Bedford; ac. 3,480; soil and subsoil clay. The church of St. Peter (restored 1882 and 1887) has a Norm. central tower, and contains a brass to John Harvey (probably 13th cent.) and a marble slab to John Harvey (d. 1715). Here is a Baptist chapel. The charities are small. There are moated earthworks, known as Bury Hill.

Thurles, pa., U. and mkt. to. (w. & s.), Eliogarty bar., Mid co. Tip., Ir., 29 N. of Clonmel; ac. 8,628. The to. is pleasantly situated on the Suir, along each bank of which it extends for about a mile. The main street, which is of considerable length, crosses the river at right angles from east to west; there are also other streets branching from this, with large and populous suburbs. The Templars are said to have founded a preceptory here, and possessed themselves of a castle, the latter erected in the early part of the 13th cent. A castle was subsequently built by James Butler, the first lord palatine of Tipperary, one of whose descendants (James, ninth Earl of Ormonde) in 1535 was created Viscount Thurles, and this now is the inferior title of the Marquess of Ormonde. The Protestant church, at the east end of the to., is a small building. T. is the seat of the Catholic archdiocese of Cashel and of the diocese of Cashel and Emly, and here is the Catholic cathedral. There are two convents near the church, in one of which a great number of poor girls are taught needlework and other useful branches of industry, as also reading and writing. In the Ursuline convent a high-class boarding school is carried on by the nuns. There is also an establishment of Christian Brothers, who have a large school. St. Patrick's Catholic College is exclusively devoted to the education of ecclesiastical students for the home and foreign missions. A parochial school and a fever hospital are the principal charitable institutions. An extensive retail trade and much country business is transacted, and the to. is surrounded by a rich, fertile, and populous country. Turf bogs, in detached situations, and extensive collieries furnish a good supply of fuel. Fairs are held on the first Tuesday in every month; and on Easter Monday, Aug. 21, and Dec. 21, when there is generally a good supply of stock and horses.

Thurlestone, pa. and vil. on the Avon, S.W. Dev., 4 W. of Kingsbridge; ac. 1,763 land, 135 water; soil loam, overlying stone rock. The church (dedication unknown), partly restored 1867, is Perp. and contains a curious pulpit, a Norm. font, a piscina in the chancel, and monuments of the Stevens family.

Thurlow, Great, pa. on the Stour, S. Suff., on the borders of Cambs., 4 N. of Haverhill; ac. 1,944; soil and subsoil clay. The church of All Saints (restored 1879) is E. Eng. Here is a Congregational chapel. The poor participate in some of the charities of Little T. and Great Wratting. A fair is held here on Oct. 11. During the prevalence of heavy rains a stream, tributary to the Stour, at the lower end of this vil., was in consequence occasionally flooded to such an extent as to render the passage of horses and vehicles quite impracticable, but an iron bridge has been erected, so that now, even during the highest floods, T. is an available thoroughfare for passengers between Bury and Haverhill. The Thurlow family derive their title from this pa.

Thurlow, Little, pa. on the Stour, adjoining Great Thurlow and with it forming one vil., S. Suff., 4½ N. by E. of Haverhill; ac. 1,358; soil and subsoil clay. The church of St. Peter is E. Eng.; on the north side of the chancel is a tablet to Stephen Soame, Esq. (1771), and a monument with granite pillars and marble tomb, on which are two recumbent figures in marble, representing Stephen Soame, Knight, Lord Mayor of London (1619), also Dame Ann, his widow (1622); and there are several modern tablets to the Soame family. Josiah Houghton in 1693 left 3 ac. of land and a house, called the Town House, for the use of the poor. The above-mentioned Sir Stephen Soame left an annuity of £30 for the support of a free school for the instruction of twelve boys; this sum is now devoted to scholarships; he also left £30 a year for the endowment of almshouses he had built for nine poor persons.

Thurloxton, pa. and vil., Mid Somerset, 5½ N.E. of Taunton; ac. 551; soil heavy sand and gravel, overlying sand and stonebrash. The church of St. Giles is an ancient building of local stone; the north aisle was added in 1868; the ancient pulpit is of oak, beautifully carved, and the screen, apparently Jacobean, is also of carved oak.

Thurlston (1). [THULSTON.]

Thurlston (2). [WHITTON-WITH-THURLSTON.]

Thurlstone, tp. and vil. on the Don, pa. of Penistone (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., 13 N.W. of Sheffield; ac. 7,740. Here are Congregational, Wesleyan, Baptist, and Primitive Methodist chapels. In the pa. are woollen cloth and wire factories, collieries, and gannister and fireclay works. Nicholas Saunders, mathematician, was born here in 1683.

Thurlton, pa. and vil., S.E. Norf., 4 E. of Loddon; ac. 1,170; soil mixed, overlying sand. The church of All Saints is a small E. Eng. thatched edifice; the carved oak screen is very fine, and there are some ancient monuments to the Denny family. Here is a Wesleyan chapel. The pa. land comprises 3 ac. The old pa. school is now used as a club and reading-room and for various parochial purposes.

Thurmaston, eccl. pa. and large vil. on the east bank of the Soar, pas. of Barkby and Belgrave (q.v.), E. Leics., 3 N.N.E. of Leicester, on the road to Melton Mowbray. The church of St. Michael is a building of rubble stone in Dec. style, and the Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have chapels. Most of the inhabitants are basket-makers, framework-knitters, and shoe hands. T. Hall is a seat.

Thurmaston, North, tp., pa. of Barkby (q.v.), E. Leics., about 3 N.N.E. of Leicester; ac. 528.

Thurmaston, South, tp., pa. of Belgrave (q.v.), E. Leics., about 2 N.E. of Leicester; ac. 1,234.

Thurnby, pa., tp., and vil., Mid Leics., 4 E. of Leicester; ac. of pa. 2,805, of tp. 614; soil sand and subsoil gravel. The church of St. Luke (rebuilt 1873) is Norm. and E. Eng. There are some small charities.

Thurne, or Thirne, pa. and small vil. on the Bure and Thurne, E. Norf., 11 N.W. of Yarmouth; ac. 660; soil mixed, overlying clay. The church of St. Edmund the King and Martyr is E. Eng., with western tower containing one bell said to date from the 14th cent. Here is a Primitive Methodist chapel. At the inclosure the poor had 16 ac. awarded to them, now let for £12, and there are also 20 ac. on which they may graze their cattle by paying a yearly sum; the money thus raised is distributed in coals. There is a reading and coffee room.

Thurnham (1), tp., pas. of Lancaster and Cockerham (q.v.), N. Lancs., 5 S. of Lancaster; ac. 2,095. Here is a Roman Catholic chapel and endowed school. T. Hall is a seat.

Thurnham (2). [THORNHAM.]

Thurning (1), pa. and vil., S. Hunts., extending into Northants, 5 S.E. of Oundle; ac. 1,000; soil of a clayey nature, overlying strong clay. The church of St. James is a very interesting building, originally Norm. and E. Eng.; the whole structure, with the exception of the arcades of the nave and the chancel, was taken down in 1880 and rebuilt as nearly as possible in accordance with the previous design. Wells' charity of £1 yearly is for fuel.

Thurning (2), pa. of scattered houses, N. Norf., 7½ N.W. of Aylsham; ac. 1,560; soil mixed, overlying clay and sand. The church of St. Andrew is Perp. T. Hall is a mansion situated on rising ground surrounded by trees, and commands a very fine view; the Thurne, which flows through the park, expands into a lake within it. Some curious flint hatchet-heads and other antiquities have been dug up in the grounds.

Thurnscoe, pa. and vil., W.R. Yorks., 8 W. of Doncaster; ac. 1,693; soil clay and loam, overlying sandstone shale. The church of St. Helen, originally Norm., was (with the exception of the tower) rebuilt in 1888; there is an inscribed stone to a Vavasour (d. 1443). There are almshouses founded in 1713.

Thurrock, Little, or East, pa. and vil. near the Thames, S. Essex, 2 N.W. of Tilbury Fort; ac. 1,347 land, 161 water; soil and subsoil clay. The church of St. Mary (restored 1879) is E. Eng., and contains a curious wall painting. The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel. There are some dam holes and some remarkable caverns, known as Cunobelin's Gold Mines.

Thurrock, West, pa. and vil. on the Thames, S. Essex, 3 E. of Purfleet; ac. 2,995 land, 710 water; soil loam, overlying chalk. The church of St. Clement is of various periods from E. Eng. to Perp.; in the north chantry are the effigies of Sir Daniel Holford and his lady; there is a brass to Humphrey Heies (d. 1584), and some other ancient memorials. Here is a Primitive Methodist chapel. Cement is manufactured here.

Thursby, pa. and vil., N. Cumb., 6 S.W. of Carlisle; ac. of pa. 3,142; soil and subsoil mixed. The church of St. Andrew was built 1846 in E. Eng. style, on the site of a former building; it contains several monuments to members of the Brisco family. There are several charities. Crofton Hall is a seat.

Thurscross. [THRUSCROSS.]

Thursford, pa. and vil., N. Norf., 5 N.E. of Fakenham; ac. 1,350; soil mixed, overlying clay and gravel. The church of St. Andrew (restored 1872) is E. Eng. There are some small charities. T. Hall is a seat.

Thurshelton. [THRUSHELTON.]

Thursley, pa. and vil., S.W. Surrey, 5 S.W. of Godalming; ac. 4,353; soil light. The church of St. Michael is E. Eng. and Perp., with a wooden tower and spire; there are remains of Norm. work, to which period the font belongs. The Congregationalists have a chapel, and there are several charities. The Devil's Punch Bowl (q.v.) is in this pa. T. Hall is a seat.

Thurso (1), pa., seaport, and mkt. to. (F.), situate on the bay of same name, N. Caiths., Sc., about 20 N.W. of Wick; ac. 28,049; soil chiefly clay and loam, overlying sandstone or clay-slate. The bay, sheltered from the north-east by Dunnet Head and to the west by Holburn Head, is commodious, but unfortunately runs very shallow close to the to., so that the larger vessels and steamers have to discharge and load in Scrabster Roads, about 2 miles down the west side of the bay. The to. is situated on the left bank of the Thurso river, which is famed for the large quantities of salmon occasionally taken. Near the harbour are the ruins of the church of St. Peter, built about the 14th cent., and ½ N.W. are the remains of the old palace of the bishops, destroyed by fire in 1222, when the bishop was burnt by the populace because he had displeased them in reference to tithes. The places of worship are the pa. church, two Free churches, and chapels for the Original Seceders, Reformed Presbyterians, and Independents, and St. Peter's Episcopal Church. The church of the Establishment is a Gothic structure with a tower and clock. The first Free church is conspicuous for its fine architecture. There are public and Free church schools, well attended. At the top of Sinclair Street is an endowed institution, erected for affording education to boys. The public free library, in the town hall, was opened in 1872. Dunbar's Hospital contains twelve beds for incurable persons who have not been in receipt of parochial relief; there are also six cottages adjoining for the accommodation of twelve aged persons who have been in better circumstances, preference being given to natives of T. There is a trade carried on in May and June in connection with the herring fishery, but the boats employed are not on a separate register, but come under that of Wick. The main export of the place consists of "Caithness pavement," an article in great demand, the manufacture of which is carried on to a great extent and contributes to the prosperity of the place; the peculiar excellence belonging to this staple is its durability, its resistance of moisture, and its retention of an unbroken surface; specimens may be seen in the Houses of Parliament, London, and many public buildings throughout the United Kingdom. A cattle market is held on the second and fourth Wednesday of each month, and the annual fairs on the second Tuesday in July and first Friday in September. Robert Dick (1811–66), an eminent botanist and geologist, was a resident of this to., and his collection of specimens now forms an important part of the T. Museum. Scrabster House and T. Court, which has been greatly enlarged and modernised, are seats.

Thurso (2), river, Caiths., Sc. It rises in the south-west of the pa. of Halkirk (q.v.) and, after a winding course of about 27 miles in a general northerly direction, falls into T. Bay. It passes the to. of Halkirk, and T. is situated at its mouth. The name is Norse, and signifies "Thor's river."

Thurton, pa. and vil., S. Norf., 7½ S.E. of Norwich; ac. 771; soil light mixed, overlying sand and gravel. The church of St. Ethelbert (restored 1889) is E. Eng. The fuel allotment is let at £3 yearly, and the poor have 20s. yearly in money. Roman coins were found here in 1707.

Thurvaston, ha., pa. of Sutton-on-the-Hill (q.v.), S. Derbys., 1 W. of Trusley.

Thuxton, or Thurston, scattered pa. on the Yare, Mid Norf., 5½ S. by E. of Dereham; ac. 1,797; soil mixed, overlying principally clay. The church of St. Paul belongs to the E. and Late Eng. periods; three 16th-cent. brasses were recovered and replaced in the chancel in 1868.

Thwaite (1), pa. and vil., N.E. Suff., 5 S.W. of Eye; ac. 832; soil mixed, overlying clay. The church of St. George (restored 1871) is a small ancient flint structure; the pulpit is a most interesting specimen of carved oak, and dates from the 14th cent.

Thwaite (2), pa. and vil., S. Norf., 12 S.E. of Norwich; ac. 676; soil heavy clay, overlying clay. The church of St. Mary (restored 1861) is a small Norm. edifice with thatched roof, and a western tower containing two bells; there is a Norm. doorway, with semi-circular head.

Thwaite (3), vil., pa. of and 1½ W. from Muker (q.v.), N.R. Yorks. Here is a Congregational chapel. A fair for sheep and lambs is held in Oct.

Thwaite All Saints, pa. and vil., N. Norf., 4½ N. of Aylsham; ac. 676; soil mixed, overlying brick earth. The church of All Saints is E. Eng.; the south aisle, formerly a chapel dedicated to St. John the Baptist, retains a piscina; the altar was removed by the commission of King Edward VI.

Thwing, pa. and vil., E.R. Yorks., 8½ W. by N. of Bridlington; ac. 4,024; soil light and chalky, overlying chalk. The church of All Saints is E. Eng.; there is a marble tablet on the south wall in memory of Thomas Lamplugh, Bishop of Exeter (1676–88) and Archbishop of York (1688–91), who was born here in 1615, and died 1691; in the sacrarium is a monument with recumbent effigy to Thomas, last Baron de Thweng and rector of Lytham, who died in 1374, when the barony fell into abeyance. The parochial school, erected in 1835, is used as a mission room; and there are Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist chapels. In the vicinity of Wold Cottage, about 2 miles from T., an extraordinary natural phenomenon occurred on Dec. 13, 1795, when an aerolite, weighing 56 lbs., fell and partly buried itself in the ground. An obelisk marks the spot, and a portion of the stone is now in the British Museum.

situated in the pa. of Winfarthing, produces £40 yearly; almshouses have been erected out of the surplus rents. Here was formerly three guilds, with a common guildhall, which possessed lands, and at the Dissolution were seized by the Crown in 1560, which held them until 1609.

Tiberton, pa. and vil., W. Herefords., 9 w. of Hereford; ac. 1,126; soil sand, overlying sandstone rock. The church of St. Mary was built in 1720 and retains a fine Norm. arch from an older building; there are several memorials of the Brydges and Lee-Warner families. T. Court is a seat.

Tibohine, pa., Frenchpark bar., N. co. Roscom., Ir., 5 N. of Castlereagh; ac. 44,092. It contains the to. of Frenchpark and the vil. of Loughglinn (q.v.). Caher House and Errit Lodge are seats.

Tibshelf, pa. and vil., E. Derbys., 7 S.S.E. of Chesterfield; ac. 2,371; soil loam and clay, overlying clay. The church of St. John the Baptist (partly rebuilt 1729 and 1888) has a Perp. tower; on a flagstone is a brass inscription to John Twentiman (d. 1688). Here are Wesleyan, Primitive Methodist and Free Methodist chapels. There are extensive collieries.

Tibthorpe, tp., pa. of Kirkburn (q.v.), E.R. Yorks., 5 S.W. of Driffield; ac. 2,885. There is a Wesleyan chapel.

Ticehurst, pa. and large vil., and head of a U., E. Sussex, about 10 S.E. of Tunbridge Wells, on the road to Battle; ac. 8,202; soil mostly clay, overlying sandstone. The church of St. Mary (restored 1857) is chiefly Perp.; in the chancel and chantries are three piscinæ; a brass (dated 1490) with effigies to John Wybarne and his two wives was discovered in 1855, and is in good preservation; a curious old oak door with a massive lock, opening into the parvise over the north porch, now serving as a vestry, was disclosed during the restoration; the north-east window retains portions of ancient stained glass. Here are Wesleyan and Calvinistic chapels. Annual fairs are held on May 4 and Oct. 7, the former for cattle and the latter a pleasure fair. Here is a home, established by the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. The charities amount to about £30 a year. In the pa. is a large private asylum of the first class for the insane. Pashley House, built in the reign of James I., Pickforde, and Whiligh are seats.

Tichbarrow Beacon. [LESNEWTH.]

Tichborne, pa. and vil. on the Itchen, E. Hants, about 6 N.E. of Winchester; ac. 3,055; soil clay and chalk, overlying chalk. The church of St. Andrew is an ancient Gothic building of flints, except the tower, which is of brick. It contains several tombs of the Tichborne family; one of these, of the date of 1621, has two recumbent effigies. T. Park, a seat, is pleasantly situated on the banks of the Itchen, and surrounded by a well-timbered park; the mansion was erected in the beginning of the 19th cent. in place of the old house, which is known to have existed as early as the time of Henry III. A Catholic chapel is attached to the house. The title and estates were claimed by a man who pretended to be Roger Tichborne, who had been lost at sea. The legal proceedings which resulted lasted from 1872 to 1874, when the claimant was convicted of perjury and sentenced to fourteen years' penal servitude.

Tichmarsh. [TITCHMARSH.]

Tickencote, pa. and vil., E. Rutld., 10 E. of Oakham; ac. 1,293; soil and subsoil red loam and limestone. The church of St. Peter (rebuilt 1782) was originally Norm.; over the chancel is a priest's chamber; the chancel arch is a fine example of Late Norm.; in the chancel is an ancient monument supposed to represent Sir Rowland Daneys (d. 1362); the communion table, presented in 1627, is a good specimen of Jacobean work. T. Hall is a seat.

Tickenhall. [TICKNALL.]

Tickenham, pa. and vil., N. Somerset, 10 W. of Bristol; ac. 1,627; soil various. The church of SS. Quiricus and Julietta is of different periods, the chancel arch being E. Norm., the arcade E. Dec., the windows of the aisles and their parapets Perp., and the font E. Eng. The north aisle contains three curious recumbent figures, the first two, dating from the 12th cent., being apparently Crusaders, and the third the effigy of a lady in a wimple, wearing a very long robe. The Brethren have a small chapel. Cadbury Barrow, on the summit of a hill in this pa., is supposed to have been a Roman encampment. From this hill a good view of the Bristol Channel may be obtained.

Tickenhurst, ha., pa. of Northbourne (q.v.), E. Kent, 1 N.W. of Eastry.

Tickford Abbey. [NEWPORT PAGNELL.]

Tickhill, pa., tp., and to., W.R. Yorks., on the borders of Notts., 7 S. of Doncaster; ac. of pa. 6,779, of tp. 5,336; soil limestone, clay, sand, and peat, overlying limestone and sand. The church of St. Mary is chiefly Perp.; the basement of the tower bears evidence of its having formed part of an earlier erection, but the church, as it now stands, was built by William de Estfield about the year 1360; there is an altar-tomb, apparently not in its original position, with a Latin inscription to William de Estfield (d. 1386); some 14th-cent. glass is still preserved in two windows in the south aisle, and the font is also ancient. There is a Wesleyan chapel. In Northgate are some remains of St. Leonard's Hospital, founded before 1225, and near the church is an ancient almshouse, called the Maison de Dieu, for fourteen poor people, eight of whom share in an annual endowment of £60, derived from land, the remaining six being supported by Lord Scarbrough. The poor parishioners have about £12 a year. The Conservative Club (1881) has reading and billiard rooms. A fair is held on the second Friday in October for cattle and wares. The market cross was erected in 1776. Here are the remains of an Augustinian priory, founded by Eleanor, queen of Henry III.; the foundations of the keep of T. Castle, a structure resembling Conisburgh, and fragments of the walls. The Friary, an ancient Tudor house in a retired valley west of the to., is a seat.

Tickmacrevan, pa. on the Glenarm, Glenarm Lower bar., E. co. Antr., Ir., about 15 N.W. of Larne; ac. 20,511. It contains the seaport town of Glenarm (q.v.).

Ticknall, pa. and vil., S. Derbys., 9 S. of Derby; ac. 2,639; soil gravel, overlying clay. A few fragments of the Dec. chapel of St. Thomas à Becket remain. The present church of St. George (rebuilt 1842) is in Perp. style; it contains a slab to John Franceys (c. 1360), a monument to Rachel Hanson (1636), and an effigy, probably that of William Francis. Here are Wesleyan and Baptist chapels and a parish room. There is a hospital, founded in 1771, and an endowed school. Lime is burnt.

Tickton with Hull Bridge, tp., pa. of Beverley St. John (q.v.), E.R. Yorks., about 2½ N.E. of Beverley, on the road to Bridlington; ac. 779. Here is a chapel-of-ease and a Wesleyan chapel. T. Grange and T. Hall, a modern gabled mansion, are seats.

Tidcombe, pa., S. Wilts., 7 S.W. of Hungerford; ac. 2,251; soil very light, overlying chalk. The church of St. Michael (restored 1880–82) is a small plain 13th-cent. structure. There are charities of £6 yearly for fuel and clothing.

Tidcombe Portion, one of the five portions into which the pa. of Tiverton (q.v.), N.E. Dev., was divided in the 13th cent.

Tiddington (1), tp. and vil., pa. of Albury (q.v.), S. Oxon., about 4 W. of Thame; ac. 447. T. House is a seat.

Tiddington (2), ha., pa. of and 1½ S.W. from Alveston (q.v.), S.W. Warws. A quantity of old Roman coins has been found here.

Tidebrook, eccl. pa., pas. of Wadhurst and Mayfield (q.v.), E. Sussex, 2½ S.W. of Wadhurst. The church of St. John the Baptist (1856) is modern Gothic.

Tideford, eccl. pa. and vil., pa. of and 2 S. from St. Germans (q.v.), E. Cornw. The church of St. Luke was built 1845 in E. Eng. style. Here is a Wesleyan chapel.

Tidenham, pa. and vil. on the Severn and Wye, W. Glouc., 2½ N.E. of Chepstow; ac. 5,858 land, 3,310 water; soil loam, overlying limestone. The church of St. Mary is E. Eng. and Dec., the font is Norm. St. Luke's and St. Michael and All Angels are chapels-of-ease. Here is a Wesleyan chapel. There is a small charity. Pen Moel House, Sedbury Park, and T. House are seats.

Tideswell, pa., tp., and small mkt. to., N. Derbys., 6½ E. of Buxton; ac. of pa. 10,440, of tp. 3,160; soil loamy and light, overlying limestone. The church of St. John the Baptist (restored) belongs almost exclusively to the Dec. period; the chancel has three stone sedilia and a crocketed piscina, and on the north side are two low arches; the ancient stone reredos extends completely across the east end and has a door on the north side leading to the sacristy; the innermost bay of the south transepts was anciently the "Meveril" or, as it is now called, "De Bower Chapel"; in its south wall is a high canopied niche, with a piscina beneath it; the adjoining chapel, being a continuation of the south aisle, belonged to the manor of Litton or Lytton and to the family of that name; both these, as well as the other chapel in the north transept, being once enclosed by a wooden parclose; the portion of the north transept corresponding with the Litton Chapel appears to have belonged to the manor of Wheston, the transept proper forming the Lady Chapel or Guild Chapel, and having a piscina in the eastern wall; an ancient stone pulpit, or more probably some access to the chancel screen, was removed in 1824; the beams and principals of the nave and transept roofs are part of the original roof of the Dec. period; the rest has been carefully renewed in oak and the whole covered with lead; the earliest monuments in the church are two effigies in the north transept, both females, and probably of the 14th cent.; on the north side of the chancel is a slab with the effigy in brass of Sir Thomas Foljambe (d. 1358), with arms and inscription; in the south transept is a large raised tomb of stone and alabaster, with effigies to Sir Thurstan de Bower and Margaret his wife; the figures are in the costume of the 14th cent.; in the centre of the chancel is a large altar tomb to Sir Sampson Meverell (d. 1462), the upper slab of Purbeck marble bearing a variety of symbolical brasses with inscriptions and an inscribed marginal ribbon of brass, comprising a biography of the knight; the lower portion of the tomb is open and contains the effigy of an emaciated corpse, carved in stone, with angels supporting the head; on the floor of the Litton Chapel is a brass to Sir Robert Lytton and his wife Isabella, with an inscription (1458–83). West of the Foljambe tomb is the fine brass of Robert Pursglove or Silvester, prior of Gisburne, suffragan bishop of Hull in 1538, and founder of T. Grammar School (d. 1579). The figure is in eucharistic vestments. In the pa. are Catholic and Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist chapels. The Grammar School was reorganised in 1876 and reopened in 1879, after having been closed since 1872. The inhabitants are partly employed in agriculture, some in weaving, and others in the neighbouring cotton mills and stone quarrying. Limekilns, lead mines, and stone quarries are in the neighbourhood. A market, to be held on Wednesday, was granted as early as 1250, a cattle market being held the second Wednesday in every month, and fairs on March 24, May 15, last Wednesday in July, second Wednesday in Sept., and Oct. 29, for cattle, horses and sheep. The charities amount to about £150 a year. The to. is considered extremely healthy, and is seated in a valley nearly surrounded by bleak and naked hills, with a clear stream of water running through it, furnished by the overflow of the reservoir. The ebbing and flowing well, from which it is asserted the to. took its name, is still in existence, but has long ceased to ebb. Upon the summit of the hill near the to. is a stone of rude workmanship, embedded in the earth, with a deep socket, in which a cross was inserted. In the vicinity is Monsal Dale (q.v.). Eccles Hall is a seat.

Tidmarsh, pa. and vil., Mid Berks., 7 W. of Reading; ac. 785; soil peat, overlying chalk and gravel. The church of St. Laurence is E. Eng., with a fine Norm. doorway, an octagonal apse, and a remarkable triple 13th-cent. west window; there are brasses of a knight (c. 1530) and of Margaret Wode. The charities are small. T. Manor and T. Grange are seats.

Tidmington, small pa. on the Stour, E. Worcs., in a detached portion of the co., 1½ S. of Shipston-on-Stour; ac. 756; soil stiff loam, overlying clay. The church (dedication unknown) is Norm.; it was restored in 1874.

Tidpit, ha., pa. of and a little S. from Martin (q.v.), S. Wilts.

Tidworth, North, pa. and vil., S. Wilts., on the Hants border, 9 W. by N. of Andover; ac. 3,081; soil light, overlying chalk. The church of the Holy Trinity (restored 1882) dates from about 1490; the tower, however, shows some earlier work, of the date of about 1360; the font is apparently Norm.; there is a brass to the memory of the Rev. Thomas Pierce, who was ejected from his fellowship at Magdalen College in 1648, and afterwards became Dean of Salisbury. There are almshouses for four persons (male or female), who receive 2s. each weekly.

Tidworth (or Tedworth), South, pa., W. Hants, about 9 N.W. of Andover; ac. 2,178; soil light loam, overlying chalk. The church of St. Mary the Virgin is in E. Eng. style; the old church is now used as a mortuary chapel. In the pa. are the kennels of the Tedworth Hunt. Tedworth House, a large and handsome mansion, was built by T. Assheton Smith (d. 1858); it stands in a finely-wooded park of about 500 ac.

Tiel, or Tiel Burn, stream, S.E. Fifes., Sc., rises under the Cullala Hills, on the borders of the pas. of Aberdour and Auchtertool, and, after a course of about 10 miles in a general easterly direction, falls into the Firth of Forth at Linktown.

Tilbury Docks, the deep-water docks of the East and West India Dock Company, locally in the pa. of Chadwell St. Mary (q.v.), S.E. Essex, opened April 17, 1886, are the finest deep-water docks in the kingdom. For the accomplishment of this great work the company acquired in 1882 an area of 460 ac. of land, of which about 100 ac. are occupied by the docks and their accessories. The docks include a tidal basin 19½ ac. in extent, with a width at the entrance of 300 ft.; a depth at low-water springs of 26 ft., and at ordinary high-water springs of 45 ft., so that the largest ships, whether discharging or loading, can enter or leave at any state of the tide; the other principal sections comprise a main dock of 23 ac.; three branch docks, covering together an area of 29½ ac.; lock and graving and coaling docks, together about 8 ac. There are six arrival and departure quays, a transhipment quay for the use of Continental steamers, and a coaling jetty at the south-western quay of the tidal basin, fitted with hydraulic cranes for discharging coal from colliers into barges and railway trucks. On the south quay is a waiting-room for the convenience of passengers, and a customs examination room, and a large hotel has been erected. There is a floating steam crane for lifting and shipping heavy weights, but the travelling cranes for shunting railway trucks, and the gate and sluice machinery and capstans, are all worked by hydraulic power; within the dock boundaries are about 30 miles of railway sidings, and the electric light is extensively used. The Great Eastern, Great Northern, Great Western, London and North-Western, and Midland Railways have inquiry offices and run goods here.

Tilbury, East, pa. on the banks of the Thames, S.E. Essex, 6 E. of Grays; ac. 2,113 and 1,196 water. The church of St. Katherine, formerly dedicated to St. Margaret, is Trans. Norm. and E. Eng.; the lofty stone tower of the church is said to have been battered down by the Dutch fleet in 1667. In the chancel, which retains a piscina, is a tomb to Sir Henry Knight, another inscribed to John Rawlinse (d. 1698), and a brass to William de Bordfield. Here is a Wesleyan chapel. Coalhouse Fort is a strongly fortified place on the north bank of the Thames, 3 miles from Tilbury, and forms a triangle with the Shornmead and Cliff forts on the opposite side of the river. Additional fortifications on higher ground command a more extensive range over the sea reach. This place was sometime the seat of St. Chad, or Ceadda, Bishop of York in 666, and in the next year Bishop of Lichfield, whose reputed stone coffin lies in the churchyard. Here are also the remains of some earthworks and also of the old sea wall.

Tilbury Fort. [TILBURY, WEST.]

Tilbury-juxta-Clare, pa., N. Essex, 3½ S.W. of Clare; ac. 953; soil clay, overlying chalk and gravel. The church (dedication unknown) is Perp., erected in 1517, possibly by the de Vere family, whose arms appear on the fabric. T. Court and T. Hall, an ancient moated house formerly belonging to the Morningtons, are seats.

Tilbury, West, pa. and vil., S.E. Essex, 4 E. of Grays; ac. 1,690 and 262 water; soil loamy, overlying gravel. The church of St. James (restored 1880) is in E. Eng. style; the church is said to have been despoiled in 1648 by the troopers of Lord Fairfax, when on their way to the siege of Colchester, the edifice being, for the time, turned into a stable. Here is a Wesleyan chapel. According to Bede, this was the seat of a monastery, founded in 630, under Sigebert, King of the East Saxons, by St. Chad, or Ceadda, Bishop of York in 666 and of Lichfield in 667. Archbishop Laud was rector of this place in 1615. T. Fort is distant 2 miles from the vil. of West T., on the ferry over the Thames above Hope Point, opposite Gravesend, and was a blockhouse, built by Henry VIII. Here in 1588 Queen Elizabeth reviewed the army, amounting to 17,000 men, raised to meet the Spanish Armada; it was afterwards converted into a regular fortification by Charles II. from plans by Sir Bernard de Gomme, engineer-general, and is now heavily armed. The chapel in T. Fort, which occupies the site of the ancient West Lee chapel, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen and used for many years as a billiard and reading room, has been restored to its original use by the Rev. R. H. Killick, M.A., rector of Chadwell (1869-79). The officers' quarters are in this pa. and the men's quarters are in that of Chadwell St. Mary (q.v.). Extensive military works have also been erected both here and at East T.

Tilehurst, pa. and vil. on the Kennet, S. Berks., 2½ W. of Reading; ac. 4,750 and 15 water; soil light loam and gravel, overlying gravel. The church of St. Michael, originally Dec., was almost rebuilt in 1856. There are Congregational and Wesleyan chapels, and a village hall. The kennels of the South Berks. Foxhounds are in the pa. There are almshouses for six poor women, and a convalescent home. Calcot Park is a seat, with a deer park.

Tilehurst St. George, eccl. pa., pa. of Tilehurst (q.v.), S. Berks., within the bor. of Reading. The church of St. George, in E. Eng. style, is the military church for the regiments quartered at Reading.

Tiley, ha., pa. of Minterne Magna (q.v.), Mid Dors., 2 N. of Cerne Abbas.

Tilford, eccl. pa. (extending into the pa. of Waverley) and vil. on the Wey, pa. of and 3 S.E. from Farnham (q.v.), S.W. Surrey. The church of All Saints is in Gothic style, and contains a memorial reredos to Charlotte Smith, the poetess. An old oak on the green is believed to be the "King's Oak" mentioned in the Charter of Waverley Abbey. Green Hills and T. House are seats.

more than a mile long and about ¾ mile broad. It consists chiefly of copses and heath-clad wastes, but in some places the old forest trees remain. Here was originally the delta of a large river, and fossils of palms, tree-ferns, and prehistoric monsters (such as the Iguanodon and the Hylæosaurus) have been found. A rare lichen is also found in damp spots. Tilgate is a seat on the north side of the forest.

Till (1), river, N. Northumb., rises in the Cheviots and runs E. under the name of Breamish through the pas. of Ingram and Eglingham, turning N. after it has passed between Brandon and Branton. The T. then runs between Old and New Bewick and a little to the west of Chillingham Park, as far as Chatton, where it turns W., flowing by Tillicoultry, pa. and to., E. Clacks., Sc., 5 N.E. of Alloa; ac. 6,946. The Devon river winds along the north border of and through the pa. The pa. abounds in coal, and the hills to the northward are said to contain various kinds of minerals; about a century ago a copper mine here was wrought by a London company, but from the thinness of the seams the works were abandoned as unprofitable. The to. is rapidly rising into a place of considerable importance from the woollen manufactures established here, and likewise at Devonside, chiefly for making shawls, fancy plaids, clan tartans, tweeds, etc.; in these branches the to. and its neighbourhood furnish employment to a large number of the inhabitants. The places of worship include a church of the Establishment, a Free church, a United Presbyterian church, one belonging to a congregation of the Evangelical Union, and one for the Congregationalists. The pa. church is almost a square building, situated on rising ground at the east end of the to.; it is in the Gothic style. The other public buildings are the Popular Institute and the Orphanage. The principal antiquities are the ruins of a circular building on a steep and rugged basaltic eminence which rises to the north of the to., and the remains of a stone circle lying to the east of it, called Cuninghar. Funeral urns have been discovered.

Tillingham, pa. and large vil., S.E. Essex, 14 E.S.E. of Maldon; ac. 4,646 and 3,788 water and foreshore. The vil. is pleasantly situated about 3 miles from the German Ocean, but the pa. extends to its borders. The church of St. Nicholas, which stands in the centre of the vil., upon a fine open space, is E. Eng. and Perp.; the piscina and sedilia are still intact, and the font is a beautiful specimen of early work; there are brasses to Edward Wiot (d. 1584), to Lady Margaret Wyott (d. 1526), and John Wakeman (d. 1584). There are Baptist, Congregational and Primitive Methodist chapels, and a place of worship for the Peculiar People. The charities amount to about £18 yearly. The manor and tithes of this place were given by Ethelbert (550–616) to the Cathedral of St. Paul.

Tillington (1), pa. and vil., N.W. Sussex, 1 W. of Petworth; ac. 3,791; soil, principally rich loam, but a little clay in parts, overlying gravel and sandstone. The church of All Hallows, occupying the site of an earlier structure erected in the 12th cent., is E. Eng., and has several ancient brasses and some fine monuments; the royal arms in this church bear date 1661, and have the initials C.R. There are two almshouses for aged labourers (founded 1840), and a small charity. Pitshill is a seat.

Tillington (2), pa., W. Staffs., adjoining the to. of Stafford on the N.; ac. 1,226 and 10 water.

Tilmanstone, pa. and vil., E. Kent, 5 S.W. of Sandwich; ac. 1,149; soil and subsoil chalk. The church of St. Andrew (restored 1884) is Norm. and E. Eng., and contains several monuments to the Hatton and Rice families, and a brass to Richard Fogg (1598). Here is a Wesleyan chapel. Dane Court is a seat.

Tilney All Saints, pa. and vil., N.W. Norf., 5 W.S.W. of Lynn; ac. 2,750; soil loam and silt, overlying clay. The church of All Saints is a spacious edifice of the Trans. Norm. and later periods. Here is a Wesleyan chapel. The pa. charities produce about £25 yearly, and church charities, for maintaining the fabric and for current expenses, produce about £22 yearly. The Islington Lodge Estate, reclaimed from the Ouse in 1821, extends into this pa.

Tilney St. Lawrence, pa. and vil., N.W. Norf., 6½ S.W. of Lynn; ac. 3,377; soil loamy, overlying clay. The church of St. Lawrence (restored 1846) is E. Eng. Here is a Primitive Methodist chapel. Stallet's charity of £2 yearly is given to the poor. John Aylmer, D.D., born at Aylmer Hall in this pa. in 1521, was chaplain to Henry Grey, Duke of Suffolk, K.G., and tutor to his daughter, Lady Jane Grey; in 1577 he was appointed to the Bishopric of London, which he held till his death, June 3, 1594.

Tilney-with-Islington, straggling pa. and vil., N.W. Norf., 5 W.S.W. of Lynn; ac. 1,651; soil loamy and clayey, overlying sand. The church of St. Mary is E. Eng. A great portion of the pa. is fen and is drained by steam power. Islington Hall and Islington Lodge are seats.

Tilshead, pa. and vil., E. Wilts., 10 S. by E. of Devizes, on the road to Amesbury; ac. 3,765; soil mixed with flints, overlying chalk. The church of St. Thomas à Becket is Norm.; the nave arcade has massive square piers said to be Saxon; a Dec. piscina in the south aisle seems to indicate the existence of a chantry chapel here. A Baptist chapel was erected here in 1882. The rent of two cottages, built from a fund subscribed to repair the losses sustained by the poor by a great flood in January, 1841, is distributed to the poor of this and five neighbouring pas. on the anniversary of the occurrence. Here is the embankment called Old Ditch, and several barrows.

Tilstock, eccl. pa., pas. of Prees and Whitchurch (q.v.), N. Salop, 3 N. of Prees. Christ Church was built in 1835. There are Wesleyan and Congregational chapels.

Tilston, pa., tp., and vil., S. Chesh., 12 S.E. of Chester; ac. of pa. 3,769, of tp. 799; soil clay, overlying marl. The church of St. Mary (rebuilt 1875) contains memorials to James Richardson (d. 1773) and Edward Wright (d. 1659). Here are Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist chapels. The charities are small, but the schools are endowed.

Tilstone, eccl. pa., pa. of Bunbury (q.v.), S. Chesh., 10 S.E. of Chester. The church of St. Jude was built 1830 in E. Eng. style.

Tilstone Fearnall, tp. and vil., pa. of Bunbury (q.v.), S. Chesh., 10 S.E. of Chester; ac. 860. Tilston Lodge is a seat.

Tilsworth, pa. and vil., S. Beds., 3½ W.N.W. of Dunstable; ac. 1,213; soil clayey, subsoil various. The church of All Saints is Dec. and Perp.; in the chancel is a sepulchral recess with a low altar-tomb bearing the effigy of a priest, tombs to Gabriel Fowler and Sir Henry Chester; near the south door is a stone slab to Adam de Tullesworth, and an ancient tablet to Mary Willowbi. There is a small charity. The Manor farmhouse, standing on the site of the old manor-house, is moated and retains some interesting architectural remains.

Tilt, stream, N. Perths., Sc., issues from Loch Tilt (q.v.), and runs about 15 miles S.W. to the Garry, which it joins at the vil. of Blair Athole. Glen Tilt is a deep, narrow, but very picturesque ravine, the river being joined in its course by many impetuous mountain streams, and forming several fine waterfalls. Trout are very plentiful.

Tilt, Bridge of, vil., forming part of vil. of Blair Athole, pa. of Blair Athole (q.v.), N. Perths., Sc. Fairs are held here in June and Sept.

Tiltinbane, mountain (1,949 ft.), Tullyhaw bar., N.W. co. Cav., Ir., on the borders of co. Ferm.

of E. Eng., is a decagon with clustered shafts; there is a brass on the south chancel wall to Robert Hogeson, Esq. (1611); in the south transept is a rich carved canopy; in the north aisle is a small chapel with piscina, and in the chancel is a stone slab inscribed to Johanna, wife of Alexander Read (1629). There is a club-room, erected in 1858, and used as a reading-room and for entertainments. T. Manor, an ancient building in a park of about 120 ac., ornamented by a sheet of water, is a seat.

Tingwall (= "Plain of the Thing"), pa., Mainland, S. Shetland, Sc., 3 N.W. of Lerwick; ac. 23,204; soil in places dark loam, elsewhere light brown earth, partly overlying limestone or clay. The pa. forms the central part of Mainland, and has a long seaboard both on its east and west sides, the voes, which afford good harbourage, penetrating far inland. It is divided into two sections by a ridge running north and south, and much of the surface consists of mountain pasture. T. is so called because the principal "Thing," or Court of Justice, was held here during the Norse occupation; an islet called Lawting, in one of the lochs, marks the spot where the meeting took place. On an islet in another loch are some remains of a fortress which is said to have belonged to a son of one of the Jarls of Orkney, by whom he was put to death. There are also several tumuli. T. contains two Established churches and a Free church.

Tinnahinch (1), bar., N.W. Q. Co., Ir.; ac. 54,187. It is bounded on the west and north by K. Co., on the east by K. Co. and Portnahinch bar., and on the south by Maryborough West and Upper Woods bars. Part of the Slieve Bloom mountain range lies within this bar.

Tinnahinch (2), vil., pa. of St. Mullin's (q.v.), S. co. Carl., Ir., about 5 S.W. of Borris railway station. T. forms a sub. of Graigue, with which it is connected by a bridge over the Barrow. [GRAIGUE (1).]

Tinsley, eccl. pa., tp., and vil. on the Don, pa. of Rotherham (q.v.), W.R. Yorks., 3½ N.E. of Sheffield; ac. 1,570. The church of St. Lawrence (rebuilt 1879) is in Gothic style. Here are collieries, iron, steel, and wire works.

Tintagel, coast pa. and vil., W. Cornw., 6 N.W. of Camelford; ac. 4,350; soil light, overlying stone. T. was a bor. from an early period, and returned two members to Parliament from 1552 to 1832, when it was disfranchised. The church of St. Symphorian, on a hill overlooking the sea, is Norm. and Perp.; in the south transept is a stone coffin lid with a floriated cross, and above it the head of a priest. Near it is a 15th-cent. brass with half effigy and inscription to Joan, the mother of John Kelly; on the south side of the chancel is a piscina and an Easter sepulchre, enclosing a low raised tomb; on the north side is an aumbry. The reredos is formed out of ancient bench ends; the chapel, a work of the Trans. period, retains its original stone altar, and on each side are wall brackets; in the north transept one of the windows exhibits a niche and a bracket, and here also is a squint, now closed; the west and south sides and part of the east side of the south transept have a stone bench running along them. The font is E. Norm. There are Wesleyan and Bible Christian chapels. A fair for cattle is held on the Monday following Oct. 18. Here are some small quarries. The ruins of T. Castle, the reputed birthplace of the renowned King Arthur, and the subject of legendary history and the scene of heroic fiction and romance, are situated a little distance north of the church, on a neck of land uniting the peninsula of T. Head to the mainland. The walls now standing, of rubble grouted with extremely hard mortar, are much worn, but there are existing fragments apparently of Norm. character, and the original coping remains; the structure generally, however, is a work of the early 13th cent., and although its plan, owing to landslips caused by the fury of the sea, cannot now be determined, enough is left to be of considerable interest. The portion on the mainland consists of two courts, the southernmost of which, constructed on a high perpendicular rock, retains one side of the wall enclosing it, with part of the semicircular end, the rest having fallen into the sea; the adjoining court includes the main entrance, approached by a narrow causeway, and the walls on the south and east are standing, but the north end has fallen down the slope, and there remains. On the summit of an eminence, a little distance to the west, are the ruins of the chapel of St. Julitta. On the east side of the island is another piece of walling. In 1245 David, Prince of Wales, took refuge in the castle when in rebellion against Edward I.; John de Northampton, or de Comberton (Cambs.), Lord Mayor of London in 1382–83, is said to have been imprisoned here in 1385; and Thomas (Beauchamp), fourth Earl of Warwick, K.G., was some time a captive in this fortress, on his removal from the Tower of London. The office of Constable of T. Castle was abolished in 1580, and after that date the ruins and precincts continued to be let on lease till 1844. In the upper portion of the rocky valley of Trevillet, in a romantic and thickly-wooded glen or combe, is St. Nectan's (or St. Knighton's) Kieve, a fine natural cascade, named from the "kieve" or basin into which the water falls; the total height of the fall, which is broken on its descent by intercepting rocks, is about 40 ft. On the top of the cliff are the ruins of a small building, said to have been a chapel. St. Nectan's Kieve is remarkable also as the traditional meeting-place of King Arthur's Knights of the Round Table, who went in quest of the "Holy Grail." The spot has received additional interest in recent times from the prominence given to it in novels by several popular authors.

Tintagou (= "Devil's Castle"), detached rock off west coast of Sark, Channel Islands, 7 E. by S. of St. Peter Port. T. is a massive rock on the south side of the Port du Moulin; its grand outline adds greatly to the beauty of the cliffs at this point on the coast.

Tintern (2), pa. on Bannow Bay, Shelburne bar., S. co. Wex., Ir., 12 E.S.E. of Waterford; ac. 6,863. In this pa. is T. Abbey, said to have been founded in 1200 by William Marescal the elder, Earl of Pembroke, who, having escaped a great tempest, in performance of a vow, built this abbey on the sea-shore, and endowed it and supplied it with monks of the Cistercian order from T., in Mon., and made John Torrell their abbot, whence it has been called the Lesser T. Part has been converted into a residence by the Colclough family, who have been settled here since the dissolution of monasteries. The old church of the abbey is still to be seen.

Tintern Abbey, pa. of Chapel Hill (q.v.), S.E. Mon., about 4 N. of Chepstow. The Cistercian abbey of T., situated in the bosom of lofty wooded hills on a bend of the Wye, was founded in 1131 by Walter de Clare, and colonised from L'Aumone. The extreme beauty of its position and its inherent picturesqueness have made it justly celebrated, but it is equally worthy of admiration for its architectural character, which belongs to a Transition between the E. Eng. and Dec. periods, and which for excellence of composition and delicacy of execution is rivalled by few similar structures in the kingdom. The church, begun in 1287, remains nearly complete, with the exception of the northern arcade of the nave, which is of six days. The choir proper consists of four bays with large aisles, but has no triforium; the fine east window is 69 ft. by 27 ft.; the ritual choir extended one bay westward from the crossing, where the rood-loft had a central door and lateral altars; the north wing of the transept retains the dormitory stairs, the cloister being on that side; in the south wing is the visitors' door; each wing had two chapels. Outside the western entrance was a transverse Galilee; on the east side of the cloister are the aumbry, the parlour and sacristy, the chapter-house with three alleys, the slype to the infirmary, the day stairs to the dormitory and the undercroft, and on the north side are the postern and river gate, with the abbot's lodge over, the buttery, the refectory with its pulpit and offices, and the kitchen. To the north-west, built over an undercroft, is the guest-house, and an arch of the water gate also remains; the whole length of the church is 245 ft. Edward II. once took refuge here. At the time of the suppression of the abbey there were thirteen monks. The revenues at the Dissolution are stated to have been £256 11s. 6d. yearly, which would probably represent at the present time an income little short of £4,000. After the Dissolution the site of the monastery was granted to the Earl of Worcester, with whose descendants it has remained until the present day.

Tintern Parva, pa. and vil. on the Wye, S.E. Mon., 6 N. of Chepstow; ac. 795; soil sandy, overlying Old Red Sandstone and mountain limestone. The church of St. Michael and All Angels (restored 1874) is E. Eng. There is a Roman camp and an ancient kiln, and in the vil. the base of an ancient cross. The Nurtons is a seat.

Tintinhull, pa. and vil., S. Somerset, 4½ N.W. of Yeovil; ac. 1,990; soil and subsoil clay. The church of St. Margaret (restored 1885) is E. Eng., and contains brasses to John Heth (d. 1464), John Stone (1416), and Thomas Nappier (1650). Gloves are manufactured. A fossil ichthyosaurus, 22 ft. long, has been dug up here.

Tintwhistle, eccl. pa., tp., and vil., pa. of Mottram in Longden Dale (q.v.), N.E. Chesh., 2½ N.E. of Mottram; ac. 14,410. Christ Church was built 1837 in E. Eng. style. Here are Congregational and Wesleyan chapels. The school has a small endowment. T. Hall, a seat, was rebuilt in 1653.

Tinwald, pa. on the Lochar Water and Ae Water, S. Dumfs., Sc., 4 N.E. of Dumfries; ac. 10,283; soil various, overlying silurian. Skipmyre, in this pa., was the birthplace in 1655 of William Paterson, the original projector of the Bank of England, founded in 1694, and in the same year he made public a scheme for the colonisation of the Isthmus of Darien, for the accomplishment of which a company was incorporated in 1695. Between 1698–99 three expeditions sailed to Darien from Scotland, but the scheme being opposed by the English and Dutch, and the colonists divided and reduced by quarrels, fever and famine, the project failed disastrously; the settlements were surrendered, March 30, 1700, to the Spaniards; Paterson returned before the arrival of the second expedition, and died, after great losses and sufferings, Jan. 22, 1719.

Tinwell, pa. and vil. on the Welland, E. Rutld., 10 S.E. of Oakham; ac. 1,711; soil and subsoil various. All Saints Church (repaired 1849) is Norm., and contains a monument to Elizabeth Cecil, sister of the first Lord Burleigh. There is an endowed school.

Tipalt Burn, stream, S.W. Northumb., rises on the moors, 5½ N.N.W. of Haltwhistle, and runs S.W. past Thirlwall Castle to Greenhead, and then E.S.E. to the South Tyne, which it joins about a mile above Haltwhistle. In the lower part of its course it flows through a rich tract of meadow-land.

Tipperary (1), an inland co. of the province of Munster, Ir., bounded on the east by King's and Queen's cos. and Kilkenny; on the south by co. Waterford; on the west by Cork, Limerick and Clare; and on the north it is bounded by Galway and a portion of King's co. Its length from north to south is 66 miles, and its greatest breadth is about 40. Its area comprises about 1,048,130 ac. of land, and 13,601 covered by water. The co. has on its north-west angle the large lough known as Derg, through which the Shannon flows. The borders of the co. are somewhat irregular, but it is virtually a parallelogram broken at the edges and narrowed at the north end. The west central portion (due west from Thurles) is occupied by a bold semicircle of lofty hills, of which the Keeper Hill (q.v.) forms a centre, their heights varying from 1,300 to 1,900 ft., the arc of the circle looking north-east. Throughout the east of the co. are hills varying from 750 to 2,500 ft., the principal being Slieve-na-Man, on the extreme south-east angle north of Carrick-on-Suir. The soil of the level portion is remarkably rich, especially the tract called "The Golden Vale," which is calcareous loam. In the bar. of Slievardagh copper and lead ores have been discovered in various dis., and coal is abundant; at Silvermines zinc in large quantities has been discovered, also excellent fireclay; and at Killaloe slates of a good quality are raised. The population is chiefly engaged in agriculture, the produce being principally corn. Large quantities of butter are exported, the dairies being numerous. The principal rivers are the Shannon, the Suir and Nore. The climate of the co. is mild and considered remarkably salubrious. The Great Southern and Western Railway, by which the capital communicates with T., enters the co. a little north-east of Templemore, whence it proceeds to Thurles, where it connects with the branch of the Waterford and Limerick Railway from Clonmel, and runs south-west to Limerick Junction, whence lines on the Waterford and Limerick run to Limerick and Waterford, the main line for Cork leaving the south boundary of the co. at Knocklong station. The co. is divided into ridings, which are sub-divided into twelve bars. The assizes and quarter sessions are held at Nenagh and Clonmel, and the latter also at Cashel, Roscrea, Thurles and T. The co. is included in the Cork military dis., and there are barrack stations at Nenagh, Roscrea, Templemore, Thurles, Caher, Bansha, Caher Castle, Carrick-on-Suir, Cashel, Clonmel, Fethard, and the to. of T. Prior to the Union, T. sent to the Irish Parliament two members for the co. and two each for the bors. of Cashel, Clonmel and Fethard. Under the "Redistribution of Seats Act, 1885," the co. has four divs. (East, Mid, North and South), each with one member. The title of Earl of T. is borne by the Duke of Cambridge.

Tipperary (2), pa. and ancient mkt. to. (TH. & S.), Clanwilliam bar., S.W. co. Tip., Ir., 27 S.E. of Limerick, on the main road to Waterford; ac. 4,362. It is a to. of great antiquity, and is said to have derived its name from "Tipra-Rae," signifying in the Irish language the "Well of the Plains," from its situation at the base of the Slievenamuck hills. The to., which is pleasantly seated on the Arra, consists of one principal street, from which several smaller ones branch off at right angles, and, being situated in the midst of the fertile tract known as the "Golden Vale," has corn, butter and other agricultural produce as its business staple; and there is a good trade for the supply of the populous and extensive surrounding district. The produce is chiefly purchased at the markets and sent for shipment to Waterford and Limerick. There are Protestant, Catholic, and Presbyterian churches. The Town Hall, in the market-place, is a handsome structure. T. is an important military station, and has extensive barracks containing all modern improvements, usually occupied by a battalion of regular infantry. The principal charities are two Free schools, ably conducted, and a dispensary. A chalybeate spring, which issues from the adjoining hills, is frequented, during the summer, for its reputed medicinal efficacy. Fairs are held on April 5, June 24, Oct. 10, and Dec. 10. There are also eight fairs, which are held on the second Tuesday in Jan., Feb., March, May, July, Aug., Sept., and Nov.

Tipton, pa. and to. within the parl. bor. of Wednesbury, S. Staffs., 1½ N. of Dudley; ac. 2,697; soil clayey, overlying clay. The form of the to. is nearly that of a circle, with a diameter of 2 miles, with pits and works interspersed; the pa. is intersected by about 10 miles of road. The church of St. Martin, situated on Horseley Heath, three-quarters of a mile from the to., is a plain modern building of brick; there are also several eccl. pas. with modern churches, and places of worship for various Nonconformist bodies. This place is noted for its extensive trade in iron, particularly heavy forgings and castings for home and foreign markets, also for the quantity of ironstone and coal which is found in the locality. The furnaces here are numerous and on a very extensive scale; heavy ironwork for railways, steam boilers, iron fenders, fireirons, charcoal box irons, sad irons, weights, hinges, large pit chains, cables and anchors, are manufactured here; and steam machinery is used to great advantage in rolling iron and converting it into almost every size and shape; galvanising is also largely carried on. There are cement works, fire and blue brick works and maltings. The trade is much facilitated by the Birmingham Canal, several of its branches intersecting the pa. and affording a means of communication with almost all the principal tos. in the kingdom. The charities amount to about £100 a year, and are applied to educational purposes and the purchase of bread for distribution to the poor.

Tipton St. John, eccl. pa. and vil. on the Otter, pa. of and 3 S. from Ottery St. Mary (q.v.). E. Dev. The church of St. John was built 1840 in E. Eng. style.

Tiptree Heath, eccl. pa. (formed from portions of six pas.) and vil., E. Essex, about 7 N.E. of Maldon. The church of St. Luke (built 1855) is a plain brick structure, and there is a Congregational chapel. The pa. has a small charity. A fair is held on July 25. Here are large fruit farms, and fruit is converted into preserves; there is also a brewery. A priory of Black Canons was founded here in the reign of Edward I.; it was one of the forty small monasteries granted to Cardinal Wolsey in 1523 for the endowment of his proposed colleges at Ipswich and Oxford, and was then valued at £22 16s. 4d., but it was forfeited on his attainder. T. Hall, now occupied as a farmhouse, was formerly the seat and well-known agricultural establishment of Mr. Mechi (1802-80); it comprised 128 ac. of poor soil, which by superior management and the use of machinery was made to yield abundant crops of all kinds.

The church of St. John the Baptist, supposed to have been built about 1226, is a fine old building of the E. Eng., Dec., and Perp. periods; the west porch has over it a parvise or priests' chamber; in the private vault are interred many of the former Lords Arundell of Wardour, and the helmet of the first lord of that name, who took the standard from the Turks at the Battle of Gran (1595), stands over his tomb. In the churchyard is an immense yew tree, measuring 30 ft. in circumference. Here are Wesleyan, Congregational, and Primitive Methodist chapels. There are charities amounting to about £161 yearly. A Public Hall was erected in 1887, and a new Police Station and Petty Sessions Hall in 1889. A large pile of buildings, formerly the residence of the Abbess of Shaftesbury, has for the last two centuries been occupied as a farmhouse. The 15th-cent. tithe barn still stands. T. has some excellent quarries of building stone.

Tissington, pa. and vil., W. Derbys., 4 N. of Ashbourne; ac. 2,300; soil mixed, overlying clay. The church of St. Mary is E. Norm.; the chancel is separated from the nave by a Norm. arch, and upon the north side is a lofty monument reaching nearly to the roof and divided into two compartments, the uppermost containing two figures kneeling over a tablet inscribed to Sir John Fitzherbert (1642), and the lower compartment two similar figures, also kneeling over a tablet to Francis Fitzherbert, Esq. (1619); there is also in the chancel a small brass to Robert Fitzherbert and his two wives (1545–95), with three shields of arms, and in the church are memorials of other members of the family; the south doorway is Norm., and has a tympanum with grotesque heads and other figures; the tower is also of that date, though E. Eng. buttresses have been added and the roof altered in the 13th cent.; the churchyard is undulating and contains the remains of an ancient churchyard cross. There is an educational charity of £5 a year, and a sum of £16 yearly for distribution. The vil. is situated in the midst of charming rustic scenery, and near it, on the road to Dovedale, are the lofty limestone crags known as T. Spires. T. is remarkable for its perpetuation of an ancient rural custom called "well-flowering," or "well-dressing"; the festivities take place on Holy Thursday, when the wells from which the inhabitants are supplied with water are decorated with flowers, disposed in elegant and fanciful devices; the vil. is thronged during the day with visitors, and at a time arranged a procession is formed and a special service held at the church. T. was the scene of a severe contest between the Royalist and Parliamentary forces during the Civil Wars. T. Hall, a fine Elizabethan mansion close to the vil., and approached by a mile-long avenue, is a seat.

Tisted, East, pa. and vil., E. Hants, 4½ S.W. of Alton; ac. 2,648; soil clay, overlying chalk, and gravel in the valleys. The church of St. James (largely rebuilt 1846) is in Gothic style and contains various monuments. Almshouses for age couples were erected in 1879 and 1893. Abou one mile S.W. of the vil. are several embankments, Earl of Southampton, chancellor to Henry VIII., buried in 1550; the principal entrance to the church is by an ancient Norm. doorway; the west wall of the nave is decorated with sgraffito work in memory of the late vicar, Rev. W. M. Cosser; the chancel arch has a painting of the Crucifixion. Here are Congregational and Brethren chapels. There are some charities, including one for the education of twelve children. T. Common has been enclosed and extensively built on; it is chiefly cottage property, occupied for the cultivation of strawberries, which forms a special industry here, a large quantity being forwarded to London and other markets. There is a tan yard and a brewery. Fairs are held on May 14 and Sept. 25. Near the to. are the ruins of T. House, a mansion erected on the site of an abbey, in ancient records called "Tychfelle Abbey," built in 1232; at the dissolution of the monasteries, in the reign of Henry VIII., the Chancellor Wriothesley obtained from his royal master the abbey and the land pertaining thereto; with the materials he built for himself a "righte goodlye house, embattled"; in this mansion Charles I. found shelter when pursued by Cromwell and his party, and from it he was taken as a prisoner by Colonel Hammond in 1647. St. Margaret's and West Hill are seats.

Titchmarsh, or Tichmarsh, pa. and vil. on the Nene, N.E. Northants, 2 E. of Thrapston; ac. 4,480; soil clay, sand and gravel, overlying clay, sand and rock. The church of St. Mary the Virgin is E. Eng., Dec. and Perp., with traces of Norm. work; there is a fine Perp. western tower; in the church are monuments to the Pickering and Creed families, including Theophilus Pickering, D.D., 1710; Sir John Pickering, Bart. (d. 1703); Sir Gilbert Pickering, Bart. (d. 1735); Sir Edward Pickering, Bart. (d. 1749); and others of this family, from 1703 to 1766; John Creed, 1701; Col. John Creed, 1751, and others of the same name; a memorial to Erasmus Dryden, Esq. (d. 1722), and Mary (Pickering), his wife. There is a Wesleyan chapel and a Meeting House for Baptists. There are eight almshouses, erected in 1756, and endowed by the Pickering family with property now producing £175 yearly; two others were erected by a donation of the late Thomas Coales, Esq., and two by a bequest of the late T. Knight, Esq.; the total income is £280 yearly; there is besides the Pickering charity of £48 yearly and the Knight charity of £33 yearly, for the poor of this pa.; the interest of £500 used for the benefit of the sick and aged poor of the pa. In the rectory grounds is a huge cedar tree, supposed to be about 270 years old; it is 70 ft. in height, and some of the branches extend to a distance of 90 ft.

Titchwell, pa. and vil., N.W. Norf., 21 N.W. of Lynn, on the coast road to Wells; ac. 1,452 and 175 water. The soil on the upper side of the pa. of a light chalky nature, and strong, bordering on the coast, overlying chalk. The church of St. Mary is Perp., with a round Norm. tower at the west end with short spire of wood covered with lead. There are charities of about £11 yearly value, and 8½ ac. of land called church land, left for repairing and beautifying the church. At the east end of the vil. is the shaft of an ancient cross supposed to have been a station on the way to Walsingham Abbey. In 1786 about 300 ac. of salt marsh were gained from the sea by embankment.

Tittensor, eccl. pa. and vil., pa. of and 3½ N.W. from Stone (q.v.), W. Staffs. The church of St. Luke is in Gothic style. The ruins of an ancient manor-house stand near the church. T. Chase is a seat.

Titterstone Clee Hill, eminence (1,754 ft.), S.E. Salop, 5 W. by N. of Cleobury Mortimer. The geological formation of the hill is remarkable, a layer of coal occurring near the summit, and above it one of hard basalt. The coal is mined, shafts being sunk through the basalt. The hill is crowned by an ancient camp surrounded by an agger; it encloses a space 560 yds. long and ½ mile wide.

Tittesworth, tp., pa. of Leek (q.v.), N. Staffs.; ac. 1,624 and 35 water. It forms part of the to. of Leek, of which it is a suburb.

Tittleshall, pa. and vil., Mid Norf., 6 S. by W. of Fakenham; ac. 3,364; soil light loam and clay, overlying clay. The church of St. Mary is an ancient edifice of flint; in the chancel are several monuments to the Coke family, ancestors of the Earl of Leicester; on the left of the communion table is a monument of black and white marble, with life-size recumbent effigy of Sir Edward Coke, Lord Chief Justice of the King's Bench (d. 1634), and behind this a monument, with effigies of herself and eight children, to Bridget (Paston) his first wife (d. 1598); on the opposite side is a handsome monument to Sir Thomas Coke, K.B., of Holkham, first Earl of Leicester of that family (d. 1759), and to his only son Edward, Viscount Coke (d. 1753). There are Primitive Methodist and Baptist chapels. A sum of £16, the rent of 40 ac., is distributed in coals. A subscription library and reading-room was established in 1863.

Tiverton (1) (i.e. Twy-ford-town), mun. bor., pa. and mkt. to., and head of U. and Co. Co. dis., N. Dev., 14 N. of Exeter; ac. of pa. and bor. 17,650. The to. is about a mile in length, the chief portion being situated on elevated ground on the left bank of the Exe; a steep descent leads to the bridge, connecting T. proper with the lower to., denominated "West Exe." There are four principal streets, which are wide, and occupied by good houses and handsome shops. In the year 1615 a charter of incorporation was granted to the inhabitants of T. by James I. From the date of its incorporation the to. became a parl. bor., with two members, but the bor. was merged in the T. division in 1885. The church of St. Peter was originally a chapel, erected in 1073 on the site of the present chancel; the existing church (restored 1853–56) is of Perp. date. The most ancient portion of the building is the Norm. doorway on the north side; the columns of the arcades and the south wall were rebuilt on the erection of Greenway's chapel, in 1517, by John Greenway, merchant; this is a structure of Late but elaborate Perp. work; on the floor of the chapel are brass effigies of John Greenway and Joan, his wife, with a shield of arms of the Merchant Adventurers, and the words "Pray for the soul of John Greenway," but the other shields, inscription and labels are now missing; the Courtenay chapel, erected by Henry Courtenay, Marquess of Exeter, to contain the remains of his father and mother, Sir W. Courtenay, K.B. (d. 1511), and the Princess Katherine, his wife (d. 1527), was destroyed during the civil war, when the church was held by the Royalists as a military position; within it was an altar tomb with a recumbent effigy of the princess, and another and magnificent tomb, with effigies in alabaster, richly gilt, to Edward, third Earl of Devon ("the blind earl"), who died at T. Castle 1419. In the church are many ancient tombs and mural monuments. T. has also eccl. pas. with modern churches, a Catholic chapel, and places of worship for various Nonconformist bodies. The Free Grammar School was founded by Peter Blundell in 1604; new buildings have been erected, and in 1876 a new scheme was adopted. The Bluecoat charity (Middle Boys and Middle Girls' School) was established in 1714. The School of Science and Art is in Fore Street, over the entrance to the market-place. The Town Hall (1864) is in the Renaissance style, with frontages in Fore Street and St. Andrew's Street; the ground floor contains the county court, borough surveyor's and other offices, and committee, magistrates', and waiting rooms; on the first floor is a public hall, fitted up as a court of justice and council chamber. In the hall are portraits of the first three Georges, of Viscount Palmerston, K.G., G.C.B., etc. (M.P. for T. 1835–65), and others. The drill and public hall (1884) comprises a drill hall, armoury, and house for the sergeant-instructor, and a public hall. The Borough police station is a substantial modern building. The market house, in the centre of the to., is a light covered building, with good approaches from all sides; Tuesday is the principal market day, and Saturday is a small market; there are two fairs for cattle, horses, and sheep on the first Thursdays in June and October; there are great markets for cattle on the second and last Tuesdays in each month. T. was formerly noted for its woollen manufactures, but that trade, which sprung up here in the 14th cent. and continued to prosper through many years, fell into decay towards the close of the 17th cent., and has now become extinct. The principal manufacture now carried on is that of lace; here is the largest factory in the West of England, employing about 1,000 hands. There are breweries and flour mills. There are several groups of almshouses, and some of the original buildings still remain. The income of these almshouses and of the charities distributed in bread and clothing exceeds £1,100 a year. The People's Park, formed in commemoration of Queen Victoria's Jubilee (1887), is a little over 6 ac. in extent. T. Castle, on the left bank of the Exe, and immediately adjoining the north side of St. Peter's Church, is now used for the purposes of a farm and a private residence; it is supposed to have been built about 1106 by Richard de Redvers, first Earl of Devon of that family, and continued to be the chief residence of the families of Redvers and their successors, the Courtenays, until the
